Owing to illness it was found necessary to alter the programme of the Chamber Concert given at the Royal College on Thursday evening, Nov. 29, and omit the Brahms Quartet and the Beethoven Violin Sonata and Trio; therefore the concert commenced with Mendelssohn's Variations for Violoncello and Piano, in D major, Op. 17, skilfully performed by Miss Winifred Burgess and Miss Marjorie Adams. In two songs, "By the hearth fire" and "Resurrection," by G. Henschel, Mr. John R. Prout was heard to much advantage; and Miss May Harrison was much applauded in Bach's violin solo, "Chaconne." Lotti's now seldom heard song, "Pur Dicesti" enabled Miss May Peach to display a pure and well-trained voice; and Miss Ellen Edwards in her piano solos of Chopin's Preludes, Nos. 23, 7, 10, 21, 3, 14, and 16, played with a delicate touch and good expression, and Liszt's "Faux Follets," gained a most hearty recall from the large audience. Brahms' songs, "Gestillte Sehnsucht" and "Geistliches Wiegenlied" were hardly the kind of music adapted to student requirements, but Miss Bessie Bowness sang them with a fair amount of success, being greatly assisted by the viola accompaniment admirably played by Mr. Frank Bridge. The concert concluded with an organ solo, Variations on Ground Bass, Liszt ("Weinen Klagen" and "Crucifixus," from B minor Mass of Bach), cleverly played by Mr. Herbert Smith. The accompanists were Miss Marjorie Adam and Mr. William Murdoch.

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Play, by Wilkie Collins, entitled
"THE NEW MAGDALEN."

A welcome change is presented here this week; thanks to the enterprise of the directorate we have been afforded the opportunity of seeing Miss Edith Wynne Matthison and a West End company in The New Magdalen. Large and enthusiastic audiences have assembled throughout the week, and have given unmistakable evidence of their appreciation of the interpretation rendered by the excellent company. As Mercy Merrick, Miss Edith Wynne Matthison enters thoroughly into the spirit of the part which "fits her like a glove." From the outset Miss Matthison creates a most favourable impression, and as the play proceeds, and the confession is made, the feeling becomes one of great admiration. She was called again and again during the evening, the applause at the final fall of the curtain being of a most spontaneous character. The next most striking figure in the play is Mr. Ernest E. Norris's sound piece of work as the Radical parson, a man whose character is marked by great energy and decision. In the difficult part of Grace Roseberry, Miss Daisy Murch scores heavily, and Lady Janet Roy is most ably and agreeably impersonated by Miss Phyllis Manners. Mr. Walner Gregory as Horace Holmcroft gives a performance of much individual worth; Messrs. F. L. Laurence, James Storey, Lloyd Townrow, Francis Day, James Penryhn, and Thomas Ashley capably fill less important parts. The play is excellently mounted, and the incidental music is done justice to by the Marlborough Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Charles Elcock. The curtain-raiser is a new one-act farcical play by Richard Clarke, entitled A Matrimonial Advertisement, and the characters are all equally well interpreted; judging by the applause, the piece was well suited to the taste of those in front.

THE CORONET.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Comic Opera, by André Messager, entitled
"THE LITTLE MICHUS."

Mr. George Edwardes' excellent company is appearing this week in the charming and whimsical The Little Michus, which scored such a notable success at Daly's. There are some delightful melodies in quite André Messager's best style, the plot is clever and coherent, and strewed with the roses of romance, and the fun waxes fast and furious whenever General Des Ifs looms in sight. Mr. Eric Thorne has the reversion of the part of this fine old warrior, General Des Ifs, from Mr. George Graves, and ably he acquits himself in the rôle. The house is kept in one long continuous roar of laughter throughout the second act, when the General gives us a glimpse of his past, and discourses of many things, including the gazeka, all in the most natural and droll fashion imaginable. If Mr. George Graves had not been so unapproachable in the part, we should have dreamed Mr. Eric Thorne's assumption to be the best possible. Mr. W. Talleur Andrews creates an excellent impression as the dashing young officer, Gaston Rigaud, and he has a remarkably good voice, his rendition of "It's no use crying for the moon" being a genuine vocal treat. Mr. Leonard Mackay is well known as a capital exponent of comic opera heroes, and besides a fine voice, which is heard to great advantage in "My heart's a weather glass," he possesses a keen yet quiet sense of humour. A pair of delightful exponents of the two Little Michus are furnished in the dainty shapes of Miss Iris Hoey, as the shy, sensitive, and self-sacrificing Blanche Marie, and Miss Thelma Raye as the more madcap and unconventional Marie Blanche. Miss Raye has a very taking song, "I'd like to be a grand lady," and she plays her own accompaniment on the violin while she sings Braga's Serenata, thus proving the possession of great talent and versatility. Mr. Jack Cannot enters thoroughly into the spirit of the part of Bagnolet, and plays the part con amore. His singing and dancing are most acceptable, "The regiment of frocks and frills" being one of his most successful vocal efforts. Miss Florence Parfrey contributes a clever and characteristic sketch of the general dealer's wife, Madame Michu, and Mr. George Miller is vastly amusing as the old slow-coach, Père Michu. Miss Nora Brocklebank, as Mme. du Teste, sings very sweetly in the second act, and great praise is due to Miss Vivien Tailleur, whose lissom dancing and graceful gyrations are quite above the average of such calisthenic displays. Mr. Willie Warde, jun., provokes considerable amusement with a few deft touches as an old market man, and Miss Alice Oppitz as Mlle. Herpin, and Adeline Lester as an old market woman, do good work. Mr. Kevan Bernard is assistant acting-manager, Mr. Fred Storrie stage-manager, whilst the piece is produced under the direction of Mr. J. A. E. Malone, and the dances and chorus business are arranged by Mr. Willie Warde. A new heating apparatus has been installed at this theatre, of which Mr. Edward Lytton is justly proud.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, by Walter Howard, entitled
"TWO LITTLE SAILOR BOYS."

Mr. J. M. East has done well in booking Mr. W. H. Hallatt's company in Two Little Sailor Boys. This play, which is well handled by a capable cast, is a melodrama in the strictest sense of the term, and the strong dramatic interest, combined with a deal of comedy, proved much to the taste of Monday's audience. The two little sailor boys find excellent representatives in Miss May Day as Cyril Grey and Miss Ethel Frances Greene as Tom Yorke. The latter moves the whole house to tears when appealing to his mother for her love. Mr. Jerrold Heather proves an excellent lead as Commander Tregarthen, acting with commendable ease and self-restraint; Mr. Horace Booth as Lieut. Richard Redstone, R.N., portrays a calculating villain with just sufficient coolness of manner; Mr. W. H. Hallatt ably represents Captain Tom Yorke; Mr. J. Court Harvard as the old Admiral Grey, retired, is effective; Mr. Osca Power as Jack Jolly, A.B., and Mr. Tom E. Sinclair as Ben Baxter indulge in some really good humorous acting; in this they are very ably assisted by Miss Lizzie Chambers as a pert domestic, Lucy Wilson; Mr. Ambrose Horton gives a good character-sketch as Jim Royston, a burglar; Miss Alice De Foe s Mildrey Grey invests the part with a deal of gentleness and grace, and makes a charming heroine; Miss Blanche Steele plays the adventuress, Lola Grey, realistically, and suggests with unerring effect the vindictive nature of the character. Mr. George Drew as Inspector Johnson, Mr. Frank Greyson as Thompson, Mr. Albert Newton as Barker, Mr. Ernest Brunton as Blinker, and Miss Dorothy Lennox as Mary Primrose all do good work.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, by Fred Melville, entitled
"BETWEEN TWO WOMEN."

The popular manager at this theatre, Mr. Cecil Paget, with his usual perspicuity believes in varying his weekly menu, so after light comedy we are served with full-blooded and vigorous melodrama, dear to the hearts of popular audiences, in the shape of Mr. Fred Melville's play Between Two Women. Like all Mr. Melville's work, the piece is a skilful exhibition of stagecraft, and tragic incidents are well intermingled with diverting comic episodes. Mr. Fred Melville's company admirably interprets the play, which wins complete acceptance from crowded houses. The central figure of the piece, the remorse-stricken, self-sacrificing young clergyman, Philip Carton, is most impressively played by Mr. Godfrey Tearle, who thoroughly looks the part. Mr. Tearle's death scene is particularly well rendered. Mr. Fred Goddard gives us some fine and vigorous declamation as the Earl of Millard; Mr. Howard Travis is duly impulsive and boyish as the vacillating Henry Millard; Miss Molly Molone acts with tenderness and feeling as Violet Thornton, the good angel of the play, and the dissolute Carmen de Savareux is admirably played by Miss Nellie Fletcher, who well indicates the one redeeming feature in the woman's character, namely her love for her blind boy. Miss Lulu Bowes beguiles many of their tears as the little blind waif; Mr. Walter Thornton is excellent as the polished villain, James Durward, to whose partner in crime, Major Strangeways, full justice is done by Mr. Roland Yorke. Mr. Fred Danvers is a humorous Jack Pringle, and he is well played up to by Miss Lilian Earle as Polly Popp. Mr. Frederick May is particularly good as the besotted Dick Burgess, and Miss Florence Hamilton makes a good deal of the small part of the lady customer. The scenery is first-class, several of the sets being capital examples of skilful brushwork.

KENNINGTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Play, by Alfred Sutro, entitled
"THE WALLS OF JERICHO."

Mr. Arthur Bourchier could not have wished for a better reception than was accorded him and his company from the Garrick Theatre when they visited South London on Monday, and opened a week's engagement at the Kennington Theatre in The Walls of Jericho. The play is one of Mr. Sutro's best, and the vivid picture he draws of the wasted lives of those who move in the smart set of the West-end appealed to the sympathies of a suburban audience. The piece is beautifully mounted, and the dresses worn by the ladies in the first and second acts especially are quite triumphs of the costumier's art. Mr. Arthur Bourchier, as Jack Frobisher, the successful Colonial who has entered the smart set and found his surroundings thoroughly unwholesome, and Miss Violet Vanbrugh, as his wife, who has delighted in the butterfly existence, divide the honours of the production. Mr. Bourchier gives a wonderful study of the part, for it is one which affords full scope to his remarkable histrionic gifts, and he makes a profound impression by the way in which he handles the dramatic situations which arise in the third and fourth acts. Miss Violet Vanbrugh's impersonation of Lady Alathea Frobisher is faultless. First as the frivolous woman constantly deprecating her husband, then as the wife suddenly awakened to the fact that she really loves him, later as the indignant rebel, and finally as the loving help-mate fully conscious of her duties, she is superb. It is a difficult part, but she is more than equal to it. Miss Pamela Gaythorne, as Lady Lucy Derenham, the girlish and impulsive younger sister, is exceedingly clever, acting with a graceful freedom which is quite fascinating. As Hankey Bannister, Mr. Charles Goodhart is a characteristic rough diamond, and speedily becomes a warm favourite with the audience. Mr. Arthur Whitby gives a faithful interpretation of the rôle of the Marquis of Steventon, the impecunious aristocrat; and Mr. H. M. Chart's Harry Dallas leaves little to be desired. As Lady Westerby, Miss Nora Greenham is seen to advantage; whilst Miss Jean Harkness makes a lively Miss Mornington, the bridge-playing daughter of a Bishop. Mr. Walter Pearce as Bertram Hannaford, Mr. Douglas Imbert as Lord Drayton, and Mr. Alfred Bristowe as the Hon. Wilfred Renton ably sustain their respective parts. Miss Olive Terry, who appears as Miss Wyatt, does the cake-walk with a great deal of vivacity; while Mrs. Nye Chart (the Duchess of Skye) and Miss Vivienne Whitaker (Lady Parchester) are both admirable. The minor characters are well taken and sustained.

THE PAVILION.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Operetta, in Four Acts, entitled
"HAMAN THE SECOND."

The Jewish Operatic and Dramatic Company opened the week at the Pavilion with the well-known Yiddish operetta Haman the Second, which was well mounted and dressed, and had evidently been well rehearsed. Although the story is singularly reminiscent, and the music not particularly brilliant, yet the entire performance went with a swing that fairly exhilarated the audience, who were most appreciative. Professor F. Staub is to be highly commended for his conductorship of a really smart orchestra, who render with praiseworthy care the various numbers, while the strong chorus vocally work well, although there is still wanting the attention to "business," which is so necessary in productions of this kind. As the Minister Clemens (Haman the Second), Mr. J. Fineberg acted in his usual deliberate and incisive manner; and Mr. M. Gusofsky, with his fine voice, sang most tastefully and portrayed with vigour the part of Jacob; while efficient support was accorded by Mr. N. Hamburger as Rabi Avigdor. Madame J. Kayzer delighted the audience with her admirable impersonation of Rachel; and Madame Goldstein showed a great command of pathos as the Queen, while the majestic bearing and the capital acting of Mr. N. Isaacowitch as the King won general admiration. Mr. S. Schilling gave a humorous rendering of Schylock, which elicited much merriment, and Miss Bryh, who is a clever and vivacious artist, personated Scheindele most naturally. A strong character sketch of the convert Osip was provided by Mr. J. Goldsmith, and Mr. J. Scherman was successful in the small part of Yeakim. During the week Deborah, David's Violin, Thirty Years under the Earth, Anna the Finisher, and The Mother's Favourite have been played.

THE GRAND, FULHAM.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Romantic Play, in Four Acts, by Paul Kester and Charles Major,
"DOROTHY O' THE HALL."

Fulham playgoers have been enjoying a special treat in the shape of a visit of Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry, with their full West-end company. The play is full of life and action: it deals with the romantic love affair of Dorothy Vernon, of Haddon Hall, and is ingeniously constructed to bring in personages of no less importance than Queen Elizabeth and Mary Queen of Scots. Miss Julia Neilson plays the title-rôle, the romantic and daring Dorothy. It is not an easy part, this impersonation of a young and frolicsome maiden, but as the actress warms to her work she plays with all her wonted charm and power and skill, while the authors have provided numerous opportunities for her to display her gift of sly humour and quick repartee. Nor is she less at home in the grand manner, and in her duel with Sir Malcolm she was splendidly active and resolute. Needless to say, she finds a fitting mate in Mr. Fred Terry as Sir John Manners, who is the most delightful of romantic lovers, and bears himself most gallantly throughout. Mr. Horace Hodges is to be congratulated on a very clever piece of acting as Perkin, the dwarf, a performance pitched in just the right key. The representatives of the two Queens also were good. Miss Miriam Lewes was a lifelike representative of Queen Elizabeth, and portrayed the character of that astute and imperious person with much success, and Miss Lillias Waldegrave was successful in showing the personal charm of the luckless Mary. Mr. Fred Groves and Mr. D. J. Williams were properly stately as the Earl of Rutland and Lord Burleigh respectively, and Mr. J. Carter Edwards did well as the peppery Sir George Vernon. Miss Claire Pauncefort was good in the comedy part of Lady Vernon, and Miss Mary Mackenzie was bright as the maid Jenny, whilst Mr. Jerrold Robertshaw showed plenty of spirit and power as Sir Malcolm Vernon. In fact, all the minor parts were adequately filled, and the whole play went excellently from beginning to end.

GRAND, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, Dec. 3, the Drama,
"THE FACE AT THE WINDOW."

The attraction here this week has been Messrs. Armadale and Warren's company in the above-mentioned drama, and the long struggle between the criminal and the detective that forms the main theme of the play has been followed with keen interest by highly appreciative audiences. Mr. Lionel d'Aragon submits a realistic and impressive rendering of Lucio Delgado, seeming really to revel in the portrayal of the latter's heartless and ferocious villainy, and speaking his lines with a fierce intenseness that makes every word redolent of the most appalling wickedness. Mr. d'Aragon easily secures the effect on his audience that he seeks, and, indeed, so works upon the feelings of the "gods" that, towards the end of the evening, his every entrance is the signal for a storm of hisses. Another excellent impersonation is the Paul Gouffet of Mr. T. W. Dunscombe, whose characterisation of this French Sherlock Holmes is perfect in every detail. The detective's alertness, his agility, both of mind and body, and his grim determination to run his enemy to earth at whatever cost to himself are portrayed with great skill, while at the same time the many chances for over-exaggerating the character are carefully avoided. Mr. Malcome Wills plays Lucien Courtier is an easy, natural style, and with a good deal of reserve force. Miss Eugene Magnus gives a sympathetic rendering of Marie de Brisson, acting with power and conviction; Miss Marie Tennant is well suited as La Pinau, and invests the part with considerable distinction; and Miss M. Leslie Cudd gets a lot of amusement out of the rôle of Babette. As Peter Pottleberry Mr. C. Alan Hineson is responsible for much hearty laughter, and his sayings and doings are followed with much interest. Mr. George Pythian makes the small part of the Mad Doctor stand out prominently, and Mr. F. C. Raphael is an efficient Jean Barbelou. The play is well mounted, and the painting of some of the scenery is unusually good.

DALSTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Dec. 3, the Play entitled,
"THE UGLIEST WOMAN ON EARTH."

The attraction at the Dalston Theatre this week is Mr. Frederick Melville's play, The Ugliest Woman on Earth. The average Dalstonian appears to be very anxious to make the acquaintance of this lady, and consequently, to the delight of the management, the house is being filled nightly. To Miss Beatrice Homer falls the lot of depicting the title-rôle. To her credit be it said that she succeeds in imbuing this weird personage with an amount of vitality which makes the part one more than usually interesting. Miss Margaret Watson appears to advantage as Morita an Italian girl; Miss Nellie Jackson does well as Aggie Brown, and Miss Nell Oliver is well placed as Rose Courtenay. Jack Merriman, one of the jolliest characters in the play, finds a manly representative in Mr. Philip Darien. Mr. Leyton Cancellor, as Hubert Gold, does much to sustain the interest of the play; and he is well assisted by Mr. Charles Barrett as Antonio Luchesi, and Mr. Allan Davenport as Tom Redvers.

GRAND THEATRE, ISLINGTON.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, in Four Acts,
by Arthur Shirley and Sutton Vane, entitled
"THE SPIDER AND THE FLY."

This highly sensational drama forms the current attraction at this theatre for the week, Messrs. Carpenter and Cooper's company presenting it. Messrs. Shirley and Vane are two experienced hands at melodrama, and the result of their collaboration is a production that adequately fulfils the demands of popular audiences. The company is an excellent all-round one, and work very hard for the general success. Mr. Stanley S. Gordon as Cyril Girdlestone acts with force, and makes a good impression; Mr. Ellis J. Preston, as his brother Welby, enacts the rôle in the conventional manner, and gives a good account of himself. Mr. Frederick Ross, as Davis Strong, submits a clever and valuable performance that wins general appreciation. Messrs. Fred Terris and Charles A. Preece, as the Brothers Roc, add not a little to the gaiety of the evening, finding in Miss Lucy Murray, as Molly Blake, a valuable ally. Mr. H. C. Lanesby presents a neat little character-study as the Rev. Mr. McAllister. Miss Nina Naughton gives an exceptionally good performance of Edith McAllister, particularly so in the last act; Miss Amy Venimore, as "The Spider," is sufficiently repellent in her portrayal; Miss Ada Palmer, as Jane Ellen Scriven, is good; and Miss Marjorie May, as Flipps, deserves commendation. The drama is well mounted, the big scene in the last act causing a sensation, and a good house gave the production a cordial reception. Mr. Gliddon, the musical director, and his orchestra still add to the pleasure of the evening with an excellent programme of music.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, in a Prologue and Four Acts, by J. A. Campbell, entitled
"THE SIN OF HER CHILDHOOD."

There are several strong points and interesting situations in this play of Mr. Campbell's which should ensure it a hearty reception everywhere. As Stephen Haysel Mr. Austin Milroy gives a forcible portrayal full of merit and distinction; Mr. Charles Fancourt is decidedly good and well suited as the Rev. Alan Grey; Mr. Wordley Hulse cuts a capital figure as Capt. John Thornton; and Mr. Hugh Brady is full of genuine Hibernian wit and vitality as rollicking Barney O'Reilly. Miss Jennie Douglas-Hicks sustains the rôle of Maria Haysel in lifelike, telling fashion; Miss Nellie Hook is versatility itself as Eliza Muggins; little Ivy Rocheforte plays intelligently as Eric Dugdale; little Dott Moss is pleasing and sprightly as Hannah Spry, her singing, dancing, and banjo solos being quite the hit of the piece; whilst Miss Mary Fulton's impersonation of Mary Haysel is one of merit and carefully-thought-out effect. The play is mounted and staged in good style, Mr. Wordley Hulse being the acting and Mr. Walle Spinner the stage-manager for Mr. J. A. Campbell.

NEW PRINCE'S THEATRE, POPLAR.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Musical Play, entitled
"THE BELLE OF NEW YORK."

The Belle of New York, with its melodious music, is attracting large and enthusiastic audiences at the Prince's Theatre this week. Mr. Geo. Musgrove's principal company all work with a will. Miss Empsie Bowman in the title-rôle gained hearty applause, especially for her admirable rendering of the "Follow on" song. She plays the part with great charm. Miss Lily Maxwell as Fifi is distinctly chic, and does exceedingly well in her duets with Harry Bronson. As Mamie Clancy, Miss Florence Hensel is capital. Her dancing is wonderful, and she quickly wins the favour of her audience by her archness and coquetry. Miss Winnie Browne makes a stately and imposing Cora Angelique, and looks and acts well. As Ichabod Bronson, Mr. Paddy Dupres extracts every bit of fun and satire there is in the part, and earns many plaudits for his efforts. Mr. John Doran as Harry Bronson could scarcely be bettered. He acts with perfect ease, and sustains the part in a breezy and hearty manner. Mr. Max Copeland is one of the best Karl von Pimpernicks we have seen. He makes a wonderful character-study of the demented German, and profoundly impressed his audience. Mr. Frank Lawton still charms everybody with his clever whistling as Blinky Bill; and Mr. Walter Uridge as Kenneth Muff cuts a comical figure. As the twin Counts Rattattoo, Mr. Lionel Yeoman and Mr. R. L. Cody afford much amusement. Mr. Alfred Sandoe as Dock Snifkins does good service; and Mr. A. Linforth as Twiddler deserves commendation. As Mr. Snopper, Mr. Owen O'Brien is capital; and Mr. Tounsley Searle as Mr. Peeper makes an able photographer. Smaller parts are all well cast, and the mounting of the play leaves nothing to be desired. The chorus and orchestra, under the able leadership of Mr. Ernee Woodville, all do excellent work.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

On Monday, Dec. 3, the American Musical Play,
entitled,
"THE PRINCE OF PILSEN."

This typically American production, with its dramatis personæ of over sixty named characters, is played to the accompaniment of hearty laughter and unstinted applause. Mr. J. B. Fox in the title-rôle made an imposing figure, also singing well; Hans Wagner, the Cincinnati brewer and soi-disant Prince, was quite safe in the experienced hands of Mr. Martin Adeson, whose unctuous humour kept the house amused; as Lieut. Tom Wagner, Mr. G. Villiers Arnold sang with taste, and Mr. Lawrence was quite the stage peer, as the Earl of Shrimpton. A more agile François than Mr. Alfred Selby it would be difficult to imagine, and Miss Meg Hamylton as Jimmie, the bell boy, was fresh and smart. Miss Isa Bowman's experience stood her in good stead as Nellie Wagner, and Miss Nellie Barnwell sang and danced well as Edith Adams, the Vassar girl. The French maid, Sidonie, as played by Miss Nell Emerald, was quite a feature of the piece, with her irresponsible patter. Miss Maisie Ellinger was in good voice as Mrs. Madison Crocker, the New York widow, and the American girls, nine in number, as introduced by her in song, were all smart. The Heidelberg boys, companions of the Prince of Pilsen, were possessed of trained and tuneful voices, which were heard to advantage in concerted pieces. Mr. D. O. Uglas, as Sergeant Brie, the chief of the gendarmes, was responsible for some amusing by-play; and a perfect galaxy of Sea Shell Girls and Bathing Girls, not to mention Hunting Girls, filled in the background tastefully. The choruses throughout were rendered with more than ordinary care and finish, due, no doubt, to the attention paid to them by Mr. Tunbridge, Mus. Bac. Oxon., the musical director. Altogether Mr. Musgrove's company was another success for Mr. J. Bannister Howard.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Dec. 3, the Drama,
entitled
"BEN-MY CHREE."

Mr. Arnold Bell and company are fulfilling a week's engagement at the Stratford Theatre Royal with Ben-my-Chree, and the piece is being very cordially received. Mr. Arnold Bell contributes a powerful performance as Dan Mylrea, and his acting is always convincing and natural. Mr. Guy Morville handles the part of Ewan Mylrea very skilfully; and Mr. F. Carlyle plays Thorkell Mylrea on most appropriate lines. Mr. H. W. Clifford makes an impressive Gilchrist Mylrea; and Mr. Cuthbert Imrie admirably enacts Mr. Harcourt. Mr. F. C. Robson makes the most of his opportunities as Davy Fayle; and Mr. Herbert Fuller is well placed as Hommey-beg. Miss Marion Forrester makes a sympathetic and charming Mona Mylrea, and renders the character exceedingly popular. Miss Violet Campbell does well as Kitty, and Miss Lilian Vyner is an excellent Kerry. Other parts receive careful treatment.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, in Five Acts, by G. Carlton Wallace,
entitled
"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH."

The Village Blacksmith has again erected his smithy at the Shakespeare Theatre, and with pleasant recollections of his last visit large crowds have attended each performance this week, and testified their keen appreciation of the play by unstinted applause.

Exceedingly well written, it is a play that appeals strongly to the hearts of the audience, and the wrestling match in the last scene is a fitting climax to a series of thrilling human incidents.

Mr. Sam Livesey, with his fine physique, is well suited to the rôle of John Strong, the blacksmith, and the earnest and convincing force of his acting makes a deep impression. He is at his best in the first scene of Act IV., when he holds the audience spellbound with his impersonation of a man driven half mad with privation and drugs. He is well supported by Mr. Joseph Carter, who repeats his former success in the difficult and exacting part of the villainous Captain Leo. As Kate Strong, Miss Maggie Edwards has a thorough grip of her character, and by her tender womanliness quickly gains the sympathy of the audience. Little Miss Bertha Hanbury acts the part of the child "Harry Strong" with considerable self-possession and renders her lines with praiseworthy distinctness. Most of the humour of the piece falls on the shoulders of Mr. G. V. Campbell, who as Billy Twig, a country boy, keeps the audience well amused, and fully deserves the applause with which he is repeatedly greeted. Capital character-sketches of the travelling tinker, Jeremiah Parkins, and his wife, Sal Parkins, are contributed by Mr. Thos. E. Marshall and Mrs. T. C. Livesey respectively, and Miss Cassie Le Grande is satisfactory as Ruth Parkins. Mr. Edwin Maydew is a capable exponent of the part of Lucas Marlow; and the minor parts are all capably sustained. The drama is produced under the direction of Messrs. Dottridge, Longden, and Livesey, for whom Mr. Geo. E. Carlton is business-manager and Mr. Edwin Maydew stage-manager.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE, N.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Musical Play, in Two Acts, adapted from the French by George Grossmith, jun., Composed by Ivan Caryll and Lionel Monckton,
entitled
"THE SPRING CHICKEN."

To-night the Alexandra, Stoke Newington, closes its doors as a theatre after the performance of The Spring Chicken, which has been played here throughout the week by Mr. George Edwardes's company. One cannot but feel a tinge of regret that this fine theatre, upon the boards of which all the leading members of the profession, from the late Sir Henry Irving downwards, have at various times appeared, is shortly to be devoted to another style of entertainment. The Spring Chicken, as is customary with all productions sent out under Mr. George Edwardes's direction, is as elaborately dressed and mounted as a West End production, and also has the advantage of a large and attractive chorus. Mr. George Gregory, who appears as Mr. Girdle, works hard right through the piece, and does not spare himself in his efforts to provoke laughter. Miss Irene Verona, who is quite the best exponent of "Connie Ediss" parts, after Miss Ediss herself, scores heavily as Mrs. Girdle, her songs being enthusiastically received. Baroness Papouche is well played by Miss Gertrude Gilliam, and a very charming Dulcie Babori is found in Miss Nancy Langtyre. Miss Mabel Russell infuses a considerable amount of brightness and vivacity into her impersonation of Rosalie, and hers is one of the most spirited performances in the piece. Mr. John Brabourne does well as Gustave Babori, and the Boniface of Mr. Fred Leslie, jun., save for a slight tendency to over-act, is, in all other ways, satisfactory. Two performances that stand out prominently by reason of their cleverness are the Emmy Low of Miss Nellie Lonnen, and the Stephen Henry of Mr. William Spray. Of the remaining parts those filled by Messrs. Frank Hector, Ernest Mahar, and Jocelyn Hope are the most noticeable.

THE TERRISS.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, by George R. Sims and Henry Pettitt,
entitled,
"IN THE RANKS."

One of the genuine Adelphi successes is supplied this week in the stirring military drama written by the late Henry Pettitt and George R. Sims, which is stamped with the hall-mark of success of many a London and provincial audience. The military bearing and handsome presence of Mr. Ashley Page mark him out for the rôle of the soldier hero, Ned Drayton, and the part fits him like a glove. Miss Marion Denvil ably sustains the character of the sorely-tried heroine, Ruth Herrick, and acts with much pathos and feeling throughout the piece. A newcomer, Mr. Roland Arthur, makes a favourable impression in the rôle of Captain Holcroft. Miss Georgie De Lara plays prettily as his sweetheart, Barbara Herrick; and Mr. C. A. Chandler is impressive as Richard Belson, the hop-picker. In the villainous part of Gideon Blake, Mr. Alfred Harding is seen to full advantage. Great praise must be bestowed upon Mr. Tom Taylor for his spirited performance of Colonel Wynter; Mr. Fred Woodville, as Farmer Herrick, is well received. Mr. Johnny Chippendale scores a success in the rôle of Joe Buzzard, and Miss Mattie Everett, as Mrs. Buzzard, causes much fun. Mr. John Sargent makes a capital Sergeant Searle, and plays with force; Miss Elsie Jezzard, the young child-actress, is successful as Polly Timmins, and the remaining characters are all in good hands. The scenery and effects are quite up to the standard.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Play, in Three Acts, by Sir A. Conan Doyle,
entitled
"BRIGADIER GERARD."

Few plays that have been brought to the Royal County Theatre, Kingston, by Mr. Peter Davey, the enterprising managing-director, have been more to the taste of local playgoers than Brigadier Gerard, which, with a company furnished by Mr. Lewis Waller and Mr. Davey himself, commenced a week's run on Monday night, and has been delighting crowded houses during the week. The company is a thoroughly capable one all round, and their efforts have been received with a degree of favour almost enthusiastic in its intensity. Chief honours are carried off by Mr. Loring Fernie as the light-hearted swashbuckler Brigadier, by Miss Maud Hoffman as the Comtesse de Roquelaure, and by Mr. George Mallett as Tallyrand. Mr. Fernie gives a fine, breezy picture of the Brigadier, and Miss Hoffman presents a polished and refined impersonation of the Countess; whilst Mr. Mallett's embodiment of the crafty Tallyrand is a faithful one in all its details. All three were heartily rewarded for their efforts by the audience. Others in the company who are deserving of particular mention are Miss Gertrude Beattie, who gives an engaging impersonation of the part of Agnes; Mr. Arthur Somers, who acquits himself as Napoleon, Mr. Penn Hamilton as Mons. D'Albert, Mr. Jas. Crowe as Mons. Bassompierre, and Mr. Reginald Mason as Pierre. It is unnecessary to add that the play was staged with great completeness in every particular.

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Dec. 3,
the Drama, by Hall Caine, entitled
"THE PRODIGAL SON."

The return of the Prodigal Son, to use a metaphor, was a welcome event at the Stratford Borough Theatre on Monday night, when the favourable impression gained by the piece on its first visit was heartily endorsed by a large and appreciative audience. Newly on tour then, it is now played in much more concise and brisk form, thereby sustaining the interest of the story better, and it is splendidly interpreted by a well-balanced cast. Mr. Norman Partriedge is eminently suited as Oscar Stephenson, and his fine stage appearance, fluent diction, and earnest methods lend distinction to the part. The rugged, phlegmatic nature of Magnus Stephenson is realistically depicted by Mr. Herbert Hewetson, who scores heavily in the rôle. Mr. Howard Russell brings his ripe experience to bear upon the part of Stephen Magnusson with eminently satisfactory results; and a most convincing portraiture of Oscar Neilson comes from Mr. Fred Epitaux. Miss Lily Hall Caine is entirely successful in the dual rôle of Thora and Eilin. As Thora she contributes a most charming and agreeable performance, and the change to the animated, naïve, enquiring girl, Eilin, shows the possession of much histrionic ability. Miss Cecil Cromwell depicts with undoubted skill and artistic restraint the worldly-minded Helga Neilson, her acting in the Casino scene being exceedingly realistic and convincing. Miss Alma Murray makes a natural and tender Anna Stephenson, and her acting is in entire sympathy with the part. Miss Mima Renouf submits a highly commendable rendering of Margaret Neilson. Mr. David Wills acts the Sheriff with sound judgment; Mr. Charles Douglas Cox plays Dr. Olsen very appropriately; Mr. Charles A. Maynard is excellent as Neils Finsen; and Mr. Gordon Macintosh, though too vividly made up, does well as the Director of the Casino. Remaining parts are all carefully played, and the piece is mounted with that care and correctness usually associated with productions under the régime of Mr. Arthur Collins.

AN IRISH ELOCUTIONIST.

The Rev. J. J. Nesbitt, LL.D., who died at his residence, The Nest, Birchington, Kent, on the 17th ult., was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, in 1892, and afterwards took the LL.D. degree. He was chaplain of Bethesda Church in Dublin for three years, and quickly made a reputation as the first amateur reciter in Ireland. For five years he was then vicar of Rodmersham, Kent, and recited a great deal professionally at the Steinway Hall, Salle Erard, Queen's Hall, Ancient Concert Hall (Dublin), as well as at private "At Homes," making a mark as an elocutionist of strong dramatic power with a good voice and wide range of humour and pathos. Le Fanu's "Shamus O'Brien," Buchanan's "Phil Blood's Leap," and "Kissing Cup's Race" were amongst his most successful recitations.

His health compelled him to leave his parish at Rodmersham, and he travelled round the world, lecturing on elocution in both Canada and the United States. His publications were "The Unique Reciter" (1897), "The Westminster Reciter" (1899), "Lord Roberts, V.C.," and other poems (1902), and at the time of his death he was working on an original book on the science of elocution, embodying his lectures.

Dr. Nesbitt was one of the founders of the Corinthian Club (a Bohemian Club) in Dublin, and was a member of the Royal Societies, Savage, Authors', and Primrose Clubs; also a life-member of the Royal Temple Yacht Club.

He married, while at Rodmersham, in 1900, the widow of Edward Twopenny, of Woodstock Park.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

WHEN Sir Charles Wyndham was in New York in 1862, endeavouring to obtain a commission as surgeon in the United States Army, he stayed at Willard's Hotel, one of the best in the Empire City, and, after various unavailing applications to dignitaries, fell back on the plan of sitting in the public room of the hotel with an illustrated book on surgery lying open ostentatiously on his knee, in hopes that someone's eyes might be caught by a most formidable illustration thus exposed, and that he might thus find a sponsor and patron who would assist him. Towards the end of the second day he noticed sitting opposite an elderly gentleman, who was haunted by autograph-seekers. Sir Charles thus tells the remainder of the story.

"I approached my unknown celebrity. He was courteous like the others, but too abrupt to be a divine. He must be a Cabinet Minister! Better still! No good, though. Whatever he was, he could do nothing. 'Deliver your letters of introduction,' he said. 'Have none,' I replied. He grunted disapproval. Without introduction the public ear was deaf. He was very sorry for me; he could not advise me, and he left the room. The morrow found me again at my post. Hour after hour passed by, when suddenly my elderly gentleman appeared, and from the corner of my eye I saw him stop, catch sight of me, and, to my infinite gratification, make straight for me! I told him that a letter to General Banks which had been offered to me I had even refused to wait for, as it had to come from Paris. 'I know General Banks,' he replied; 'I'll give you a letter to him if you like, but I shall be bound to say I know nothing about you.' 'So long as I am able to get to him,' I said, 'I should ask for nothing more.' And so my new friend sat down at once to write the letter.

"The letter was finished and handed to me, as he bade me good-bye and left me. It was short and business-like. It merely said that I was a perfect stranger to the writer, whom, passing through Washington, he had casually met, but that he had conceived an interest in me. He thought I was the kind of young man who meant business, and that if General Banks could put me in the way of getting what I wished, he would esteem it a personal favour. And there lay the signature before me—P. T. Barnum!"

"MACREADY," says Mrs. Aria, in her charmingly-written book on Costume, which has just been published by Macmillan and Co.—with dainty illustrations by Mr. Percy Anderson—"carried his sense of the importance of costume to such a point during the rehearsals of Henry V. that he went to bed in his armour, desiring that, not only should the dress become the part, but he should become the dress. I recollect," says Mrs. Aria, "Sir Henry Irving quoting this fact, when telling me that he himself always followed the practice of wearing the clothes for a new part a few days previous to assuming them on the stage."

"MRS. TREE vows that if you gave her a dozen yards of white crêpe de chine, she would make a costume in which she could appear as Ophelia, Lady Macbeth, Constance, and Juliet, and would undertake in the disposal of her draperies to satisfy the demands of the most exacting critic. But on the subject of fashion Mrs. Tree is a heretic, refusing to treat it seriously, and indulging in the theory that 'everything is people, nothing is gowns.' The philosophy of clothes as expounded by Mrs. Tree, if rendered popular, would not bring much grist to the mill of the modiste; but then 'In this life nothing comes off—except buttons' is her favourite pessimism."

APROPOS of Mr. Bourchier's approaching revival, Mr. Bram Stoker, in his noble biography of Henry Irving gives an amusing instance of Shakespearean criticism. When Irving revived Macbeth in 1888, an ingenious gentleman went so far as to suggest that the Messenger who in Scene 5, Act I., announces to Lady Macbeth the coming of the King, should have a bad cold, for the reason that Lady Macbeth says in her soliloquy:

"The raven himself is hoarse
That croaks the fatal entrance to Duncan
Under my battlements."

HERR BLEIBTREU in support of his theory that Rutland, not Shakespeare, was the author of the celebrated plays, is driven into a curious self-contradiction. The old argument against the Baconians, that no one so well-informed as Bacon would have made a clock strike in ancient Rome or surrounded Bohemia by the sea, &c., has been brought against Bleibtreu. He has been supporting his Rutland theory by pointing to the vast and various knowledge displayed in the works of Shakespeare; so it seems at first that he is in a dilemma. The German intellect, however, is equal to the emergency. "I say at once," says Bleibtreu, "that these obvious and incredible blunders were ironical tricks of the Unknown meant to mislead all trespassers on his own ground of authorship." But why did the Artful Dodger-dramatist display ignorance at one time and erudition at another?

FOR instance, Bleibtreu says:—"I consider as the finest divination in my theory the argument why the poet of Hamlet transplanted the student Hamlet to Wittenberg, quite an unknown university for English ears. Will anybody give me a clue how the uneducated comedian could know that only Wittenberg was the right place to educate a Hamlet, an invention of the most wonderful geniality? Well, my own Rutland, son-in-law of Sir Philip Sidney, knew perfectly why!" While he was about it, the son-in-law of Sir Philip might have known that the University of Wittenberg was not founded till 1502, so that its mention in Hamlet is a complete anachronism. But perhaps this was another of Rutland's ironical wiles.

ONE thing that strikes the reader of these Shakespeare-authorship theories in the extraordinary amount of trouble taken by the "concealed poets" to remain incognitos. The bother they must have had with their anagrams and "ironical tricks" must have been tremendous. It really serves them right for their folly that they gained nothing by these elaborate contrivances, since they have had no effect on Posterity. It must have been poor comfort to Bacon or Rutland in their lifetimes to have seen Shakespeare taking not only all the money profits of the plays, but all the complimentary verses, while they played the parts of "ghosts."

IT never seems to have occurred to the Baconians or the Rutlandites that one of the strongest arguments in favour of the author of the plays was an actor, is the extraordinary technical skill of Shakespeare's construction. The mere scenario of Othello, for instance, could only have been planned by a man with the technique of the stage, ground into him by constantly treading it.

IT seems that the managers of the Paris theatres and music halls who clamoured a few months ago for the abolition of the Censor, are now most anxious for his reappearance. At present they are at the mercy of organised disturbance, which brings in the police and exposes them to arbitrary enactments. In other words, they prefer to be under a Government Department than under police rule. "La Censure," we are told, is almost certain to come back again in some form or other. It will probably not receive the name of Censorship.

"THE CRICKET ON THE HEARTH."

A new Dramatic Adaptation, in Three Acts, of the Christmas Story, by Charles Dickens, produced at Terry's Theatre on Saturday, Dec. 1.

Caleb Plummer .....MR. CHARLES GROVES
John Peerybingle .....MR. A. B. IMESON
Mr. Tackleton .....MR. JOHN RYDER
Edward Plummer .....MR. HENRY ARMSTRONG
Porter .....MR. R. GREY
Dot .....MISS FRANCIS RUTTLEDGE
Bertha .....MISS GLADYS ARCHBUTT
Mrs. Fielding .....MISS ALICE BARTH
May .....MISS HETTY TEMPEST
Tilly Slowboy .....MISS MAUD STAMER
Spirit of the Cricket .....MISS IREDALE HOPE

Numerous dramatic versions of one of the most popular of Charles Dickens's Christmas stories have been produced. The first of these was a drama, in three acts, adapted, "by permission," by Albert Smith, and staged at the Lyceum Theatre, on Dec. 20, 1845, with Mr. Sam Emery as Peerybingle, Keeley as Caleb, Miss Turner as Tilly, Miss M. Keeley as Bertha, and Mrs. Keeley as Dot. On the last day of the same year another version by Edward Stirling was performed at the Adelphi Theatre, and the popularity of the story was so great that nearly a dozen other dramatisations of the story were produced at various theatres. Even a burlesque, by E. L. Blanchard, was, in January, 1846, staged at the Olympic Theatre under the title of The Cricket on Our Own Hearth, but the travesty proved a failure. In April, 1862, a play by Dion Boucicault, entitled Dot: a Fairy Tale of Home, founded on the story, was performed at the Adelphi with the late J. L. Toole as Caleb Plummer, and this piece was revived at the Gaiety in December, 1870—a few months after Dickens's death—Miss E. Farren playing the part of Tilly to Toole's Caleb. A recent revival was at the Garrick in December, 1903, Mr. Bourchier appearing as Caleb.

The name of the author of the new adaptation is not given on the programme, but the story is closely followed; and all the leading characters were excellently played by the members of Mr. W. H. C. Nation's company. Mr. Charles Groves quite realised the old toy-maker. Caleb Plummer, who actuated by love and pity for his blind daughter, Bertha, has deceived her as to their actual surroundings, and more particularly regarding the real character of their employer, Mr. Tackleton. Mr. Groves was specially natural and effective in the scene in which the poor girl learns the truth—that her father is an old grey-headed broken-down man, and that Tackleton is a hard, grinding taskmaster. Mr. A. B. Imeson was also successful in his portrayal of John Peerybingle, the carrier, who is led to believe that his wife is unfaithful to him, and to whom appears, as he sits alone by the fireside, moody and unhappy, the Spirit of the Cricket. The mingled feelings which overwhelm the man were truthfully and powerfully depicted. Mr. John Ryder made good use of his opportunities as the unsympathetic Mr. Tackleton, who, however, comes under the influence of that potent Yule-tide influence which finds expression in some form in all of Dickens's Christmas stories. Mr. Henry Armstrong did well as young Edward Plummer, whose mysterious appearance, disguised as an old man, causes all the trouble in the Peerybingle household. Miss Frances Ruttledge, though physically not answering to the description of Dot, for she is referred to in the story as being short and plump, was a bright, winsome representative of the character, and displayed genuine feeling when estranged from the devoted John. Miss Gladys Archbutt presented a pathetic picture as the blind girl, Bertha, easily securing the sympathy of the audience; that experienced actress, Miss Alice Barth, was a bustling Mrs. Fielding; and Miss Hetty Tempest was pretty and pleasing as May Fielding. Miss Maud Stamer achieved a notable success as Tilly Slowboy, displaying the genuine Dickensian humour as the eccentric, but kind-hearted, young woman. Her business with the Peerybingle baby was capital fun, reaching a climax when a piece of hot potato causes Tilly to utter a series of ear-piercing yells to the consternation of the guests assembled at Caleb's hut. Miss Iredale Hope, as the Spirit of the Cricket, spoke her lines well; and Mr. R. Gray appeared as Tackleton's man Porter. The piece concludes with a merry dance; and the music has been arranged by M. Napoleon Lambelet, the musical director.

The principal piece is preceded by the farce by Frederic Hay, entitled A Restless Night. Mr. Charles Groves appeared in his original part of Corporal Tir, and repeated his former success. Mr. A. B. Imeson was well placed as Jaques; and Mr. Campbell Bishop ably represented M. Goriot. Miss Gladys Archbutt, as Goriot's daughter Annette, gave an acceptable rendering of "Ah! Love, he is a cunning child." Miss Lane, as Fifine, sang "The Schoolgirl of the Period" in good style, and at the opening of the farce "A Village Roundelay" was sung by Misses De Lacy, Hetty Tempest, Daisy Nunn, and full chorus. All these songs were imitations from French originals by Mr. W. H. C. Nation. Mr. Armstrong, as Andre, and Mr. Gray, as Pierre, completed the cast. The costumes were designed by Messrs. Hyman, after sketches made in the Pyrenees by Mr. Nation.

NEW LONDON THEATRES.

The fine block of buildings illustrated in our present issue comprises the two new theatres and large shop premises erected by Mr. W. G. R. Sprague for the Jacobus-Marler Estates, Ltd., The frontage to Shaftesbury-avenue, which is of Italian Renaissance design, is 150ft. long. There are also frontages to Rupert-street of 157ft., to Upper Rupert-street of 130ft., and to Wardour-street of 180ft., the whole block comprising an area of about 25,000 superficial feet. The principal entrances to both theatres are at the corners of Rupert-street, Wardour-street, and Shaftesbury-avenue respectively.

The shop premises, which are occupied by Mr. Jack Jacobus, have a frontage of over 60ft., in the centre of the block, with a total depth of nearly 50ft. In spite of this large deduction of space from the site, Mr. Sprague has contrived to plan what will be, when completed, two of the finest West End theatres of London.

The theatre which Mr. Charles Frohman and Mr. Hicks are arranging to occupy is the one at the corner of Rupert-street, which is proposed to be opened to the public at Christmas. This theatre is decorated throughout in the Louis Seize style, with upholstering and seating of a rather deep shade of old rose, the decorations being carried out in a warm ivory white tone, with plain gold enrichments. The electric and other fittings are all designed in the same style.

The theatre throughout is constructed of fire-resisting material, the auditorium, saloons, and staircases being entirely of concrete and steel, and the stage throughout of teak or other hardwood, and the building generally embodies all the latest improvements and the London County Council's requirements. The auditorium, which has accommodation for about 1,200 persons, with extra standing space for a further 260, representing in money about £270, is constructed on the two-tiered principle, having about 180 stalls at the lowest level, with a good pit at the rear.

A fine roomy dress circle, having eight rows, for about 294 persons, occupies the first tier. On the second tier is the family circle, with five rows, for about 114 persons, with a spacious gallery behind, slightly raised above the family circle, and partly being of the same tier.

The auditorium is 50ft. wide by about 70ft. deep. The interior of the house has been designed by Mr. Sprague on a circular plan, the walls forming a segment of a circle. The second tier is a true circle on plan, and the dome and covings of the main ceiling complete this fine effect.

The principal entrance from Shaftesbury-avenue is through a semi-circular vestibule into the main crush room, about 40ft. long and 20ft. wide, over which is the foyer, with an open elliptical balcony overlooking the crush room below. This apartment is boldly treated with a fine arcading, elliptical on plan.

Fine saloons are elsewhere provided for the different sections of the house, together with retiring rooms, &c. The stage is about 40ft. deep, with a width of about 70ft, and a height to the grid of about 60ft.

A royal box, with private retiring room adjoining, most artistically decorated and furnished, is arranged at the dress circle level, and approached from Rupert-street.

There is a large block of commodious dressing rooms at the back of the stage, abutting upon Little Rupert-street, together with property and other rooms. The theatre is lighted throughout by electricity, and warmed by low pressure heating system.

The adjoining theatre, abutting upon Wardour-street, is somewhat larger than the one just described, and the planning throughout is quite distinct in almost every respect from the Rupert-street theatre, excepting as regards the elevation, the general lines and treatment being identical in both theatres. Full details and description of this house (which is proposed to be opened in March, 1907) will be given in a future issue.

It may be mentioned that Mr. Sidney Marler, for whom Mr. Sprague has already designed several of our latest theatres, is largely interested in the present enterprise.

SHAFTESBURY AVENUE NEW THEATRES.

Proprietors, the Jacobus-Marler Estates, Ltd.] [Architect, Mr. W. G. R. Sprague.

AFTER the Rugby football match at the Crystal Palace this evening there will be given, in the Centre Transept, a grand concert of the combined bands of H.M. Coldstream Guards (conductor, Lieut. J. Mackenzie Rogan), the Palace Military Band (conductor, Mr. Herbert Godfrey), and the great organ (played by Mr. Fred W. Holloway). The vocalists will be Miss Edith Evans, Mr. John Bardsley, and Mr. A. H. Gee. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, the musical director of the Palace, will act as accompanist.

MLLE. YETTA has just completed a most successful fortnight's engagement at the exhibition held at the Theatre Royal, Worthing. Her exceptional talent as a wire-walker and her pretty and graceful show generally have attracted large audiences and made her many friends, and on the concluding Saturday evening of her engagement her performance was most enthusiastically applauded. Gifts of beautiful flowers and chocolates were bestowed upon her, and the audience evidently parted with her with much regret.

THE SHAKESPEAREAN SCHOOLS.

Mr. Cyril Maude, as honorary examiner of the Shakespeare Schools of Rhetoric and Dramatic Arts, founded in 1889 by Mr. Carrington Willis, attended at the Bishopsgate Institute on the afternoon of the 30th ult. for the purpose of conducting the winter examination of candidates for first and second class certificates in reading, reciting, and acting.

In reciting the candidates for first-class certificates were the Misses Fanny Lugg, who gave a selection from Much Ado About Nothing; Alice Woodthorpe, "His and Hers" (Weller); Viola Roach, "The First Quarrel" (Tennyson); Florence Geere, "Brutus and Portia" (Julius Cæsar). The candidates for second-class certificates were the Misses Grace Croft, "The Story of the Faithful Soul" (A. Proctor); Jessie Revelle, "In the Round Tower of Jhansi" (C. Rosetti); Marjorie Dawes, Letter Reading scene from Macbeth; Mabel Garrard, "Queen Katherine's Speech" from Henry VIII.; Winifred Cresswell, "The House Opposite" (A. Hope); Rose Clarke, "The Matinée Hat" (F. Anstey); Messrs. Edward Green, "Lasca" (F. Desprez); Oliver Pike, "The Dandy Fifth" (Gassoway); Dudley Bishop, scene from The Merchant of Venice. In acting in selections from Shakespearean plays there were two candidates for first-class—Miss Amy English as Rosalind and Miss Fanny Sniders at Celia. The candidates for second-class certificates were the Misses Winifred Cresswell as Nerissa, Marian Ockleston as Portia, Grace Croft as Audrey, Mabel Garrard as Viola, Marjorie Dawes as Lady Macbeth, and Mr. George Uttridge as Macbeth. No fewer than seven of the lady candidates were awarded certificates.

Mr. Cyril Maude, who had listened to the programme from a seat in the body of the hall, addressed a few remarks to the competitors. He warned his youthful hearers not to jump to the conclusion that because they could recite they could therefore act. In his own experience, he said, he had often found quite the opposite to be the truth. People who had come to him at the theatre and recited admirably, and with all possible self-possession, had very often proved after a little rehearsal wretched actors. On the other hand, he had known a fellow come all trembling and choked with nervousness and quite unable to express anything at all, and after a little rehearsal he had got into the spirit of the part and proved altogether excellent. In conclusion, Mr. Cyril Maude said a word or two on the usefulness of the Academy of Dramatic Art, of which he—with Sir Squire Bancroft, Mr Pinero, Mr. Tree, and others—is a director. If only it had existed in his young days, said he, he would certainly have been glad of it, and if his own daughter went on the stage—which he sincerely hoped she would not—he would most certainly send her there. He warned the only too eager audience, however, not to be led by anything he should say to join too hastily a profession which was already very much overcrowded.

Sir Edward Clarke, who distributed the certificates in the absence of Lady Truscott, remarked that they might all congratulate themselves upon having listened to an exceedingly interesting entertainment. Not one of the candidates could be described as bad, whilst many of them might be spoken of as good. In his judgment that school was of very great value, because everyone who had anything to do with public life must know how important rhetoric and the proper use of the voice was. He was glad to learn that the interest in the school was continually increasing.

THE new Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Aves (musical director of the Crown Theatre, Peckham), gave two concerts last Sunday at the Palace Pier, Brighton, with conspicuous success. Amongst the selections, which were all faultlessly rendered, special mention must be made of the exceedingly fine playing of Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien" (Op. 45), Grieg's "Peer Gynt Suite," and Schubert's "Symphony in B Minor" (unfinished).

MR. J. FRED WATSON, the popular manager and licensee of the Victoria Theatre, Broughton (Salford), is to have his first complimentary benefit on Friday, the 21st inst., when special attractions will be presented. Miss Florence Baines (Miss Lancashire, Ltd.) and the leading artists at the Manchester theatres and music halls are announced to appear.

PRESENTATION.—Mr. A. H. Hoyle, the popular theatrical manager of the London and South Western Railway, has been the recipient of a handsome gold ring, subscribed for by the guards of that railway in recognition of his kindly services in promoting and arranging the most successful concert last October in aid of the widow and orphans of Guard Lawford.

PRESENTATION.—At the Assembly Rooms Theatre, Normanton, on Saturday, Mr. Fred L. Connyng hame was presented with a gold-mounted silk umbrella by Mr. W. Manning on behalf of the ladies and gentlemen of A Mother's Love company.

"TOMMY."

A play, in three acts, adapted by Jerome K. Jerome, from his novel "Tommy and Co.," and produced for the first time in London at the Camden Theatre, on Monday, Dec. 3.

Peter Hope .....MR. EVELYN VERNON
William Clodd .....MR. WILLIAM CALVERT
Flipp .....MR. A. E. BENDICT
Dick Danvers .....MR. RUPERT LISTER
"Mr. Morrison" .....MISS MOYRA CREEGAN
Honour .....MISS IDA RICHARDSON
Tommy .....MISS ANNIE HUGHES

Daringly unconventional in its ending, the new play, Tommy, adapted by Mr. Jerome K. Jerome from his own novel, "Tommy and Co.," had a very hearty welcome at the Camden Theatre on Monday from quite a West-end audience, and the calls so insistent at the end of each act made it a certainty that Miss Annie Hughes had scored a great personal triumph in the title-rôle. Cumulative in its interest, the piece is lifted into the regions of high-class melodrama by the powerfully-written scene that comes at the end of the second act; and keen curiosity is aroused as to the course that will be taken by the author with regard to his brave, true-hearted little heroine. How will he bring her back to the arms of the man to whom she had so clearly indicated the path of duty? In vain has been her sacrifice. The creature for which she had made it had cruelly lied to her, and her very soul revolts against the greyness of her future life without her idol. Exclaiming "God, myself, and the world will understand!" she falls into the arms of her lover; and her vows will not in holy church be said. The play is certain to excite considerable controversy, and that is one of the factors that make for success. The play, which has power and brightness, is also distinguished by fine character sketching, and should completely justify the faith of Miss Hughes in its drawing power.

"Tommy," the only child of Peter Hope, the editor of a weekly paper called Good Humour—published at 12, Cough-square, E.C., where the action of the piece is laid—has been given the name in memory of a dead brother. Left motherless at an early age, her bringing up has been mostly superintended by her father, an artless old gentleman, quite unfitted to battle with the stress demanded by the carrying on of a struggling journal. Tommy had become his sub-editor, and soon after the opening of the piece he is disquieted by the pointed remarks of Clodd, his manager, concerning the close friendship that had sprung up between the girl and Dick Danvers, who had dropped from the skies as it were into the position of general hack at the modest honorarium of two guineas a week. Clodd, evidently jealous of Danvers, makes Tommy a proposal of marriage on the telephone, but she refuses and accepts the love of Danvers, who tells her that he has put his former life behind him, and that she is the angel who has lifted him from the slough of despond. The interview between the pair is interrupted by the editor-father, who consents to the engagement. Danvers frankly details the history of his past life in New York, where his prospects had been ruined by an entanglement with a married woman. The old love—now a widow—meets the new, and in the name of "Mr. Morrison" offers to invest £2000 in Good Humour on one condition—that Tommy shall travel for six months. The proposition is made to Clodd, who declares that Tommy alone can settle it. Tommy leaves the decision to Danvers, who is completely nonplussed when "Mr. Morrison" appeals to him to think of their unborn child!

Fourteen years elapse between the second and third acts. Danvers, who is dwelling at 12, Cough-square—no longer the offices of that highly prosperous journal Good Humour—has done the "right thing" by "Mr. Morrison," and the marriage, as anyone may easily surmise, has turned out unhappily. The child—a girl, who has been named Honour—is now thirteen, and the father, deserted by the woman for whom he had given up all that he held dear, has grown prematurely grey through the drink habit and ill-health. Still a struggling journalist, his articles, unknown to him, are revised and touched up by Tommy, who pays surreptitious visits to his rooms twice a week. In her interviews with Honour she has discovered the girl's hatred of her shameless mother, and also finds out from a chance remark dropped by that lady during an angry interview, that Danvers is not the father of Honour, whose existence is due to a liaison previous to that of Danvers. Turning upon the guilty woman, Tommy, in a fit of justifiable rage, calls her a beast. On the departure of his wife, Danvers returns, and in a state of semi-intoxication conjures up visions of Tommy, who, in the gloaming, comes forward at his appeal and is enfolded in his arms.

Miss Annie Hughes never fails to interest us in any part that she is called upon to play, and all will remember her Sweet Nancy as a most perfect realisation of a frank, brave-hearted English girl in her teens. She once more delights us in the opening act by her free, unconventional treatment of a tomboy character, whose womanly nature she emphasises with such an indefinable charm. By her quiet intensity she brings out powerfully the dramatic strength of the well-written scene in the second act. It is another Tommy we meet in the third act. The gentle, dignified woman at last fathoms the depths of iniquity to which one of her own sex will sink, and Miss Hughes in her furious indictment of the wanton rises to heights of passion that bring down the house. Mr. Rupert Lister, who plays Danvers, is an actor of whom much will be heard in the future. He gave a clear indication of the character of the generous-hearted, impressionable young Irishman, who is ruled by heart rather than head, and his love-making is both tender and convincing. He just gives the necessary touch of the brogue, and the note of despair in the last act rings true. Mr. Evelyn Vernon plays the simple-hearted old editor on sound conventional lines, and gives utterance to a very good definition of a pessimist as a person "who pulls down the blinds and then grumbles because it is dark." Mr. William Calvert as the sharp man of business, Clodd, is responsible for an interpretation that quite reaches excellence. Clodd has what one may call the commercial instinct. He is not subtle, but possesses, nevertheless, a nice sense of the importance of diplomacy in business transactions, and his sharpness, shrewdness, and decisiveness are very interesting attributes as presented by the clever actor. Miss Moyra Creegan, as the unpleasant "Mr. Morrison," neither forces the note nor paints the character in lurid colours. She is content with half-tones, and her restraint and self-repression are admirable, especially in the last act. Mr. A. E. Bendict furnishes a good character-study of the office-boy, Flipp; and Miss Ida Richardson, as the half-trained, undisciplined Honour, plays her one scene with a truth to nature and an innate power that are instantly recognised. At the conclusion of the play, after the curtain had been lifted many times in compliment to Miss Hughes, there were loud calls for the author, but Mr. Jerome did not respond.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Charles Wyndham's active and alert bearing and expressive and animated delivery of his speech at the Actors' Benevolent Fund Dinner on Wednesday were matters of general comment, and all present were delighted to see the gay veteran of so many theatrical fields in such "fine form." We congratulate Sir Charles, both on the amount of the subscriptions and on his excellent health and spirits.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree, in a lecture on Antony and Cleopatra to an audience, partly composed of members of the Salon, held in the upper chamber of His Majesty's Theatre on Thursday, stated that he had rearranged the five acts of the play with thirty-eight scenes, into four acts, or eighteen scenes in all. Before and after the play will be presented a vision of the Sphinx, "emblem of eternity, indifferent to human fate and human will." As a spectacle, Cleopatra's barge will be shown, and at the meeting of Cæsar, Antony, Lepidus, and Pompey, in Pompey's galley, there will be bacchanalian dances, and the emperors will themselves join in the revels. Later on there will be a scenic tableau representing Antony's return and Cleopatra publicly enthroned in the habiliments of the goddess Isis. After the lecture Mr. Tree gave his amusing Hamlet and Falstaff imitations.

Mr. Lewis Waller, who so narrowly escaped injury in a motor collision near Coventry recently, had to answer on the 30th ult. at the local police-court a summons for reckless driving. The police statement was to the effect that the defendant was driving a motor-car of considerable power from Coventry to London at a great speed, which various witnesses estimated at from thirty to forty miles an hour. In endeavouring to avoid another motor-car an accident happened, and defendant's car swerved and turned over on the side of the road.

Mr. Waller was present in court, and said he was thoroughly accustomed to driving in all sorts of places and under all sorts of conditions. He was proceeding at a very moderate pace for a powerful car, and slowed down to ten miles an hour when approaching the by-road out of which the other car came. He made a tremendous swerve to avoid this motor, which, however, struck his car broadside on. Had he been going forty miles an hour he would have missed the other car by several seconds. Evidence confirming Mr. Waller's statements was given, but the Bench decided to convict, and imposed a fine of £5 and costs. An application that the licence should not be endorsed pending consideration as to whether an appeal should be taken was granted.

Mrs. Kendal, looking extremely well, was present in the capacity of patron at the performance given by Mrs. S. Brereton Douglass's pupils at the Queen's (Small) Hall on Monday afternoon. The eminent actress bestowed frequent approval on the young people, with whose efforts she was so well pleased that she has asked Mrs. Douglass to send her several of the most promising.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier's production of Macbeth, of which Stratford-on-Avon was permitted the first glimpse, is due at the Garrick on Tuesday. The favour which Mr. and Mrs. Bourchier have won in Manchester has been of so pronounced a character that they have decided upon a three weeks' season in the great manufacturing town, in the course of which a varied selection of their most popular works will be presented.

Miss Delia Mason, the well-known actress, was married at St. James's, Piccadilly, on Wednesday afternoon, to Mr. Wysard, a wealthy young Brazilian. Miss Mason has recently been on tour, and few people knew of her engagement. Many of her friends were, therefore, surprised on receiving invitations to the wedding. After the ceremony a reception was held at Prince's. Mr. and Mrs. Wysard have left London for San Taulo, Brazil, the home of the bridegroom.

A meeting of members of the theatrical profession was held on the stage of the Comedy Theatre on Thursday, when Mr. Cyril Maude occupied the chair, the object being to arrange details in connection with the assembling of a large and representative gathering of actors and actresses at the meeting convened for the purposes of the Irving Memorial, which will take place at the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday, the 18th inst., at 3 o'clock. Mr. John Hare will preside, and several eminent members of the profession have promised to address the meeting.

Mr. Martin Harvey brings his tour to a triumphant close at the Palace Theatre, Belfast, to-night, every bookable seat having been disposed of several days ago. To-morrow Mr. Harvey, Miss de Silva, and company return to town, and will appear next week at the Coronet Theatre, playing The Breed of the Treshams, A Cigarette maker's Romance, Boy O'Carroll, and The Only Way.

"Students' Night" was celebrated on Wednesday, when a procession of collegiates, arrayed in fancy costumes, arrived at the theatre shortly after 6 p.m., and took possession of the gallery, where they furnished an excellent programme of songs, &c. The piece presented was The Only Way, in which Mr. Harvey achieved a positive triumph in his impersonation of Sydney Carton. Miss de Silva adjudicated upon the costumes worn by the students, and, during an interval, was presented with a handsome bouquet.

A speech was enthusiastically demanded from Mr. Harvey, who in the course of his remarks said he appeared before them in a somewhat novel rôle, for he had generally been associated with the entertainment in a theatre, but to-night they had completely turned the tables upon them, and they had been the entertained. On behalf of his fellow-workers, his wife, and himself, he thanked them—the students of the Queen's College—for their presence there that night. They all considered it a very great honour that the students should come in their official capacity, as it were, and give them that pleasant and memorable night in their lives.

Miss Dorothy Grimston has met with so much encouragement as the erring heroine in that famous old play East Lynne, that she will take it on a short tour with a strong company, beginning on Monday at the Kennington Theatre. Miss Grimston's tour will be under the direction of her husband, Mr. B. A. Meyer, who is making arrangements for it to be extended through the spring and autumn of next year.

Mr. Lewis Waller and Mr. Tom B. Davis are shortly to be associated in a philanthropic act, which will enhance the reputation of the profession for kindly deeds. The estimable project is to devote an afternoon at the Lyric between now and Christmas, to the entertainment of some 1,400 of the little crippled children, on whose behalf Sir William Treloar, the Lord Mayor, is now raising a fund, who will be invited to a performance of Robin Hood. The delight of the afflicted little ones at meeting so gallant a hero can well be conceived.

We regret to record the death of Miss Lizzie Green, recently a member of the Sergeant Brue company on tour, which took place at Burnley on the 29th ult. from typhoid. Miss Green was for many years an assistant in the circle bar at the Northampton Opera House, and then joined one of Mr. Lockwood's operatic companies, touring in England and afterwards in South Africa.

Mr. Bannister Howard has started rehearsals for the coming pantomime Aladdin at the Crystal Palace Theatre. Miss Lily Lassah, who will be the Aladdin, is, possibly, a greater favourite in the district than anywhere, having been born in Croydon, where she has lived all her life.

"The Bondman," which finished on Wednesday at Drury-lane, will be interrupted in its successful career by only a few weeks, for it is to be afforded hospitality at the Adelphi on Jan. 5. All the original exponents of the cast, with the important exception of Mrs. Patrick Campbell and Mr. Henry Ainley, will resume their rôles. Mr. Ainley, who goes to Raffles, will be replaced by Mr. Walter Hampden, but Mrs. Campbell's successor has yet to be named. The Prodigal Son, Old Drury's last year's production, is afterwards to be revived at the Adelphi, and a new play by Mr. Hall Caine is also in contemplation.

Mr. Otho Stuart has also made arrangements of an important nature by which the company of the Komische Oper in Berlin will be seen and heard at the Adelphi about the middle of April. The company has achieved an enviable renown in Germany for its light operatic productions, which are akin to those of the Paris Opèra-Comique, Offenbach's opera, Les Contes d'Hoffmann, the German title of which is Hoffmann's Erzählungen, will be their first production at the Adelphi. Mr. Hans Gregor, the director of the company, will bring over a complete orchestra and no fewer than a hundred performers, including three prima donnas.

As announced at the annual dinner on Wednesday evening, the treasurer of the Actors' Benevolent Fund has received the sum of £500 from the executors of the late Mr. J. L. Toole, and the same has been invested in conformity with the rules of the Fund.

Mr. C. Aubrey Smith has forwarded to the secretary of the Actors' Benevolent Fund a cheque for £37 10s., on account of the cricket matches given in July for the benefit of the Fund, and also of the Orphanage.

Miss Beryl Mercer, who accompanied Miss Lena Ashwell to America to play her original part of the Kaffir girl in The Shulamite, has, to use an Americanism, "struck oil." Her original performance in this play has deeply impressed our American cousins, and as a consequence this clever little lady has received many tempting offers to remain in the States.

The Scala has been selected for the eighth season of the German Theatre in London under the direction of Hans Andresen, who will start operations in the spring. The German Ambassador, Count Metternich, has again this year granted the enterprise a handsome subsidy. The management will repeat the experiment of last year, and give another Christmas play prior to the opening of the chief season, the fairy piece Schneewittchen (Snow White), by A. Gorner, being selected for production on Boxing Day and following afternoons. Mr. Hans Andresen has secured a series of highly interesting new plays for his spring season, including Die Condottieri, by Rudolf Herzog; Husarenfieber, by Skovroneck and Kadelburg, and Die von Hochsattel, by Heller.

Patrons of the Crystal Palace Theatre will have a delightful choice of plays next week, Mr Bannister Howard having engaged Mr. Norman V. Norman and an excellent company, including Miss Beatrice Wilson, in a répertoire of West End pieces. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday will be seen the new romantic play Robin Hood; or, The Outlaw of Sherwood Forest, by Messrs. Dennis Cleugh and Cecil Duncan Jones. The play has already scored a great success, and will shortly be published in book form. On Thursday and Friday the attraction will be Nell Gwyn of Drury Lane. The matinée on Thursday should draw a crowded house, for that delightful play of Anthony Hope's, The Adventure of Lady Ursula, will be presented, with Mr. Norman as Sir George Sylvester and Miss Wilson as Lady Ursula Barrington.

Mr. Charles E. Machin, of the Avenue Theatre, Sunderland, has patented a new lantern, which it is asserted will be the stage arc light of the future. Among the advantages claimed are a saving in current of from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. over battens, without taking the cost of incandescent lamps into account. One man, moreover, can control twenty lamps with one leverboard, a great saving of labour being thus effected. By the use of flexible coloured mediums the danger from falling glass is avoided, and the simplicity of construction removes any fear of the lamp getting out of order. The lamps are said to flood the entire stage with a powerful, soft, sunlight effect, and to possess the invaluable advantage of making no shadows or flickering.

Miss Maude Stewart Drewry, who has had a most successful South African tour as leading lady in Mr. Leonard Rayne's répertoire company, is returning to England, and is due to arrive on the 22nd inst.

"The Silver Stick," a new musical play by Alfred England, with the music by Mr. Carl St. Amyas, is announced for production at the Opera House, Northampton, on the 17th inst.

There has just passed away at Belfast, after a few days' illness, a well-known citizen in Mr. John Mantell, proprietor of Eglinton and Winton Hotel, and brother of Mr. R. B. Mantell, an actor of distinction in the United States. His funeral, which took place on Tuesday last, was attended by all classes of the community, including many members of the Masonic Order, of which deceased was so prominent a member, being Past Master of St. John's Masonic Lodge No. 88. Messrs. Fred W. Warden, managing-director Theatre Royal and Palace, Belfast; David Motherwell, manager David Allen and Sons, Ltd., Belfast; Alan Carswell, J.P., and W. T. Braithwaite were among those present. Many beautiful wreaths were forwarded, and the cortége was one of the most imposing ever witnessed in Belfast.

A varied feast of music has been enjoyed by patrons of the autumn season of Italian opera at Covent Garden, which concluded on Saturday last. Out of a total of fifty-three operas given up to and including Dec. 1, the highest number has been secured by a modern work, Puccini's Madama Butterfly, which was sung ten times. Bizet's Carmen came next with nine representations; Puccini again scored with seven performances of La Bohème; Gounod's Faust was given six times; Verdi's Aïda appeared five times; Puccini was represented once more with four revivals of La Tosca; and the same number was given of Verdi's Rigoletto. Giordano's Fedora and Verdi's Traviata were each given thrice, and the list is completed by Cilea's Adriana Lecouvreur, which was twice performed.

The Hildenborough Village Players, who won the greatly-valued commendation of the late Sir Henry Irving, are entering upon their fifth season. Messrs. John Johnson and Dagney Major have again written the play, which, according to custom, has been designed for male characters only, although the authors are also preparing another version in which female characters will be introduced. All the parts, it may be recalled, are played by working men, the scenery is painted by a resident in Hildenborough, the stage work, including lighting, is done by Hildenborough workmen, and the incidental music is composed by the organist of the little Kentish village.

Miss Annie Hughes has found an admirable outlet for her gifts, both of comedy and dramatic power, in Jerome K. Jerome's play Tommy, which created such a marked impression on its production at the Camden this week. Miss Hughes is arranging a tour of the "striking melodrama," as it is termed, with herself, of course, in the title-rôle.

The Irving Memorial Committee held a meeting on the 29th ult., when Mr. Cecil Raleigh, the chairman, was supported by all the members of the committee and the secretary. The meeting adjourned till the following Tuesday, when the secretary received further instructions with regard to the Irving Memorial meeting.

Cook) marked the commencement of their official year by inviting Mr. William Greet's Earl and the Girl company to tea on Sunday last in the Temperance Institute of the Castle Borough on the arrival of the company in that town. The graceful act was highly appreciated, and creates an agreeable precedent.

Special Christmas and New Year matinées will be given to keep pace with the rapidly-growing popularity of The Electric Man, by Mr. Charles Hannan, at the New Royalty Theatre. The extra matinées, which commence on Boxing Day, will be given every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday during the holidays. A large number of children are constantly witnessing the play, and take infinite delight in the weird lighting and effects and in the antics of Mr. Harry Nicholls as the automaton. The usual Wednesday and Saturday matinées of the droll piece, it should be added, will be given every week up to Boxing Day.

The provinces are shortly to be afforded opportunities of making acquaintance with Mr. Charles Hannan's fantastic comedy The Electric Man, which will be sent on tour with two companies next year. Although the dual rôle of Walter Everest and the Electric Man was sustained by another actor when the play was first publicly produced at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, Mr. Harry Nicholls was, nevertheless, the original exponent of the part at the copyright performance at the Richmond Theatre some time before—a performance, by the way, which was strongly recommended at the time by Mr. Nicholls, who was the first to read the completed play.

The visit of Mr. J. W. Turner's English Opera Company to Wigan this week was made the occasion between acts of the performance of Benedict's Lily of Killarney, on Monday night, of the presentation to Mr. Turner of a beautifully illuminated and framed address on behalf of the citizens of Wigan, expressing their appreciation of his services in the cause of Grand Opera. The address bore the signatures of the Mayor of Wigan (Councillor J. O'Donaghue) and many prominent citizens. In the absence of the Mayor of Wigan, the Deputy-Mayor, Councillor J. M'Quaid, made the presentation, which was acknowledged by Mr. Turner in fitting terms.

Mr. H. Adair Nelson is now the acting-manager at His Majesty's Theatre, Aberdeen. Mr. H. C. Cavanah, who demitted the post in order to devote the whole of his time to his profession of chartered accountant, will in future act as treasurer of the new house.

On account of the sudden indisposition of Miss Annie Goward during the matinée of What the Butler Saw, on the 29th ult., at the Alexandra Theatre, Stoke Newington, Miss Julie St. George, who happened to be in the neighbourhood, although not a member of the company was asked to play the part of Mrs. Hake at the evening performance. This she did successfully at two hours' notice, and was forthwith engaged by Mr. Lionel Rignold and Miss Ada Blanche for their spring tour of the same piece.

Miss Olga Audry, who concludes a successful engagement with Mr. Walter Melville's company at the Standard Theatre, has been engaged to play the title-rôle in A Wrecker of Men. Mr. William Mollison received an ovation at the Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, on Monday last, when he appeared in Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush, and during the progress of the play theatregoers of "modern Athens" were at times completely carried away by this clever actor's work. It will be good news for playgoers in all parts of the country to learn that Mr. Mollison will shortly embark on a Shakespearean tour in conjunction with Mr. Sidney Cooper, the lessee and manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Newport, in the course of which some of the plays with which the popular actor had such successful London seasons will be presented.

Clarence, Mr. Hubert Harben, Mr. Lawrence Grant, Mr. John L. Mackay, and Mr. Edmund Gwenn. The second new piece is entitled The Campden Wonder, a drama in three scenes, by John Mansfield, in which Miss Dolores Drummond, Miss Carlotta Addison, Mr. Norman McKinnel, and Mr. H. R. Hignett will have principal parts. The Doctor's Dilemma will be put into the evening bill on Monday, Dec. 31, and for Monday, Feb. 11, a new revival of You Never Can Tell may be anticipated.

Miss Ward, who has made such a notable success as Honor Symes in Her Fatal Past, is opening at Christmas as Marcelle, the part specially written for her by Mr. Walter Howard, in the romantic play Man and Wife. She will continue to play Marcelle up to within a few weeks of Easter, and after a short rest will create the leading part in the production Second to None, by the same author.

A sad termination to the visit of M. Auguste Van Biene's company to the Empire, Oldham, last week was made by the sudden death of Mr. Faulkner Cox, who played the character of Mortimer in The Broken Melody. On leaving the stage at the end of the second act on the 30th ult., Mr. Cox fell into the arms of one of the assistants, and was carried to his dressing room. A doctor was called, and on his instruction Mr. Cox was removed, in an unconscious condition, to the infirmary, where he died the following morning. At the inquest, held at Oldham Town Hall on Monday afternoon, a verdict of "Death from heart disease" was returned.

The funeral took place at Greenacres Cemetery on Wednesday, the chief mourners being Miss M A. Cox, Miss Jane Cox (sister of the deceased), Master Cox, and Mrs. Barrett. Wreaths were sent by deceased's daughter, the Oldham Branch of the United Irish League, of which the lamented actor was a prominent member, Mr. and Mrs. Byrne (Shakespeare Hotel), and members of The Broken Melody company and The London Fireman company. Duncan was the recipient of several valuable presents from staff and friends on Saturday night last, on the occasion of his departure from Cardiff, where he had been resident manager at the King's Theatre. The gift included a handsome dressing case, gold sleeve links, shaving outfit, &c. Mr. Duncan, it may be interesting to relate, had a stage doorkeeper, an old naval pensioner, whose constant allusions to a small fortune which was due to him induced Mr. Duncan to investigate matters, with the happy result that the poor old man turns out to be heir to property near Birmingham of the estimated value of £8,000.

Sir Charles Wyndham followed up the gratifying success of his matinée of David Garrick at the New Theatre on the 22nd ult. by a repetition of the performance on behalf of the Actors' Benevolent Fund on Monday, when an overflowing house again enthusiastically greeted the distinguished actor and Miss Mary Moore. An interesting epilogue was contributed to the evening's entertainment by Mr. Harry Nicholls, who came on to the stage and warmly thanked Sir Charles for his kindness in devoting his brilliant art to the good of "those poor souls who have fallen by the way." The proceeds of the matinée amounted to £402 14s.

The tiny point of light which, in the small hours of Tuesday morning, flickered this way and that at the British end of an Atlantic cable, spelt out yet another message of triumph for Leslie Stuart's musical play, The Belle of Mayfair in the United States. Rochester, Syracuse, Washington, Baltimore, and Boston had each in turn succumbed to the charms of the "Belle," but on Monday, in New York, a reception was accorded the play entirely eclipsing the splendid ovations that had gone before.

The numbers in The Belle of Mayfair entitled "Why do they call me a Gibson Girl?" and "I know a girl" were each of them six times redemanded by the New York audience; "Come to Saint George's" had to be thrice repeated; and "Hello! come along girls!" "I'll wait for you, little girlie," and "The weeping willow wept" were all encored twice.

English musical comedies, as produced in the States, are frequently riddled through and through with interpolations, but in the case of The Belle of Mayfair—as in that of Florodora—the composer's original score is preserved intact, the whole of the musical numbers being from the facile pen of Mr. Stuart.

An unsuccessful attempt was made by Mr. Andrew Melville at the special Licensing Sessions at Birmingham on Tuesday to have the restriction as to the sale of intoxicating drink removed from the Metropole licence. Counsel said that the restriction did not prevent drinking—the only result was that the surrounding public-houses benefited. The magistrates, however, decided not to remove the prohibition. The licences of the various theatres were all renewed, and the Chairman of the Bench congratulated the managers upon the manner in which they had endeavoured to meet the wishes of the magistrates. He expressed the wish, on behalf of his brethren on the Bench, that no child who was apparently under the age of fourteen should be admitted to any performance unless accompanied by an adult, cases having occurred in which children had been tempted to steal in order to visit the play.

Probate of the will of the late Stefano Gatti, who died on Oct. 12, was on Wednesday granted to his nephew, Joannes M. A. Gatti. The estate, which amounts in the United Kingdom to £220,414 gross, including personality of the net value of £139,795, is left to Mr. Gatti's nephews and nieces.

The generous feeling which Mr. Harry Battersby cultivated in the minds of the members of his Juvenile Opera Company was manifest in a little incident that occurred last week. Miss Florence Baines and Miss Kitty Jones were formerly children with Mr. Battersby's Juvenile Opera Company. Miss Jones read in Aberdeen of Miss Baines losing her voice, and the probability of the theatre being closed in consequence, whereupon she sent her colleague the following telegram:—"Am coming to Birmingham to help you out of your awful difficulty." On Miss Jones's arrival she was thanked by Miss Baines, and presented with a marquise diamond ring. During the spring Miss Jones will play Eva Lancashire, her original part, Miss Baines of course retaining that of Our Mary Ellen, the Lancashire lass.

Dame Fortune was very gracious to Miss Florence Baines and the Miss Lancashire, Limited, company at the Palace Theatre, Bradford, last week. Despite the illness of Miss Baines (who was obliged after the first performance to refrain from singing) the business exceeded anything ever done in the house. On Saturday evening, while thousands were waiting to gain admission, Miss Baines's speaking voice absolutely failed, and Florence de Vere volunteered to go on and read the part. The indulgence of the audience being requested, they treated the plucky little lady most liberally, and she played to the two largest houses ever assembled in the walls of the Palace. At the fall of the curtain, in the presence of the whole company, the manager personally thanked Miss de Vere, presenting her with a £5 note, and permanently engaged her as Miss Baines's understudy. The specialist attending Miss Baines advises a short rest. Miss Baines plays the Christmas season at the Court Theatre, Wigan, and in the new year will be returning to Huddersfield with the Northern Theatres Syndicate.

A pleasing incident took place during the performance of Tannhäuser at the Grand Theatre and Opera House, Eccles. Mr. Alderman Schofield, the Mayor, presented the proprietor, Mr. C. Hamilton Baines, on behalf of the Humane Society, with a certificate signed by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for saving the life of Mabel Robins, who was in imminent danger of drowning in the Thames at Reading on Aug. 25. The Mayor said he felt proud that the playhouse of the town was in the hands of a man of the calibre and grit of Mr. Baines, who, when necessity called upon him, did not hesitate to risk his life for another.

ACTORS' BENEVOLENT FUND ANNUAL DINNER.

Sir Charles Wyndham presided at the annual dinner of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, held at the Hotel Metropole on Wednesday evening. The last occasion on which Sir Charles officiated in a similar capacity was eight years ago, when his eloquent appeal resulted in a handsome collection. On the present occasion Sir Charles delivered a touching address, in which he called attention in a striking manner to the exigencies of an actor's life, the whole-hearted liberality of members of the theatrical profession in their conduct towards one another, and even the ungrudging support they gave to outside charities. During the evening it was announced that over £3,000 had been subscribed.

There was a good assemblage of notable men belonging to the various professions. The Lord Mayor (Alderman Sir W. P. Treloar) and Mr. Sheriff W. H. Dunn entered, and joined the company while Sir Charles Wyndham was proposing the toast of the evening. Among the ladies who listened to the speeches from a balcony were to be noticed Lady Wyndham, Miss Mary Moore, and Mrs. George Alexander.

After the toast of "The Royal Family" had been duly honoured,

The CHAIRMAN, rising amid a tremendous ovation to propose "The Actors' Benevolent Fund," said:

My lords, ladies, and gentlemen,—It is my privilege, and, in a sense, my misfortune, to propose the toast of the Actors' Benevolent Fund. When pleading for this excellent and meritorious institution eight years ago from this chair, I did not dream of being called back to it again so soon. Consequently, you see before you a man beset with dangers and surrounded by embarrassments. To begin with, in '98 I complained of the fact that seven predecessors in this chair were treading on my heels. Now there are fifteen of them. Difficult as it was then to clothe my appeal in language that would not be a conscious or unconscious plagiarism of those fearsome seven, how much more perplexing now that the number has increased; and how very disconcerting for me to remember that one of the fifteen was myself. You realise the situation, I hope. There are fifteen ghosts of the past before you, and one revived and sad reality. In the whole of the blazing Sahara of rhetoric, I was the only cool, green oasis of incompetence. Can you wonder, therefore, that those fifteen exercise a weird influence over me, and so capture my senses that I see none of you? I am assured that I shall find you all there, but to me it is merely at present hearsay: I see nothing but those phantoms derisively gibing at me from the depths of their experience of the difficulties of this office. And so demoralised have I become that, whilst you have been regaling yourselves for hours, I have been barely able to swallow the soup; I have but flirted with the fish, and after that have been compelled to send away dish after dish untasted, till at last I began to feel like that great reformer, Martin Luther, who, when he repudiated the Diet of Worms, cried out, "Alas! alas! I can take no other course!" For my trouble is this—I have to speak to you to-night on precisely the same subject I spoke on eight years ago. And you know well that the man who plagiarises from another is a brigand, but that the man who plagiarises from himself is a bore. And I know from personal experience what it is to listen to long official speeches, what an agony boredom can become. There are times when I have felt like crying out for some anæsthetic to help me bear the affliction. And, with this knowledge, I hesitate to operate on you unless, perchance, you are in good enough health to bear it. You look strong, and, judging from your kind and warm reception of me, you sound strong, so I may perhaps console myself with the reflection that if the patient is strong enough to endure the agony, it is not for the operator to disclaim the ability to inflict it. So I take heart of grace. Though I know that I am going to run the risk of repeating myself, and, what is worse, of being found out doing it; though I know that the annals of the fund stand on record against me, like the previous convictions of the hardened offender, I am gradually beginning to do full justice to the beautiful spirit of resignation underlying the statesman's apparently obvious remark, "What I have said, I have said!" And if I do repeat myself, shall I be censured or abused? Are those eight years to count for nothing? Why, in eight years science tells us that the whole physical man is changed, so it must be apparent that to-night I am not myself at all. And it is the same with you. Undeniably, a new man is addressing a new audience on behalf of new clients; so if I cannot repeat myself without detraction, it will be obvious that science is wrong, but I am not prepared to take the responsibility of such a statement. Moreover, there is the great paradoxical truth that the great things in life are most new when most old. The organic processes of physical nature, however oft-repeated, are always fresh. Each dawn, each sunset comes to us as a new thing; the sun itself may be very old, but who shall say it has not still a bright future before it? Certainly not our little earth, which, with unfailing Christian complacency, keeps turning to it first one cheek and then the other to be smitten or caressed. The elemental passions of human nature, old though they be in the abstract, are ever new in each concrete manifestation. What, for instance, more ancient than the love of a man for a maid? And the more ancient the man, or the more ancient the maid, the newer it is, and when both are ancient, newer than ever! Why, there are no more unblushing plagiarists than your amorous couples of all ages and all nations. Look at your young Romeos and Juliets, always pretending to be new and original, and bamboozling each other with the old accents, the old phrases, the old vows, and, oh, dear! oh, dear! the old perjuries, the source of so much amusement to the gods of old and so much "copy" to the newspapers of to-day. To come nearer home, what more ancient since the existence of the stage than the friendly relations between the public and the actor? Relations so friendly, so constant, so binding that I have before now likened the link to that of the nuptial tie itself. You, the public, are the stronger; we, the actors, are the weaker. You, in fact, are the husband; we, the wife. And so deep down in our hearts is this truth embedded that we instinctively recognise our duties to each other. Ours it is to honour and obey you. Yours, of course, to love and cherish and endow us with all your worldly goods. I am obliged to mention this to-night because later on we must discuss the method of your payment. And what is true of these happy states is equally true of others. The poor are always with us, but to the compassionate heart each appeal of poverty brings its own individual pang. Human misery, though old in bulk, is ever new in detail; but, thank God, the anciently-implanted impulse to alleviate and succour, to hold out the hand of good fellowship to the down-trodden is ever fresh and beautiful each time it stirs within the heart of us. It is this unfailing freshness I count on now; on this foundation that I build. And if I can reach your hearts to-night, what does it signify that I do tread the path so often trod before. Rather let me do so. Let me wander into the fields of retrospect and sentiment; retrospect mournful though not unnatural this year; sentiment none the less sincere because postprandial; on the contrary, as genuine as the characters that evoke it, as stirring as the men whose memory I desire to honour. Travellers in Switzerland whilst often admiring the excellence of the roads there, as often notice that, side by side with the new road—sometimes above, sometimes below—runs the discarded old road, stony, tortuous, uneven, uncomfortable, but clothed for the living with the sweetest memories. Such a traveller who has known it in early days, to whom its every stone is familiar, will find himself almost unconsciously crossing the fields that separate him from that now-neglected track. To that his affections will cling tenderly, and none the less so if he is pacing the new road with sad memories of companions who were with him on the old. Two old comrades of mine and favourites of yours—both with us a few months ago—started and travelled with me on that old road—over the boulders that blocked it; by the side of the floods which submerged it; by the avalanches that often swept it away. Together we hoped and failed, and hoped again, and by the light of our own troubles and disappointments learned to think tenderly of the miseries of others. So was founded later in life this Actors' Benevolent Fund. I will not repeat the story I told you in '98. How we three, in conjunction with Bancroft, Hare, Kendal, and a few others, conceived, planned, and developed the Fund, which has done so much, and is called upon to do so much more. But I recall in reverence the names of Irving and of Toole—men whose hearts and souls were in this fund; in life and in death identified therewith, as you will learn later on. You have so many motives for your generosity to-night. Let the memory of those two good men be the crown and coping-stone of them all. It is well that there should be a pause occasionally in the rush and turmoil of existence; that, after ceaselessly jostling each other on life's highway, we at times should have leisure—leisure, if not made by ourselves, provided for us by occasions like these to step aside into the green and under the whispering trees hold converse with misfortune. It has been said that in the chronometry of life there are provided many silent moments. Such moments come to us each year before we meet—moments between the strokes of the ruthless bells that proclaim the great events of life—moments which invite reflection wherein to contemplate the misery that surrounds us. And to the generous heart such contemplation is the forerunner of resolution. Thought is the mother of action. You have been thinking, or would not have been here to-night. Now you are going to act, and I am sure your acts will not fall short of your thoughts; on the contrary, in a fiscal sense, will outrun them; for figures are elastic, and, like all elastic substances, expand under the genial influence of warmth—such warmth as melting charity diffuses. Once a year, in the old days of the state of Rome, the master waited on the slave; once a year, in the later days of the Church of Rome, the Bishop cleansed the soiled and wounded feet of the outcast. Let each of us who have achieved any measure of success make himself to-night the bondman of the bondmen of destiny. For success owes a debt—a heavy debt—to failure. In all the avenues to fame and fortune, the triumph of one means the defeat of others; the higher the altitude attained by the few, the more stony the narrow pathway leading to it. And the more deadly the overcrowding, the longer the list of those who succumb. Let us try to heal their broken lives and assuage their cruel sorrows. For broken are the lives and cruel are the sorrows. Contingencies facing the poorer members of our calling are not generally understood by the outside public. They do not know how precarious is the life. In an engagement to-day, gone to oblivion to-morrow; a play fails, or comes to the end of its run, and new combinations are necessary; so out into the cold many of them go, and out in the cold shiver and starve for many months waiting for fresh possibilities. The stage is not like commerce; commerce must go on; be the bulk large or small, commodities must be exchanged; the world's marts must be kept open, and the poorer followers of commerce, even though they may not have any special adaptability to their duties, can, as a rule, with constant application and ordinary industry, find their fitting reward. Not so the poorer members of our calling. They are but the passengers in the ship of life, who may sometimes beautify, but can never navigate; and, when storms and troubles come, they are the first to be cast adrift, to be left to their unhappy fate to sink, but for the haven it is in your power to find. And I beg you not to let your heart be preached down by prudential saws. Shut your ears to the cold-blooded comment that the artist's poverty is the fitting reward for the artist's improvidence. That is the rock of offence that retards or diverts the stream of benevolence which otherwise would irrigate our desert places. You do not know this people if you think the charge against them true. Only he whose experience is small, or whose brain is dull, or whose heart is cold, fails to recognise Bohemia's quick responsiveness to calls for help one to the other, and to strangers, too. It is this lavish charity in the past that often makes them the object of it in the present. No, gentlemen, no, when detractors tell you that such charity is an idle sacrifice of your money, tell them in return that such were the reflections of Sir Bedivere when the dying Arthur bade him cast into the mere the brand Excalibur. You know the story told by Tennyson in verse of deathless majesty. How the knight gazed on the noble weapon, with its blade of the finest temper, its hilt blazing with jewels, and how the longer he gazed entranced, the more convinced he was of the idleness of the sacrifice, crying—"What good if this were done? What harm undone?" How twice he failed to execute his mission, but the third time, shutting his eyes to the cunning workmanship and priceless jewels, triumphed over himself, flung the weapon into the mere, and went back rejoicing to his dying lord. You will not have forgotten how, as the glorious Excalibur "dipped the surface of the mere," a hand, clothed in bright "samite, mystic, wonderful," drew it down into the depths. And you know the effect of that knightly deed. I ask you to cast your possessions into the mere, beneath whose waves lie shattered and submerged the hopes and lives of our poor brethren. Unlock your treasure-house, don't look too long or lovingly at the gems with which your possessions are laden. Fling each one of you your Excalibur into that vast and bitter sea of human misery which ceaselessly throbs and tosses, and with many voices moans around you. I plead to the soul within you. Beneath the surface-granite of everyone of you lies hidden a golden chamber of romance. I knock at the door of that golden chamber. I exhort you to make with the sunshine of benevolence a glorious rainbow of human tears against the black background of misery's clouds. And beggar that I am for others, I now beg for myself. It is in the very nature of things that I cannot occupy this chair again: it is in the nature of things that a short time hence will see my withdrawal from a career to which I have devoted so many happy years. You responded nobly to me in '98, respond nobly on this my last appearance in this character. I want to delve into your hearts and burrow in your pockets, striking rich veins of goodness in the one and of gold in the other. I want to be your auctioneer to knock down to you so much happiness for so much money, I want you to have such an outburst of generosity that the memory of it will be lived up to and emulated in the distant days to come, when, from this chair other lips than mine shall call and other hearts than yours respond.

Mr STUART OGILVIE, in proposing "The Drama," made a reference to Mr. Bernard Shaw's play The Doctor's Dilemma, and remarked that the good doctor in the piece had to make up his mind whether he would save the life of the great artist or of the good man. The public stood in the position of a doctor. They had to make up their mind whether they would save the life of the good showmen or the great actor. There had always been a great actor, but even Roscius found that there was an Ethiopian lion-tamer who seriously interfered with his business. Sir Charles Wyndham's infectious gaiety and vivacity had become a national asset, nor could his wonderful vein of pathos, of which they had had evidence that night, and in the theatre, be lightly regarded. Then it had always been a great shock to those who reverenced the memory of the great one who had departed from amongst them that the house which was associated with his name and his great work in the drama should have been, after all, converted into a common house of varieties. And although another great worker in the cause of the drama whom they all loved—their old and respected friend Mr. Beerbohm Tree—had raised with his own hands a temple in the West where all that was best of our greatest classics was presented, still, there was something in tradition, reverence and love snatched from us when the old Lyceum passed away. Sir Henry Irving had desired to see a municipal theatre founded upon the principle of the great Continental countries, but, seemingly, the time had not yet come for that. They might, however, take heart of grace in the movement which was making itself felt in certain parts of the country—he referred to the work which Mr. Louis N. Parker was carrying out throughout the kingdom. Mr. Parker's pageants at Sherborne and Warwick would be remembered. Next year he (Mr. Parker) proposed to give the country another artistic treat at the ancient and historic town of Bury St. Edmund's. There had been over 3,000 amateurs in the pageants, and every one of them became an ardent supporter of the drama. Let it be also considered what Mr. Pinero had done with His House in Order, not to mention the efforts of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones and Mr. Haddon Chambers on the other side of the Channel. So long as they had these veterans and the promising younger ones coming out, like Mr. Alfred Sutro, he (the speaker) did not think there need be any fear for the health of the drama.

Mr. HARRY PAULTON replied for "The Drama" in an amusing speech. He began by stating that he had not attempted to prepare a speech, as he had been dragged into the part only a few minutes previously. He thought that Sir Charles Wyndham and the other speakers had said all that could be said on the subject of the drama. A good deal had been said on the other side of the Atlantic about theatrical affairs in England, but so far as the drama was concerned, he thought they were going on very well indeed. It had been the custom for years to deplore the decadence of the drama, but he could not see the reason of it.

Mr. CHARLES CRUIKSHANKS, in responding on behalf of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, said:—It is my privilege to-night to respond on behalf of the Fund, and to thank you most heartily for your generous response to the eloquent appeal of your chairman. From my position in connection with the various schemes now on foot for the amelioration of the condition of the actor of to-day, it might be supposed that I should, in some measure, refer to those matters, but such, however, is not my intention. I have simply to respond for the Fund, and shall confine my few remarks to that subject, and to that subject only. I take this opportunity of publicly thanking Sir Charles Wyndham for his kindness in accepting the position of President of the Fund. I thank him on my own behalf and on behalf of nearly half of the committee who administer that Fund (which is so generously supplied by the members of the theatrical profession and the general public) who are present to-night. I have no wish to trespass upon the domain of our friend, Lord Weardale, who will presently propose the health of our Chairman, but I feel I should be failing in my duty if I did not take this opportunity of telling you what a good and staunch friend of the Fund Sir Charles Wyndham has always been. His eloquent appeal of to-night will dwell long in our memories, and I venture to assert that in the history of these functions in the future it will never be surpassed. The result of that appeal I will tell you later. I want to draw your attention to a few facts. Some few years ago those who love and revere our Chairman celebrated his coming-of-age as a West End manager by giving two never-to-be-forgotten performances in one day as a complimentary benefit. Those performances realised over £2,500. What did Sir Charles do with the money? Keep it for himself? No—he handed over the entire proceeds, including an odd fourpence, to the Actors' Benevolent Fund. Again, too, when some of us, who think we know something, thought it was advisable to annex the Covent Garden Fund for the benefit of the profession, we, with the aid of our hon. solicitor, commenced proceedings to that end; we knew we needed financial assistance, and from whence came that assistance? From Sir Charles Wyndham. On a memorable afternoon, in his own theatre, we raised upwards of £600, and Sir Charles was under pledge to me to supply a similar amount if needed. Luckily it was not required. Here I should like to state that my old friend and manager, Mr. George Conquest, thought so well of the cause that he promised me all the financial assistance which might be further required. With two such friends, Sir Charles on the one side and George Conquest on the other, I was content. We won the fight, with the result that the A.B.F. benefited to the extent of £40,000, and the Royal General Theatrical Fund to the extent of £20,000. Further, Sir Charles recently charmed London with a performance of David Garrick, and being well pleased with the result, he repeated the performance for the benefit of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, which resulted in a gain to that institution of upwards of £420. At this late hour I do not propose to weary you, but to close these brief observations by setting before you a simple sum in arithmetic for you to solve at your leisure. Four hundred and twenty pounds—plus a sum of £500 received from the executors of our dear friend and comrade, the late J. L. Toole—plus the splendid collection of to-night, has brought to the Fund the phenomenal sum of nearly £3,000.

LORD WEARWELL, in toasting the Chairman, asked the company to drink to the health of his friend and the friend of everyone, Sir Charles Wyndham. It was difficult to look back, as he (the speaker) could do, for many years without calling to mind in so many characters which have impressed themselves upon the mind the charming impersonation of Sir Charles Wyndham. One of the earliest characters in which he had the pleasure of seeing Sir Charles was when the latter was trifling with the affections of Peg Woffington. He was glad to think that Sir Charles could still claim, with distinction and success, the affection of everybody with whom he came in contact. They had been told that this was the last time that Sir Charles would fulfil the office of chairman at the annual dinner of the Fund, but it was to be sincerely hoped that eight years hence as eight years ago and on this occasion, he would again occupy the chair. In all the successive steps which Sir Charles had made in order to arrive at the great position he held to-day there was nothing in his career upon which he would dwell with so much satisfaction as his connection with this great Fund—a Fund which he had created and helped to sustain. Sir Charles had rightly said that Bohemians had a great heart. He (the speaker) knew of no body of men who were so self-sacrificing in their devotion to their poorer brothers and sisters as the theatrical profession. It was to be hoped that Sir Charles Wyndham would long adorn the theatrical profession; long might he remain the President of the Fund; and long might he remain the friend of all who look to it for help.

The CHAIRMAN gracefully acknowledged the compliment. He had to thank Lord Wearwell and Mr. Cruikshanks for the kind things they had said about him; and he also had to express his gratitude for the generous manner in which the company had responded to his appeal. It was with special gratification that he could mention that he had been notified by the Lord Mayor that since the latter entered the room his Lordship had redoubled his already generous contribution to the Fund. Not only had the Lord Mayor done that, but he had dragged his unfortunate Sheriff into the net. Mr. Beerbohm Tree had sent a handsome donation, along with a note in the form of a poem. Opinions might be divided as to whether this could be called poetry, but in order to make it resemble verse it was necessary to emphasise the last word in each line. The "poem" was as follows:—

Hail! President Sir Charles! May you for years,
Our Prince of Laughter, help to dry the tears
Of the poor player. May the cup that cheers
But not inebriate be ever yours. No fears
Of slumps in Consols, Rand Mines, and De Beers
Disturb you! May you find amid "Hear, hears"
Otium cum dignitate in the Peers!

The CHAIRMAN next proposed a vote of thanks to the artists, to whom they all had been much indebted for the entertainments given during the evening. Mr. J. H. Maunder suitably responded on behalf of the artists.

In the very delightful items of music and song with which the speeches were interspersed Mr. Ben Davies gave his admirable rendering of "Come into the garden, Maud" and "The Flower Song"; Miss Phyllis Lett sang in pleasing style "A summer night"; Mr. Robert Radford entertained his hearers with a couple of performances, one of which was "I'm a roamer"; and the Westminster Singers were heard to advantage in several part-songs, including "O peaceful night" and "Ole Joe." Mr. J. H. Maunder ably officiated as director of the music.

At the conclusion the chairman announced that Mr. Joel had forwarded £25 and that Mr. Honey had collected £77 9s.

For list of donations see another page.

SCALA THEATRE.

The matinée at the Scala Theatre on Monday afternoon in aid of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and allied institutions was extremely well patronised. The programme was an excellent one both as to quantity and quality, the only exception to be noted in regard to "quality" was a long and wearisome duologue by Mrs. A. Bradshaw, entitled Ladies in Council. The characters consisted of the president and secretary of a women's club, and the conversation which is carried on between these two worthies is such as would be an insult to the intelligence of the average washerwoman. If what Mrs. Albert Bradshaw gives us is a fair specimen of the twaddle that is spoken at clubs reserved for the fair sex, then we can understand the laments of several ladies of our acquaintance as to the atmosphere of inanity in which feminine club-life is enveloped. It was a pity that so much good delivery as the two ladies—Miss Grace Jean Crocker and Mrs. Bradshaw—proved themselves capable of should have been wasted on such rubbish at Ladies in Council.

As to the rest of the programme, Miss Genevieve Ward recited, with that wonderful dramatic fervour to which she has in the past accustomed us, the lines of "The Convict Woman of Port Blair," and Mr. Laurence Irving threw himself with vigour and expression into his recitation of Macaulay's "Battle of Naseby." Both the popular artists had to respond to an encore. Miss Winifred Hart-Dyke, attired in a radiant robe, performed in graceful fashion a dance from Amasis; and Miss Margaret Cooper gave a delightful rendering of, among other things, "My heart's at your feet" to her own pianoforte accompaniment.

The most amusing feature of the afternoon's entertainment was furnished by the acting of Mr. Charles Hawtrey and Miss Florence Sinclair in the one-act play, Time is Money. This was given in place of Mrs. G. Penn Gaskell's playlet, entitled Run In, which was withdrawn. Mr. Hawtrey's characterisation of the wooer who was unable to pay the cabman who had driven him to the house of the lady upon whom he had bestowed his affections caused the audience to be convulsed with merriment, and the part of the girl was enacted in delightful fashion by Miss Sinclair. Miss Nancy Price demonstrated her skill as a tragic actress in a couple of recitations; and Miss Geraldine Ulmar and Mr. Jack Thompson were heard to advantage in the charming love duet, "Won't you buy?" Little Miss Iris Hawkins danced in ever engaging and graceful manner; Mr. Henry Neville brought his well-matured elocutionary talents to bear upon the recitation "Roger and I"; and Miss Lilian Braithwaite agreeably acquitted herself in a like direction. Others who figured on the programme were Miss Angela Hope, Mr. Chas. Angelo, Miss Irene Lyne, Mr. Frederic Dale, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald, Mr. Walter Kirby, Miss Clara Alexander, Mr. Ernest Shand, Miss Maggie May, Signor Umberto Salvi, Miss Marie Dainton, Madame Cleaver-Simon, Mr. Winifred Shine, Miss Alice Crawford, Mr. Chas. Capper, Miss Vera Le Fleming, and Mr. Baker Wynne. The orchestra was ably directed by Mr. J. H. Alexandra, and Mr. Wilfred H. Simpson acted as stage-manager, while Mr. Sydney Stoeger was the accompanist.

Mr. Otho Stuart's management of the Adelphi Theatre does him infinite credit. As far as one can judge from the reports which have reached us of the German and Austrian subsidised houses, Mr. Stuart offers the British public an entertainment planned on much the same lines. His aim is high, his enterprise is artistic. The performances are good all round, the mounting is beautifully adequate without being excessive, and great care is given to the delivery of the text. Yet, with all the advantages of encouraging criticism and admirable acting, The Virgin Goddess had to be withdrawn after a brief run, and Mr. Stuart has fallen back upon a reproduction of his fine presentation of A Midsummer Night's Dream, which was given at the Adelphi on November 25 of last year.

There are few plays of Shakespeare's of whose dramatic and literary history we know less than of this one. It is only by internal evidence that the date, 1595, can be approximately fixed as that when the play was produced. We have a general belief that A Midsummer Night's Dream was one of Shakespeare's earlier works, and that it was in his time and in the first half of the seventeenth century extremely popular. In the eighteenth it fell into the hands of adapters, and was mangled unmercifully. It was probably one of the versions which Pepys, witnessing it in 1662, pronounced to be "the most insipid, ridiculous play" he ever saw in his life. Then, in 1692, the comedy was made into an opera, with music by Purcell. It was the old story of over-lavish outlay in mounting; for we are told that "the expences in setting it out being so great, the Company got very little by it." In 1755 an opera called The Fairies was done at Drury Lane; Garrick is supposed to have prepared Shakespeare's work as a libretto. Later on it was cut down into an afterpiece, "Theseus and all the serious characters" being omitted. Another version, by Reynolds, was offered in 1816, with Liston as Bottom and Emery as Quince. Phelps revived the Dream at Sadler's Wells; and it was presented, with Mendelssohn's music, by Charles Kean in 1856, Puck being played by Miss Ellen Terry. There is no play of Shakespeare's which needs more judgment to mount than A Midsummer Night's Dream. For the essence of the enjoyment which is derived springs from the imagination. In Shakespeare's time a great deal of the old nature-worship still lingered in the instincts, if not in the creed, of the people. The May-pole—the "filthie idole," as the old Puritan called it—symbolised the old faun-ish feeling; and Shakespeare, when he wrote A Midsummer Night's Dream, must easily have revived in himself the spell of moonlight and the mysterious solitudes of the Warwickshire woods on a warm night in summer. The task of the modern producer of the play is to kindle in the breasts of jaded Londoners some of this mystery, to make us believe in flimy, fantastic fairydom, to help the wizard playwright to work his charms. The sprites must always be a difficulty. Take juveniles for your Oberon and your Titania, and the "childish treble" injures the idea of adultism which is conveyed in every speech of the King and Queen of the fays. Entrust the parts to grown-up actors and actresses, and their stature contradicts their fairyhood. Of the two, it is better to encounter the latter; and this is what Mr. Stuart has done at the Adelphi. He has again placed the part of Oberon in the hands of Mr. Walter Hampden, whose delivery of the lines has all the limpid clearness and delicate inflexion that could be desired, and who, happy in the possession of a graceful figure, carries himself quite in kingly fashion. Miss Thyrza Norman replaces Miss Roxy Barton as Titania, and does full justice to the quaint supremacy and airy importance of the Fairy Queen. Miss Nita Faydon is delightfully arch and active as Puck, and makes Robin Goodfellow the most mischievous and mocking of imps. It is an easy task for an actress of Miss Lily Brayton's calibre to resume her impersonation of Helena; but even in a simple and agreeable rôle like this Miss Brayton's excellent elocution and complete command of her resources are conspicuous factors of an entirely satisfying and amusing embodiment. There is not much to be done, perhaps, with those two Athenian "walking gentlemen," Lysander and Demetrius, but Mr. Hignett and Mr. Penny fill the parts with all the necessary spirit, and are bold, energetic, and in earnest. Mr. Alfred Brydone once more endows Theseus with a regal urbanity and a richness of tone which are both appropriate and acceptable; and Miss Rose Hersee's Hermia is a very winning impersonation—bright, expressive, and with sufficient firmness and fire. Miss Constance Robertson's Hippolyta is a superb sample of rich exuberance and gentle grandeur, and she speaks her lines with admirable boldness and emphasis; and Mr. Caleb Porter renders valuable service as Egeus, the touches of character introduced being excellent. Mr. J. Fritz Russell deserves warm praise for his remarkably clear and cultured delivery as Philostrate; and Miss Elizabeth Parkina again employs her sweet and well-trained voice with enjoyable results as the Singing Fairy. But, of course, the idol of the evening—the one and irresistible—is Mr. Oscar Asche, the representative of Bottom. The audience applauds him to the echo, and deservedly; for a more complete carrying out of the true conception of the character has, we may venture to aver, seldom, if ever, been seen on the stage. Mr. Asche has good supporters in Mr. Charles Rock, a most characteristic Quince; Mr. George Harker as Snug; Mr. G. Kay Souper as Flute; Mr. Henry Kitts as Snout; and Mr. R. F. Anson as Starveling. Miss Ethel James, Miss Mollie Law, and Miss Ethel Streeter are heard very agreeably as Singing Fairies; and Messrs. Hicks and Harker's scenery is again immensely admired.

(COPYRIGHT.)

In these columns it is proposed to give a strictly alphabetical arrangement of the titles of plays produced during the last fifty years. It will be the most complete list ever published, and should prove invaluable to authors desiring to discover whether a certain title has ever been used, and when. To members of the dramatic profession it will be useful in determining the dates of plays in which they have achieved successes. Our readers are politely requested to advise us of any omission or inaccuracy which they may notice.

This list as soon as complete will be published in cheap book form.

THE WILLIAM MORGAN JUBILEE.

A remarkable event in the annals of provincial amusements was celebrated on the 30th ult., when a banquet was given at the Grand Hotel, Scarborough, to commemorate the jubilee of Mr. Wm. Morgan, J.P., who had completed a career of fifty years as a theatrical caterer. The dinner, which had been organised by a committee including the Earl of Londesborough, Mr. Edward Terry, and other influential gentlemen, was presided over by Alderman V. Fowler, J.P., and among those present were Messrs. Fras. Goodricke, of Scarborough, Geo. H. Harrop (Blackpool), A. M. Hubner (Bridlington), T. Sergenson (Blackpool), and J. W. Chapman (Doncaster).

After the loyal toasts had been honoured, the Chairman made a presentation to Mr. Morgan, consisting of a silver epergne in Louis XV. style, and two silver candelabra, which are copies of the original Chippendale. The inscription on the former was as follows:—

"Presented to William Morgan, Esq., J.P., thrice Mayor of Scarborough, by a few friends at Scarborough, Blackpool, Bradford, and elsewhere, to show their admiration for him, and to commemorate his fiftieth year of service as a public amusement caterer. Scarborough, Nov. 30, 1906."

The Chairman, in the course of his speech, said that no one could fulfil the duty with greater pleasure than himself. He had had the privilege of knowing Mr. Morgan for many years, during which they had been intimately associated in the municipal and political life of that ancient borough. Three times had Mr. Morgan worthily filled the post of Chief Magistrate, and the years of his Mayoralty had been marked not only by Royal Pageant, but by many kindly acts on his part, which included donations to the Hospital, the Charity Organisation Society, and many acts of benevolence to private individuals. By tact, sterling common-sense, and manly uprightness, he had deserved honour from his fellow-townsmen, and it gave him the greatest pleasure to make that presentation as a mark of the esteem in which Mr. Morgan was held by those who had been associated with him.

Mr. Morgan, who spoke with evident emotion, evoked a scene of much enthusiasm when he rose to return thanks for the very handsome presentation. He was sure that if he had been able to make a speech equal to what it ought to have been on that occasion nothing would have given him greater pleasure. But, as they had heard, the doctor had warned him it would be even dangerous to do so, and he had decided, particularly after the doctor's advice, not to trouble them with a long speech, but just to satisfy himself with a few remarks. Fifty years was a long time to go back. Many things had occurred during that time, and he dared say he was expected to say something in connection with the various changes which had taken place in public amusements. Fifty years ago theatrical performances began at half-past six or seven, and concluded just before midnight. There were then about three pieces a night, and he believed he was right in saying that the brilliant actress, Miss Amy Sedgwick, played fifteen parts in one week when she appeared at Bradford. In looking over an old file of play-bills that he had of the old Adelphi in London, he saw—doors open 6.30 p.m., performance commences at 7 p.m., and will conclude before midnight. That was very different to now, when one could get dinner in town at a quarter to eight and see the beginning of the play. Of course in the early days it was all stock company business, and such a thing as a piece running for a number of nights was out of the question. He remembered that the first piece produced in Bradford which ran for a week was The Tempest. He remembered the cast, although it was over fifty years ago. Ariel was Miss Julia St. George; Miranda, Miss Nunn; Prospero, Mr. Hamilton; Caliban, Mr. Lysander Thompson; Trinkilo, Mr. Chas. Rice; and Stephano, Mr. Phillips. It would, therefore, be seen that the artists had to study very closely and very hard the parts they had to play. Many things had occurred to change the entire style of entertainments. He remembered the time when there was a Coliseum in Regent-street, where a representation of an eruption of Mount Etna was produced. And he remembered the Polytechnic—now both gone and superseded by what was called more up-to-date entertainment. He had been asked that evening whether he had ever produced an earthquake in Bradford? Well, in 1877 he did produce an earthquake. This was at the Princess's Theatre in the production of Sardanapalus. The late Mr. Charles Calvert was the man who produced the earthquake for him, and he did not study a man's pocket when he was doing anything. It was an expensive affair, and although people came knowing what was going to happen, and that there was to be a terrible storm, still, when it came on they were frightened, and some of them made for the door. He remembered that shortly afterwards Mapleson's Royal Italian Opera Company visited the Prince's Theatre, Bradford. The chorus was wholly composed of Italians, none of whom could speak English. At the morning rehearsal he remembered his master carpenter came to him and said, "Guv'nor shall we have a little bit of fun with them? Shall we put on the thunder?" He said, "All right," little dreaming of the sequel. When the thunder was suddenly put on the poor Italians, not understanding what had been done, went frantic with fright. They rushed wildly in all directions, and really thought the place was coming down on them. As they did not understand English, no one could explain to them that it was only a joke. He could have given many interesting anecdotes if he had been in better health. During his long life he had had several very happy days, but that evening's gathering provided him with one of his proudest moments, because it was a tribute to himself personally. He took the banquest and presentation as a big compliment to him personally as William Morgan, and he accepted it as such. That was the proudest day of the several happy days which he had called the proudest day of his life. He was quite sure it would be highly appreciated by Mrs. Morgan. He thanked them all for their valuable presentation, and hoped during the little time he had to live that he would always be able to look at it with pleasure. He would treasure it as long as he lived. Afterwards it would be a memorial of the kindly feeling towards him to which reference had been made.

FUNERAL OF J. T. SHERIDAN.

On Tuesday the funeral of the late Mr. John T. Sheridan, of Vine Cottage, 50, Albert-road, Peckham, electrician of the Waldorf Theatre, took place in Forest Hill Cemetery in the family grave. The Rev. R. F. H. Hingston, of St. Mark's Church, Harder's-road, conducted a special service, the reverend gentleman having been a constant visitor to the bedside of the deceased, as was also Mr. James Petter, the Scripture reader attached to the church.

A sad feature of Mr. Sheridan's demise is that he was only thirty-four years of age, and was married only five months ago, being then, to all appearances, in robust health; some eleven weeks ago he became ill, and rapid consumption developed, and in spite of every effort made to resist this terrible disease and to secure the most expert attention by Mr. Sheridan's family, Mr. Cecil Paget, of the Crown Theatre, Mr. Coltson, Secretary to the Actors' Benevolent Fund, and the committee of the Heads of Departments' Association, all efforts were unavailing, and death ensued on Nov. 27.

A large number of floral and other tributes testified to the respect with which the deceased was regarded and the sympathy felt for his family; among these were a floral heart of violets and hyacinths, "In loving memory of my darling husband Tom, from his heart-broken wife, Alice"; a similar token from "Mother and Janie"; a wreath from "Ruth and Pip" (brother and sister-in-law); floral cross, with "Tom" in violets, from George and Kitty Walker; a large white shamrock, from David and Annie (brother and sister-in-law); large floral Irish harp, with broken strings, from the staffs in the flys, properties, and stage departments, Waldorf Theatre; floral anchor from Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cartwright; a wreath from "The dear old Dublin Boys" (Messrs. Kerlie Dever, Thomas French, Wm. Nesbitt, Wm. Clarke, M. Murphy, and Arthur Woodworth); floral anchor from Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Brett (Crown Theatre); floral cross from Alice and Bob Huertson; floral cross from Ethel and Will Whitaker; floral baskets and bouquets from "Little Ruthsie and Harry" (niece and nephew), and Mons. and Madame Smith. Other beautiful wreaths were sent by the Moore Family, Minnie, Gabriel and Lucien, of Paris; Miss Sissons, Mrs. Maynard and family, Charles and Ada Torkington, John Harpur, the Heads of Stage Departments, "With deepest sympathy and regret for the loss of a good comrade," Jack Mellish and J. Barker, the Crown Theatre Boys, "In loving memory of Tom," Mr. S. Greenboam and others.

The coffin was borne to the grave by four Irishmen, all intimate friends of the deceased—George Walker, Walter Woodworth, William Nesbitt, and Albert Moore. The chief mourners were Mrs. J. T. Sheridan (the widow), Mrs. D. Sheridan (mother), Janie, Philip, and David Sheridan (brothers and sisters), Ruth and Annie Sheridan (sisters-in-law), and Walter Woodworth (cousin). There was a large number of friends at the graveside, among whom were Misses Daisy and Sarah Moore, Mr. Albert Moore, Mrs. Hayward, Mr. Chas. Torkington, Mr. James Potter, Mr. H. J. Breet, Mr. Ed. Wade (Crown Theatre), Mr. T. Wood (Lyric Theatre), Mr. J. Langham (Gaiety Theatre), Messrs. S. Nobbs, A. George, Jas. Marston, and Fred Chappell (Crown Theatre), Messrs. R. Huertson and Wm. Nesbitt (Waldorf Theatre), Mr. William Whitaker, Mons. Gabriel Couillard, and Lucien Lichtilan (Paris), and other friends from London theatres and music halls. The funeral arrangements were carried out by Messrs. E. and I. Dunn, of Peckham and Camberwell.

The late Mr. J. T. Sheridan served his apprenticeship to the electrical engineering business in Dublin, and first became connected with this department of theatrical work at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, when that theatre was under the management of the late Mr. Michael Gunn, jun., by whom he was engaged through Mr. E. W. Royce, jun., Mr. Gunn's stage-manager and producer in 1894. Mr. Sheridan relinquished this post to take over a large contract, and was succeeded by his brother, Mr. Philip Sheridan, now electrician at the Crown Theatre, Peckham. Mr. T. Sheridan returned to theatre work in 1897, when he secured the position of electrician at the Royal Theatre, Dublin, where he remained about eighteen months, after which he was engaged as the electrician for the New Theatre Royal, Richmond. He remained there three years, and was then engaged by Mr. J. A. E. Malone, on behalf of Mr. J. C. Williamson, to proceed to Australia on a two years' contract, an engagement that was extended to three years. Mr. Sheridan returned to England last year to visit his father, who was seriously ill, but, unfortunately, his father died a few days before his arrival, a circumstance which Mr. Sheridan deeply lamented, little dreaming he was so soon to follow his father, and be reunited with him in the same grave. Mr. Sheridan travelled all over Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand with Mr. Williamson's companies, and made numerous friends in those countries, who will be sorry to hear of his death. Mrs. Sheridan (Miss Alice Stanlake) was also a member of Mr. Williamson's company, and it was while on tour together that she and her late husband became engaged to be married, and shortly after her arrival in this country they were married, on June 27 last. Mr. Sheridan was an energetic member of this year's Theatrical London Sports, and coached the Waldorf team in the competition for The Era tug-of-war shield. He was also hon. secretary for the Theatrical Regatta, and a member of the Committee of the Heads of Departments' Association, so in the world of theatrical sport and associations formed for the welfare of the craft there are many who will miss this genial and manly spirit that has passed away so suddenly and on the verge of anticipated years of happiness.

BERLIN, Thursday, Dec. 6.—Dr. Fulda's new work is in his very happiest vein. The Mysterious King is in the same style as the successful Talisman as regards graceful verse and romantic "milieu," but the author goes even one better this time in good-humoured persiflage and witticisms. It may at once be stated that the reception was an enthusiastic one, Herr Fulda being called before the curtain again and again. That the play will have a long and successful run is a safe prediction. The action passes in Caerlon, the capital of the ancient Britons. King Artus the Tenth is a weak and foolish man, completely under the influence of the Duke Urgan and other Court officials. He is, in fact, only a figure-head, and is only seen by his subjects when he goes out in his Sedan chair. Artus finally dies; there is no heir to the throne, and the Court minions are at their wits' end. Urgan's pretty daughter, Princess Sigune, never seeing a man worthy of the name at Court, has chosen Peredur, a handsome shepherd, for her lover, and Peredur saves the situation. He advises that a dummy Artus be carried about in the Sedan chair, and as the people will never know the difference all complications will be avoided. The advice is followed, but before long the citizens of Caerlon demand the King's marriage, in order that an heir may be born. Sigune declares herself willing to play the part of the Queen to the dummy on condition that she may wed Peredur behind the scenes. So it comes about that while the King is being secretly buried the fresh young face of the Queen smiles beside the dummy in the Sedan chair in answer to the plaudits of the people. I have seldom witnessed a more striking scene of the kind in any play than this. Matters go smoothly for some time; the desired heir is born, and Peredur, with his strong common sense, is a power at Court. Now comes the hated foe of the land, demanding a tribute of 200 youths and maidens, and Peredur rises to the occasion. Putting on the famous golden armour of the King, he leads the people against the enemy, and is victorious. The deception is finally discovered—the dummy tumbling one day out of the Sedan chair, and the people rise in rebellion. Instead of being grateful to Peredur for saving them from danger, they are indignant that they are under an obligation to anyone not possessing the divine right of a King. So they place upon the throne a second figure-head, the weak-minded Lanzelot, and Peredur, with wife and child and a few faithful followers, goes off to find his luck in a more grateful country. The interpretation of the piece was as satisfactory as any author could desire, Herr Marr and Fräulein Wuest being foremost in the first-rate cast. The mounting was in the customary befitting taste of the Lessing Theatre.

The Theatre des Westens made a decided hit with the production of Weinberger's operetta Der Schmetterling last Friday. It is not a new work, having been given some years ago at the Metropol, on which stage it was even more suitable, as its character leans towards the vaudeville. The plot is particularly light and flimsy, but the music very melodious and pleasing—much better than we are accustomed to in the so-called Viennese operettas. The scene is laid in Monte Carlo. Jeanette, the daughter of Mme. Millefleur, a "parfumeuse," is about to be married to Pierre Rosefleur, a gay young spark in the same line of business. Mme. Millefleur is the most terrible of mothers-in-law, and Pierre is followed about by Loisette Lalo, a pretty circus rider whom he has once rashly promised to wed. The Mayor unites the lovers, but, after a week's honeymooning, it transpires that the marriage was not legal, owing to the fact that the mayor was no longer in office at the time. Pierre is nearly persuaded to marry Loisette—she having come into a nice little fortune in the meantime—but ultimately his heart turns again to Jeanette, and all ends well. Pierre is the butterfly of the title, and the rôle being taken by the clever comedian Fritz Werner, it made its mark. Fräulein Mary Hagen (Loisette), Fräulein Linda (Jeanette), and Fräulein Gaston in the rôle of the mother-in-law were all capital, and a word of praise must not be omitted to Fräulein Gruenwald's charming singing and acting as hotel boy. The mounting was exceedingly tasteful, and many of the numbers were encored, while enthusiastic calls for the composer ensued, and flowers for the chief artists were handed up. In a word, it was a big success.

Rosmersholm has reached its fiftieth performance at the Lessing Theatre since its successful revival. It is, perhaps, the most popular of Ibsen's works here, being given to better houses than even Nora or Die Wildente. The success at the Lessing is due in a great measure to the faultless cast, in which Fräulein Irene Triesch (Mrs. Frederic Lamond) is particularly fine as Rebecca West. Notwithstanding the production of several new pieces, Rosmersholm triumphantly holds its place in the Lessing bill.

Herr Sigmund Lautenburg, who was for many years lessee and manager of the Residenz Theatre and later on of the Neues, has been lying low for some time resting and biding his opportunity. Now comes the news that he has become director of the Raimund Theatre at Vienna. The Raimund ranks at the first theatre in the Austrian capital after the Imperial Burg.

Die Fiende, Maxim Gorki's new play, has been withdrawn from the Kleines Theatre, owing, it is said, to the dangers and difficulties connected with the complicated apparatus used in the mounting, to which the police authorities are opposed. Whether this be the real reason or not, certain it is that little is lost to the public. Oscar Wilde's popular play Ein Idealer Gatte is again filling the bill nightly.

The new Figaro Theatre, which was to be opened in November, will not be ready till Christmas, and the manager has gone on a successful tour in South Germany with his company to fill up the interim.

There is an unusually attractive programme at the Wintergarten Theatre this month, and perhaps the most appreciated feature is the ballet scene of the John Tiller Troupe. This act varies; sometimes it is In Sunny Spain, sometimes The Harvest Home. Both are equally charming. In The Harvest Home ballet the music by Cuthbert Clarke is very melodious, and the graceful dancing and delightful singing of the Sisters Iris are rewarded with deafening applause each night. The costumes are in the most tasteful colours, each set of dances surpassing the last in beauty, while the "pretty Engländerinnen" have won their way to susceptible German hearts.

Miss Ruth St. Denis is still giving her original performance, and the turns of the Millman Trio, O. K. Sato, the Bros. Permané, and Angelo's statuary groups are among the best in the excellent programme.

CASTLE THEATRE, RICHMOND.

On Thursday, Dec. 6, the Musical Comedy, entitled "FLORODORA."

Possessing all the elements that go to spell success, and boasting a past of which it might well be proud, Mr. J. Bannister Howard's company, in Florodora, met with a richly-merited enthusiastic reception here; the various "numbers" were redemanded, and everyone worked to win a popular verdict—and succeeded. Mr. Gus Danby scored hugely as Anthony Tweedlepunch; his quaint witticisms and his "business" were alike excellent; his song, "Phrenology," was applauded to the echo. To Miss Daisy Lake fell the onerous rôle of Dolores, and very admirably was it interpreted; her vocalisation is of a very refined and talented order, and she was one of the successes of the evening. Miss Rosa Sullivan made an admirable Lady Holyrood; her fine voice was heard to perfection in "I want to marry a millionaire," and again in "Tact." Quite prettily did Miss Dorothy Dempter play Angela Gilfain; the duet with Arthur, "Galloping," was encored, and her other numbers were equally well rendered. Mr. Howard V. Cropton played unobtrusively, but none the less effectively, as Frank Abercoed, and his song, "Under the palm," met with a vociferous reception. Mr. H. C. Jove did remarkably well as Captain Arthur Donegal; the part does not bristle with opportunities, but he certainly missed none of them; a clever little character-study was the Leandro of Mr. C. A. Road Night; and especial mention may be made of Miss Louie Arnold and Miss Dorothy Dance. In Act II. the singing of Miss Dorothy Dempter, in "My starlight queen," resulted in a torrent of applause. The opera has been admirably rehearsed, and the concerted parts reflect no little credit on Mr. W. E. Brightwell. The acting-manager, Mr. Arthur Howard, is responsible for the arrangements in the front of the house, and does so much to enhance the popularity of the theatre generally.

At the Bijou Theatre, Bayswater, on Tuesday, Dec. 4, were produced for copyright purposes two new and original one-act plays by E. Hamilton-Moore, entitled A Man's Shirt and Love and Hate in Corsica.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

IN DOUBT.—No; not necessarily. It is rather a question of fact to be ascertained from all the circumstances, which we do not know. Again, there appears to be no legal consideration for the possible giving up of rights, and the absence of this is in your favour.

BOTTOMLEY.—(1) A comedy in four acts, entitled Frocks and Frills, by Sydney Grundy, founded on Scribe and Légouvé's Les Doigts de Fée, was produced at the Haymarket Theatre on Jan. 2, 1902. (2) Joseph Entangled, *a play in three acts, by H. E. MURRAY.—Our Portsmouth correspondent supplies the following information:—The Blue Bell Music Hall (not Old Bell) was destroyed by fire on the morning of Dec. 25, 1890 (the second time; the first occurred under Mr. Hughes' management in 1878). It was never rebuilt as a music hall, the present Empire at Landport taking its place and licence. Therefore, the last time it was opened to the public was on Dec. 23, 1890. On Christmas Eve there was only a rehearsal for the Boxing Day production.

THE well-known firm of Lazarus, of Great Eastern-street, E.C., was responsible for the particularly fine seating of His Majesty's Theatre, Aberdeen, which opened last Monday. The stalls and dress circle are provided with patent automatic tip-up chairs, luxuriously fitted with deep backs of the easy chair kind, and upholstered in bright ruby velvet with gold embroidered number worked in each back. Two hundred and fifty chairs of a similar type, with backs not quite so deep, to correspond, are fixed in the pit-stalls, the whole being en suite, and presenting a very fine effect.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER,
BY
ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).
Chapter I.
COPYRIGHT AS OPPOSED TO PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter III.
INFRINGEMENT AND REMEDIES.
Chapter IV.
MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.
Chapter V.
INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

"The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," by Albert A. Strong, LL.B., solicitor, author of "Dramatic and Musical Law" ("The Era" office), seems to be the one compendious and indispensable authority on the subject, as vexed as the "Bermoothes" and as tortuous as a Chancery suit, that has long been wanted. It is in every essential a text book for the perplexed layman, and no solicitor or barrister worth his salt ought to think of taking or appearing in "proceedings" without consulting its pages. It must suffice, after what has been said, to state little more than that the contents include five chapters, respectively named "Copyright as Opposed to Performing Right," "Performing Right," "Infringement and Remedies," "Musical Copyright," and "International and Colonial Copyright." The work, for all its precise authority, is not dry reading. The statutes, with the elucidatory notes, necessarily impose a task on the reader which takes some tackling, but they had to be there. The cases adduced, however, are full of interest. Certain of them might fitly find a place in the romance of copyright. There was the fight of Charles Reade with George Conquest over "It's Never Too Late to Mend," for instance, and the equally interesting conflict of Mr. J. A. Cave with Chatterton over "The Wandering Jew." The latter was a famous battle. Chatterton took it to the House of Lords, and was finally beaten, to the unspeakable relief of Mr. Cave, who is never weary of relating the story. Had the result been otherwise, it would have meant his ruin. I well remember meeting him on the day of his victory and "crashing a cup with him" in honour of the same. "The Law of Copyright" is dedicated to Mr. A. W. Pinero.—Sportsman.

Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes," which is at present required.—St. James's Gazette.

CHARLES WYNDHAM AND THE A.B.F.

No more conclusive proof could be given of the immense popularity of Sir CHARLES WYNDHAM than the splendid response to the appeal which he made, as chairman, at the Actors' Benevolent Fund dinner at the Hotel Metropole on Wednesday. It was, doubtless, a tribute to Sir CHARLES'S well-known social qualities that so distinguished a gathering supported him at the banquet; but support of a more substantial kind was not wanting, the "record" amount of nearly £3000 being subscribed, including, it should be noticed, over £400 from the special matinée given at the New Theatre on Monday by Sir CHARLES and Miss MARY MOORE, who also contributed £50 to swell the list.

The Actors' Benevolent Fund is, indeed, partly a "creation" of Sir CHARLES WYNDHAM'S. In his speech on Wednesday he referred to the occasion on which he took the chair at the A.B.F. dinner in 1898, and modestly declined to repeat his description of the origin of the Fund. It ran as follows: "On a certain evening some twenty-six years ago, a few actors were seated round the hospitable board of dear, genial JOHN L. TOOLE. The scene of the little drama that we then enacted was the saloon in TOOLE'S theatre, adapted to the convivial purposes of the occasion. The dramatis personæ were IRVING, BANCROFT, WILSON BARRETT, HARE, KENDAL, DAVID JAMES, THORNE, myself, and TOOLE, the giver of the feast. And when the repast was over our artful host, with that twinkling eye and peculiar side-smile we all knew so well and loved so much to see, asked us if we really thought that he had given us that magnificent entertainment for nothing. 'Guess,' he went on, 'what you are here for.' And knowing that a certain matter had already been whispered amongst us, knowing that in cases of liberality, friendship, and consideration for others our genial host was ever to the fore, we young men 'guessed the very first time.' That night marked the birth and christening of our Fund." And then Sir CHARLES, on that evening in 1898, went on to describe how, in their sanguine generosity, the enthusiastic committee went on to vote retiring annuities to those whom they considered had reached the age that invited to repose, till the middle-aged heroes and verenable heroines rose in their wrath to tell the committee that their ideas and the committee's as to the retiring age were not the same. So the annuities were dropped, and the Fund turned to the task at which it has worked since with so much assiduity and success—the alleviation of the want and misery that daily, hourly, haunt the ranks of the profession. It was not till the resources of the Fund were found to be far below its necessities that the late Sir HENRY IRVING, from the depths of a compassionate heart, made an important change, and himself took the chair at the first A.B.F. annual dinner.

The sentence in Sir CHARLES'S speech which struck a pensive—we will not admit a melancholy—note was that in which he alluded to his forthcoming withdrawal, "in the nature of things," from the career to which he had devoted so many happy years. Sir CHARLES may prefer to soon enjoy what it is customary to call a "well-earned rest"; but all interested in the drama will be loth to spare him from a stage on which he certainly cannot be said to "lag superfluous." Not only has he recently been playing a harmless Don Juan with all the sensitive vivacity and insinuating tact suitable to such a character; he showed, in selecting Captain Drew on Leave for production, a courage of his opinion which has nothing in it of the timidity and uncertainty of age. We were in the minority of critics who saw in that piece a delicacy of feeling and a subtlety of thought which placed it on a level with some of the finer work of the French dramatists. We were glad to hear, however, that the intelligent portion of the public "found out" Mr. DAVIES'S little masterpiece, and that—as in the end usually happens—Sir CHARLES reaped a pecuniary reward for his judgment, as well as the consciousness of having done a fine thing. When an actor-manager displays both strength of mind and spirit to such an extent, his actual age goes for nothing. Sir CHARLES is one of those whose vocation was irresistible. He went on the stage only because he felt that for him no other calling was possible. The drama entranced him, and he fought against his histrionic impulses in vain. When he left England for America to be a surgeon in the Civil War he determined to shake off his love for the drama. But he returned to his destiny; he was not allowed by fate to give up to Medicine what was meant for Mankind. It is hard to imagine CHARLES WYNDHAM amidst the horrible experiences of a surgeon in a murderous war like that between North and South; it is harder still to fancy him, as he described himself to the Twentieth Century Club at Chicago in 1890, "a full-fledged doctor." "No patient," said Sir CHARLES, "darkened my door. In vain I wore stiff white neckties; in vain I prayed for a bald head and a slight rotundity of body—things which I now look forward to with dread every morning. At last, however, came the writing on the wall. My bank account died a calm and peaceful death, leaving no trace behind."

If Sir CHARLES had encountered good instead of bad fortune as a doctor he would have made an excellent one. For there is no tonic to a patient like the magnetism of a bright and happy nature; no drug like natural and spontaneous geniality and unconquerable gaiety and cheerfulness. Whether he was waiting with HENRY IRVING outside a manager's room with "a possible chance of a two-pounds-a-week engagement," or failing to tackle distressingly long speeches in Mrs. JOHN WOOD'S company at the Olympic, New York, we imagine him ever the same buoyant and courageous youth. And with these qualities of his are conjoined a nervous sensitiveness, a consideration for the interests and feelings of others, which gain for CHARLES WYNDHAM the love and confidence of all with whom he comes into contact. The wonderful vitality which is one of his most characteristic qualities has never made him careless of the less fortunate or contemptuous of the less gifted. We trust that it will be many years yet before he deprives us of the pleasure of seeing him on the stage. When at least he does so, one of his most pleasant memories will be the support he has given to every effort to make more tolerable the lot of his less happy fellow-artists.

MYSTERY PLAYS IN BLOOMSBURY.

The perfume of incense pervaded the Bloomsbury Hall on Tuesday afternoon, when, upon a tapestried stage, three of the Chester Whitsun Plays were given under the auspices of the English Drama Society. The Chester Plays are a cycle of twenty-five Mysteries, first produced about 1328, their supposed author being one Don Randall Higginet, a monk of Chester Abbey, who went thrice to Rome before he could obtain leave to have them in the English tongue. They were performed by the City Guilds of Chester upon movable stages on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Whitweek.

The three plays given on Tuesday all deal with the Nativity, the first being called The Salutation and Nativity, and described as "the Wryghtes and Sklaters' Plaie." It begins with the appearance of the Angel Gabriel to Mary, followed by the visit of Elizabeth. The Roman Senate is subsequently shown, when Octavian takes counsel of a Sybil, who predicts the birth of the Saviour.

The Play of the Shepherds, which is called "the Paynters' and the Glaisors' Playe," begins with an amusing scene between the shepherds on the mountains. The "Gloria in Excelsis" is sung by the angelic chorus, and the shepherds presently find their way to the crib at Bethlehem, where they offer presents to the Infant. The third, The Adoration of the Magi—"the Vintners' and Mercers' Playe"—portrays the advent of the three Kings from the East to Herod, who learns of the coming of Christ, and devises the massacre of the Innocents, the play ending with the visit of the three Kings to the stable at Bethlehem and the bestowal of their gifts.

No names were given on the programme, but the intention of the performers to act the episodes reverently was carried out to the utmost. The various parts were taken with fairly equal merit, but those of Mary, Elizabeth, Herod, and the youth Trowle, the Third King, and the Expositor could be selected for special praise. All appeared to be letter perfect, and delivered the quaint verse with excellent enunciation. The pieces were done with wonderful care, especially in regard to the dressing, which was, in many cases, richly elaborate. The plays, which were given under the direction of Mr. Nugent Monck, secretary of the society, were to be repeated on Tuesday and two following evenings.

MR. CARL LYNN is again coming along to town with his remarkable show of animal mimicry. The peaceful occupants of the English farmyard and the savage denizens of the menagerie are imitated with equal facility, and the animals themselves would be deceived by such apt counterfeiting.

THE Burnells are engaged by Mr. John Hart for the production of Robinson Crusoe, at the Theatre Royal, Bradford, Joe and Bert playing Man Friday and Saturday.

THE anniversary of the Hackney Empire will be celebrated at that popular house by two special performances on Tuesday evening next, Dec. 11, which marks the fifth birthday of the house.

THE Tom Davies Trio—Motoring in Mid-Air—returned from New York last Saturday per the Lucania. Their performance met with tremendous success at the New York Hippodrome, where they were originally engaged for eight weeks, but, owing to the enormous success, the management re-engaged them for a further month. They open on Monday, Dec. 10, at the Empire, Portsmouth, and return to America in September, 1907.

THE following are the names of artists being sent out to-day per the Kildonan Castle for South Africa by Mr. Sydney Hyman—once more in London—Eugene Stratton, Lil O'Gorman, Baker and De Sales, Sisters Morgan, Ella Shields. Amongst those arriving home per the Carisbrooke Castle are Kitty Loftus, William Gourlay, Cissie Paris, Sisters Crystal, and Les Trombetta.

PARIS, THURSDAY, Dec. 6.—Well may M. Antoine be proud of the marvellous success he scored with his production of Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar. French audiences, as a rule, are not enthusiastic. In fact, it takes a good deal to move the average French playgoer. This time, however, the enthusiasm of the Odéon public was boundless, and they thundered forth their applause in roars such as are seldom heard in a Paris playhouse.

There is a history connected with the French version of this great work. For years past it was M. Antoine's ambition to produce this masterpiece in Paris, and when he joined M. Paul Ginisty in the management of the Odéon he broached the subject to his partner. The latter looked at him horror-stricken. "You must be out of your mind," he said, "to think of giving Shakespeare at the Odéon, a house subventioned by the State! As it is, we are already taken to task for not bringing out more plays by unknown French authors. And if we give the preference to an English playwright, we shall raise a nice storm." M. Antoine never forgave his fellow-manager his absurd attitude in this matter; and it is said that then, for the first time, he conceived the idea of becoming sole manager of the Odéon as soon as an opportunity arose, to carry out his favourite scheme. The two partners had other quarrels, and soon afterwards separated, M. Ginisty retaining the direction of the Odéon and M. Antoine starting the theatre that bears his name. A great admirer of Shakespeare, M. Antoine, as will be remembered, gave us a splendid performance of King Lear; but the stage on the Boulevard de Strasbourg was too diminutive to admit of the production of Julius Cæsar. And when, on the night of his appointment as manager of the Odéon, M. Antoine dined with his friends, he exclaimed in the fulness of his heart: "Now you will soon have Julius Cæsar!"

The highest praise is due to M. Louis de Grammont for the manner in which he overcame the difficulties of supplying a classical translation of the work whilst remaining true to the English text. Voltaire laboured under the same difficulties, and employed blank verse, an example followed by M. de Grammont. For all that, it required prodigious efforts on M. Antoine's part to make the production of this great drama a success, and the time, money, trouble, and care he bestowed on it is only known to his intimate friends. For, M. Antoine, like all true artists, is hard to please, and the actors, M. Jusseaume (the famous scene-painter), in fact everybody connected with the house had a very rough time of it. Those, however, who fared worst were the supers. "Are we going to be turned into actors?" they cried; and, really, it was the very thing this able producer was trying to do. And he drilled them until dissatisfaction broke out in the ranks of those noble Roman warriors; and on one occasion when they had been summoned for nothing, their services not being required on that day, a bubble of mutiny began to swell, but which was promptly pricked by a couple of policemen. All the tableaux are true works of art, and fairly astounded the audience, who had rarely seen such scenery, and certainly never on the Odéon stage.

The interpretation was superb. M. de Max—who won his first laurels some ten years ago at the Renaissance when Mme. Sarah Bernhardt managed that house—gave us a wonderful Mark Antony. His speech over Cæsar's body was admirably delivered, and created a deep impression. Every gesture was perfect, and it would be difficult to render that rôle in better style. The highest praise, too, is due to MM. Duquesne, Garnier, and Desjardins.

The production of Julius Cæsar at the Odéon will mark an epoch in French stage-management.

"PAN" is the title of a satirical, comic three-act drama by M. Charles van Lerberghe, brought out by M. Lugne-Poë at the Theatre de l'Œuvre. The author, a Belgian, is well known in theatrical circles here by his Flaireurs, a strong work that was very favourably received by the public. As to Pan, it created quite a different impression. The audience was positively "flabbergasted," and went home in a state of bewilderment. It was not surprising. The fundamental idea of the work is clever and orginal, but the author has chosen a curious way of developing his theories. Rabelaisian, humoristic, philosophical, we fly from the ridiculous to the sublime, until we no longer know whether we assist at a farce or at a serious production. Pan is the glorification of our natural tendencies, of our instinct, free and untrammelled. Pan is the enemy of convention, of dogma; and he derides law and customs as opposed to nature. To the surprise of the good people in a village on the Flemish coast, Pan suddenly appears. Nobody knows whence he comes; but he is among them, and intends to remain there. Paniska, a little shepherdess, at once gives herself to him; and together they travel over the country, Pan converting all he meets to his ideas. His popularity is daily increasing, and even the sexton of the church in one of the places they visit adopts the new faith. The frightened authorities, represented by the parson, the priest, the monk, the burgomaster, the schoolmaster, the rural policeman, and the beadle are trying to stem the rising tide. They want to expel Pan, but it is too late. He has become too strong, and they are compelled to come to terms with him. In fact, they cannot do otherwise than to offer him the citizenship. All they ask from him is to "behave decently and wear clothes." And the authorities, who a moment before called him a demon, now bow before him. Pan is triumphant. As a symbol the work is cleverly thought out; and it is, therefore, the more to be regretted that the author should have treated it in a rather childish manner. Much sensation was caused by the appearance of Mme. Colette Willy in the rôle of the shepherdess Paniska. A little more dress and a little less gesture would have been more à propos. The rest of the cast was satisfactory, but more trouble might have been bestowed upon the mounting.

IT now seems pretty certain that M. Gailhard will not retain the management of the Opera. Of the numerous candidates, M. Schurmann, the impresario, stands no chance whatsoever. Nor does M. Porel; and the same can be said of the Brothers Isola. It was rumoured that M. Carré, from the Opéra-Comique, had offered himself, and, being an able manager, his candidature was well worth considering. But M. Carré has no intention of leaving the Opéra-Comique. It, therefore, would not be surprising if MM. Broussan and Messager were elected. They are a strong combination. M. Messager, an excellent musician, and M. Broussan, a first-class manager, are admirably suited for the post. As things stand to-day, they are the favourites; and the betting is three to one on them.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

The trouble at Brixton is fully dealt with in another column. No such direct conflict between artist and proprietor has ever been known in the annals of the variety world. The matter will be in the courts next week, and comment would therefore be injudicious.

It is very regrettable that the London County Council, sitting as a body to consider the recommendations of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, should have refused to confirm the licence of the Finsbury Park Empire, recommended by that committee. The decision adverse to Mr. Stoll's application was carried by 31 votes to 24.

A mass meeting of the members of the Variety Artists' Federation will be held in the large hall of the Horns, Kennington, on Sunday evening at seven o'clock. The object of the meeting is to inform the members fully of the important events that have taken place during the week, and to impress upon them the absolute necessity of carrying out the instructions of the executive.

Mr. George Robey, after a highly enjoyable trip to South Africa, which has not only re-established his health, but extended his great reputation as a comedian to the Rand, will arrive in the old country on Saturday next.

Miss Simeta Marsden has been secured for the rôle of principal boy for the forthcoming production of Treasure Island at the London Hippodrome. This engagement will make this popular lady's third consecutive one at the Cranbourn-street house.

Harry Hunter, the famous founder of the Mohawk Minstrels, who died on Oct. 12, left an estate of which the gross value is £11,196 3s. 7d. Probate of the will has been granted to his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Jennings, of Holloway-road.

Mrs. Adney Payne, the charming and popular dame president, recently invited the members of the Herne Bay Primrose League to tea at the Iron Room, William-street. About 280 responded to the invitation. The scene was a most effective one. Bunting draped the walls, strings of flags crossed the room, and evergreens embellished the windows. The four long tables were decorated with flowers, and down the centre on the white cloths lay broad ribbons of red, white and blue. During the entertainment that followed, Miss Grey's ladies' amateur orchestra played popular selections; Miss Lulu Gillespie, the Australian soprano, sang delightfully; Miss Alice Pierce gave clever impressionist sketches of popular footlight favourites; and Messrs. Walter Tilbury and Prior made a hit with their topical songs and political allusions.

Miss Georgina Leno (Mrs. R. Lubbock) is returning to the stage, Mr. Herbert Darnley having offered her an engagement in the new sketch he is producing during this month. The novelty treats of life in the arena, and is entitled The Freaks, in which Miss Leno will take the part of Princess Ruby, a circus-rider.

Mr. Ernest Bridgen, manager of the New Cross Empire, had the fright of his life on Tuesday night. His private room is situate at the back of the stage, a few yards from where Carl Ohm's bears are caged. Mr. Bridgen was quietly making out his returns for the night's business when the door of his room opened, and, to his dismay, on looking up he saw a big black bear advancing on his hind legs, but smiling most amiably. "My heart stood still," says Mr. Bridgen; "but I knew I had to do something, and that quickly. So I hurled a book at the brute's head, dodged round him, made for the door, and closed it behind me. When I returned with his keeper Master Bruin was calmly consuming the remainder of the biscuits from a box I keep on the sideboard." In a good-tempered way the shaggy visitor permitted himself to be made captive again, and a quarter of an hour later performed as usual.

At St. George's Hall for one of the Christmas attractions Messrs. Maskelyne and Devant will produce a fairy play in three acts, written by Mrs. Nesbit, with the title of The Magician's Heart. Wonderful transformations and disappearances will, of course, predominate, and the two principal parts will be taken by Mr. David Devant and Miss Cassie Bruce. Ghostly illusions sufficient to make the audience quake in their stalls will abound in Mr. Maskelyne's spiritualistic séance, to be entitled "Spiritualism Up-to-date and Beyond It."

Hymack, who was secured by the Empire directorate for the month of December after his first appearance at the Leicester-square house, is another recruit from the legitimate stage. He has been thinking out his present show for many months, and much as it has been embellished by him since he first put it on, he is confident of much additional improvement. In light comedy parts Hymack made his mark, and his Sydney Prince in Sherlock Holmes evoked much praise from Mr. William Gillette, who entrusted him with the part at the Duke of York's, and secured him for an American tour. He was also with Mrs. Patrick Campbell on tour as stage-manager. His clever, ingenious act is described in our notice of the Empire.

Mr. Harry Russon, who was entrusted with several important parts in the Coliseum revue, will be remembered especially by his clever scene as the boy who was chased by the monkey in the Zoo. For some years a partner with Mr. H. Corner in the combination known as the Dandies, he is now appearing on his own in the halls, and the fortunate choice of Mr. Harry Day as his agent has assured him of engagements for five years. Mr. Russon's light and agreeable style has already won him much popularity on the variety stage.

The impecuniosity of Mr. Will English, coon comedian, was the subject of an inquiry by the Official Receiver at the Bolton Bankruptcy Court on Wednesday. His liabilities amounted to £212 13s. 5d., and his assets to £10 2s. 6d., leaving a deficiency of £262 10s. 11d. He commenced his stage career about ten years ago in Chicago, and came to England in 1900. He had been engaged by various music hall managers, and had made a considerable sum of money, at times as much as £600 or £700 a year. He had nothing in the world now except twenty pawn tickets. He had to pawn his coat and bag and umbrella to get to the court from London. He would hang about there till he got an engagement. In reply to Mr. Ritson, who represented him, English said he had to pay agents 10 per cent. when he was making £700 a year, as well as travelling expenses and the cost of songs.

Mr. Ara, head of the famous acrobatic combination, Ara, Zebra, and Vora, has the cleverest talking paroquet existing. First acquired thirteen years ago in Paris as a pet, the fortunate owner taught the little beggar to talk as a pastime. Audiences are sceptical about the genuineness of the bird's powers of speech, and provincial quidnuncs have talked glibly about a ventriloquial fake. It is hoped in time to teach "Cuckoo" to sing; and even now he holds conversations with another member of the Psittacus family—a large green parrot. Mr. Ara has often wondered how his pet has survived different climates. He has been on tour with the troupe twice in Central Russia, as far as Moscow, three times round Central Europe—France, Germany, Austria, etc.—and as far as San Francisco. With the changing climates most birds would have pegged out, but "Cuckoo" comes up smiling all the time.

South Shields Empire Palace Theatre opened its doors for the first time last Monday under a new joint proprietorship, Mr. Richard Thornton, hitherto the absolute proprietor, having taken into partnership as co-proprietor of the freehold Mr. Frank Allen, his general-manager. It is a mere coincidence, but a noteworthy one, that only recently Mr. Allen reached his majority in the service of his old employer.

It was in November, 1885, that Thornton's Theatre of Varieties was opened in Union Alley. Its first manager was Mr. Frank Allen, whose name is now writ large over the history and development of the modern variety theatre. It is not too much to say, by way of compliment to Mr. Thornton's first variety theatre, that here again the work of evolution which helped to transform the provincial music hall from its former crude state to the palatial, refined, and popular institution it is to-day. Three years afterwards Mr. Thornton acquired the Theatre Royal, Sunderland, and converted it into one of the most beautiful variety theatres in the provinces in its day.

In the following year he built the Alhambra, West Hartlepool, and then turned his attention to Newcastle, where he became the lessee of the first Empire under Mr. F. M. Laing. It was then that Sir Edward Moss (then Mr.) joined Mr. Thornton—a partnership which carried its enterprise into all parts of the kingdom. Edinburgh, Glasgow, Leeds, Hull, Sheffield, and Liverpool were provided with magnificent variety theatres in quick succession; and a little later Mr. Oswald Stoll joined the combine with his group of halls. Thus the greatest aggregation of variety theatres in the world was formed. In all these developments Mr. Allen has been associated with Messrs. Moss, Thornton, and Stoll, and that association has now been still more closely cemented by the admission of the former as co-proprietor of the hall where he began his professional career.

A site at Barnsley, just outside the Midland Station and in the High-street, has been acquired on behalf of a company to be known as The Barnsley Empire Company, for the erection of a permanent variety theatre at a cost of £20,000. The plans have been prepared by Messrs. North and Robin, architects, of the Strand, London, and have been passed by the local authorities, and all other arrangements made. The building is to be started immediately, and will be opened on August Bank Holiday next. It is intended to run a high-class variety entertainment. The managing-director of the company is Mr. Will Smithson, who for many years past has been the popular proprietor of the Theatre Royal and Opera House, Merthyr Tydfil. Mr. Alfred Withers, director of Sites, Ltd., will also be on the board.

Hackenschmidt was to have appeared at the Hull Palace last week, but owing to an attack of influenza and muscular rheumatism was prevented from doing so. On Tuesday he left Hull for Germany. On Monday Hackenschmidt vomited blood, and he went on the stage strongly against the advice of his doctor. The disappointment which his illness caused was considerably minimised by the eleventh-hour engagement of J. W. Rowley, the Yorkshire comedian, who appeared in the place of "the Russian lion" with the greatest success. In picturesque language he fairly "pulled the house down," and his sudden descent upon Hull gave much pleasure during his stay. It is hoped that a period of rest will restore Hackenschmidt to health and vigour.

A policy of amalgamation has been agreed upon between the proprietors of the Wolverhampton Hippodrome and the directors of the Wolverhampton Empire, Limited. After this week the Hippodrome will abandon the variety business and become the home of the legitimate. The announcement is made on the authority of Mr. Walter De Frece. Existing contracts and bookings for the Hippodrome will be transferred to the Empire Palace, including the engagement of Miss Vesta Tilley, who is to appear next week. The two properties will be amalgamated under the style of the Wolverhampton Empire, Limited.

The Queen's Theatre, Leeds, will become a music hall soon after the advent of the new year. It will still, however, be managed by the company now owning it—the Queen's Theatre, Leeds (Limited)—with the addition of Mr. Walter De Frece to the directorate. Mr. William Allen, of Belfast, and Mr. Fred Mouillot remain in the company, and Messrs. Dottridge and Longden, the present lessees, will retain their financial interest.

A meeting of the Committee of Inspection of the London Coliseum (Limited) was held at Cardiff on Monday evening. Messrs. Metcalf and Gillespie, liquidators, reported on the replies of shareholders to the suggested scheme of reconstruction. The replies represented about £20,000, or half the fresh ordinary capital required. In the official report afterwards issued to the Press it was stated that the Committee of Inspection was now taking steps to secure the placing of £65,000 Second Mortgage Six per Cent. Debentures, and expressed the opinion that if the efforts to place this were successful the scheme would proceed.

Our heartiest congratulations to Leoni Clarke, the Cat King, and his charming wife, well-known to the profession as Chrissie Angus, the celebrated burlesque actress, who were married on Dec. 3 twenty-five years ago at Darlington. Since that happy day they have journeyed through many lands, gaining success in Canada, North and South America, North and South Africa, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, India, &c., and have now located themselves at the Two Brewers Hotel, Northampton. Although Mr. Clarke is still following his profession, "he always comes home to his tea" on Sundays.

Mr. J. Lacy Lyne, the popular manager of the Palace of Varieties, Attercliffe, was accorded his second annual complimentary benefit on Friday evening, Nov. 30, and crowded houses at each performance testified to the esteem in which he is held. During the evening, Mr. Wright, of Derby, in the absence of Mr. T. Allan Edwardes, presented to Mr. Lyne, on behalf of the proprietor, a timepiece and cheque. An illuminated address and purse of gold came from the staff, band, and a few private friends; also a case of carvers. The address was read by Mr. S. H. Laycock, the assistant-manager. Mr. Lyne feelingly replied.

Mr. Harry Lauder was specially honoured on Saturday evening at the close of his fortnight's engagement at the Palace, Dundee. Mr. E. J. Dexter, the manager, presented him in the name of the proprietors of the Palace with a silver salver and a pair of silver candlesticks. Mr. Lauder made a humorous and appropriate speech in reply, and expressed the hope that next autumn he would be able to return to Dundee.

An interesting event took place on Tuesday at Liverpool, when Mr. John Leopold Weisker, youngest son of Mrs. Weisker, licensed victualler, London-road, was married to Miss Isabella Metcalf, youngest daughter of Mr. John Metcalf, florist, New Brighton. The bridegroom is well-known in the profession, being connected with the firm of Weisker Bros., bioscope proprietors. He is also the secretary of the Liverpool Westminster Music Hall. The marriage took place at the Registrar's Office, Brougham-terrace, the contracting parties, along with several theatrical friends, being driven there in florally-decorated motor-cars.

The Committee of the Music Hall Home will meet in future on Tuesdays. This change has been considered necessary in order that the day of meeting may not clash with that of the M.H.A.R.A.

The usual monthly meeting of the Committee of the Music Hall Sick Fund will be held at the York Hotel on Wednesday next, at 2 p.m. As several matters of interest and importance are included in the agenda members of the Committee who are in town are specially invited to attend the meeting.

Mr. Denham Harrison, the well-known composer, has been appointed musical director of Hengler's, and has also been commissioned to write the music for the forthcoming Christmas production there, a children's pantomime entitled Little Red Riding Hood.

Messrs. F. and M. Abrahams and Mr. Jack Woolf have been able to carry out arrangements for the complete comfort of their audiences at the Queen's, Poplar, by installing at that popular house a perfect and expensive system of heating by patent hot-water radiators throughout the hall and on the stage. The work has been carried out by the well-known firm of Alexander Ritchie and Co., of 12-13, Upper Thames-street, E.C.

Miss Maud Rochez has scored an emphatic success at the Theatre, Richmond, and has signed contracts in three days amounting to nearly four thousand pounds. Her business agent is Papa Brown.

At the Richmond Theatre on Monday will be produced a new sketch, entitled The Half-way Kiss, in which Miss Millie Mills and Mr. Harold Wells will play the chief parts.

Mr. John Lawson will appear on Monday, Feb. 11, in a new episode, entitled Kissed to Death. Mrs. Lawson will play the part of a school girl, and Mr. John Lawson will be seen in a new part of special interest. The setting will be a pool (water) and a ladies' school.

Amongst the crowd at Collins's on the evening of the forty-fourth anniversary of the famous "hall on the green," could be seen Will Oliver as blithe, alert, and dapper as a three-year-old. At the age of fifteen Will appeared at the fourth anniversary. Many were the compliments paid him by a host of very old friends, who one and all proclaim him a marvel.

Miss Marion Wills, formerly well known in her big speciality act under another name, was the exponent of a distinctly novel and humorous monologue successfully produced at the Camberwell Empire on Monday. It is entitled A Musical Comedy Rehearsal. Miss Wills impersonates seven different characters, with snatches of songs (comical and tragical), well written comedy lines, and extremely funny new "business." The monologue has been written by Mr. W. H. Savile, and the music and songs are by Mr. Cuthbert Clarke, of the Empire.

Mr. David Hart, the popular manager of the Grand Varieties, Gravesend, had his fourth annual benefit on Friday, the 30th ult. The house was crowded, and money was turned away. During the evening he was presented, on the stage, with a cheque for £50, subscribed by the agents. He also received a handsome case of fish knives and forks from Miss Carrie Laurie, a pair of Japanese vases from Miss Blanche Vincent, and a silver egg cruet from the staff. The presentations were made by Mr. Will Oliver. A feature of the entertainment was the assistance given by the London agents in 'Liza Johnson.

"The Magic Eye" is the title of a new operatic piece which has been produced this week at the Palace, Bristol, by Madame Mellor's company with remarkable success—a success, by the way, that was entirely deserved. The Magic Eye appeals by its excellent libretto, its dramatic scheme, and its excellent music to the lovers of grand opera, who will now be found in every part of the modern Empires and Palaces of variety. The house in which good music and singing can always be enjoyed is certainly the music hall of the future. The claims of enterprise have only been recognised by the far-seeing manager; but we are reforming that altogether in the principal programmes of the day.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Moore are suffering from acute influenza. The genial Pony is progressing favourably, but Mrs. Moore is not doing so well, according to Dr. H. J. Macevoy's latest bulletin. It is a great sorrow to the happy pair that they were unable to be with their daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Stratton, and wish them bon voyage on their departure for South Africa to-day.

Mrs. John Lawson has been appearing with conspicuous success at the Brixton Hippodrome with The Devil's Sunday, playing it in the condensed form of a duologue under the title of Vanity. This little sketch has all the excitement of a four-act drama, and last only fifteen minutes. So well was the trifle received on Monday that on Tuesday morning Mrs. Lawson received offers from Messrs. Stoll, Adney Payne, and other big syndicates to open at once. Unfortunately other engagements precluded acceptance. Without a doubt Mrs. Lawson has never been seen to such advantage as in the part of the reckless, vain, and frivolous wife in Vanity, in which she seems to hold the audience in the hollow of her hand.

Miss Bertha Stuart, the Scotch lassie, whose agreeable rendering in character of fine old melodies has been such a pleasant feature of the entertainments of several of the chief London halls, is winning much popularity this week at the Oxford and Tivoli. Her rendering of "Caller Herrin'" brings down the house.

Messrs. O'Malley and Brown conclude to-night, at the Empire, Leeds, a successful tour of the principal provincial music halls, in their comedy sketch, entitled You're Still a Friend of Mine. They start rehearsing for pantomime on Monday at the Shakespeare Theatre, Liverpool, where they have been engaged to play two important parts in Mother Goose. At the conclusion of their pantomime engagement they return to the Stoll tour.

The fourteenth anniversary of the opening of the Palace Theatre will be celebrated on Tuesday, when a large number of artists have volunteered their services for the special entertainment to be given on that evening. Amongst these are:—Miss Camille Clifford, Miss Kate Cutler, Miss Marie Dainton, Miss Alexandra Dagmar, Miss Alice Lloyd, Miss Victoria Monks, Mme. Adeline Genée, Chirgwin, Mr. Hayden Coffin, Mr. Alfred Lester, Mr. Herbert Lloyd, Mr. Henry Neville, Mr. Leslie Stiles, and Little Tich, who will commence his first engagement at the Palace at Christmas.

Preparations are being made at the Crystal Palace for Sanger's Hippodrome and Menagerie at Christmas. In addition, there are to arrive from Belgium a giantess and lady dwarf, and judging by their photographs, are particularly attractive-looking ladies. If Henri Cot, the giant, and Prince Colibri could only have continued their sojourn at the Palace some interesting marriages might have been arranged. The many other Christmas attractions will include Mr. Ernest E. Noakes and Mr. Stanley H. Bell's entertainment of modern magic and drawing-room entertainments in the Electric Theatre; Miss Kitty Wright's trained animals—ponies, dogs, and monkeys, in the Chinese Court; a monster Christmas tree; and special shows on the Skating Rink.

The members of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild are requested to attend an important meeting on Wednesday next, at one o'clock, at the offices of the Guild, at 69, Primrose-mansions, Prince of Wales's-road, Battersea Park. Contributions have been received:—Albert Egbert, 10s.; Mrs. F. Latone, 5s.; R. H. Douglass, 2s.; Miss Patty Yole, 2s. 6d.; collected by Miss Alice Mayden at N.A.F. meeting, 10s. 6d. Gifts of clothing have also been received from Miss Cissy Jewell and Mrs. Green.

The Terriers gave their third social of the season on Sunday at their Headquarters, the Dover Castle Hotel, Westminster Bridge-road. A most enjoyable evening was spent, about sixty being present. Amongst those who contributed to the entertainment were:—Mr. Tom Packer, Mr. W. L. Murray, Mr. W. Atora, Miss Lawreen, Griff, Baby Atlas, Miss Ada Norman, Mr. G. Jones, and Mr. Charles Marston. Mr. John Charles Moore presided at the piano; Mr. Tom Burnetti was the chairman; Mr. Sid Baker vice-chairman; Mr. Tom Packer, M.C., and the complete arrangements were in the capable hands of the secretary, Harry Lester.

The Magic Circle, an association of modern magicians, held its first annual dinner at the Florence Restaurant on Tuesday evening, with Mr. Nevil Maskelyne in the chair. After a banquet, which included such professional dishes as "hors d'œuvres illusories" and "faisan roti sans deception," the magicians settled down to be mystified by other practisers of what was known in the days of Dr. Dee as the "black art." An excellent entertainment was contributed by the Zancigs and Messrs. David Devant, E. H. Adams, J. H. Collings, Gordon Powell, Leon Spinck, Leslie Lambert, W. R. Minus, Louis Nikola, Arthur Glynn, and Horace Goddard.

The secretary of the Music Hall Benevolent Fund has received the sum of £5 5s. 6d. from Mr. William Payne, collected by him during the past few weeks in his pence box at the South London Palace; also the sum of £4 5s. 6d. from Mr. Robert W. Duce, collected in his book at the Granville Palace of Varieties, Walham-green. The President and Committee tender their sincere thanks to these gentlemen for their kind aid.

Messrs. Walton and Lester have just purchased a clever song from the pen of Mr. Harry F. Greenfield, entitled "Our garden on the roof," which they will stage in their usual humorous fashion. "The World's Worst Wizards" have been engaged by Mr. Walter De Frece for his opening programme at the New Tivoli, Liverpool, next week.

The death of Mr. H. Cruise, which took place at Birmingham on Friday, Nov. 30, revives memories of a once prosperous music hall there, now closed and lying idle—the Steam Clock, to wit—known in its latter stages as the Ladywood Palace, where Leno and many of our present stars were wont to appear. Mr. Cruise, who died from cancer on the liver after protracted suffering, patiently borne, gained considerable local fame in his time as a singer of light comedy and descriptive songs, deriving his inspiration from the late Charles Godfrey, whose funeral he attended as one of his two solitary mourners. Mr. Cruise had good creative powers himself, and produced many original scenas, including New Year's Eve, written by Joseph Berry and composed by Felix McGlennon, which was staged at "Day's," now the Empire.

The deceased gentleman made every effort to preserve the Ladywood Palace for the profession, but eventually repaired to the Bell Hotel, Northfield, a rural spot a little way out, where his talents in song and story much impressed the people. Returning to Birmingham, he was seen at the Grand Junction Hotel, whence sprang several of our present stars, and finally took the Bull's Head, Bishopsgate-street, where he died. The funeral of the deceased, who leaves a wife and several children, took place on Wednesday at St. Joseph's, Nechells, whither a large gathering of private and professional friends followed him. Mr. Cruise was forty-five years of age.

"La Milo," who will be at the Holloway Empire next week, is, we are given to understand, likely to take action against certain Cardiff ladies and members of the Cardiff Young Women's Christian Association in connection with the expression, "a perfectly nude woman," alleged to have been made use of in a petition to the Lord Mayor of Cardiff while "La Milo" was performing there last week.

On Saturday last, the occasion of the great match between England and "The Rest," Mr. A. Rand, the manager of the Empire Theatre, Coventry, invited the two teams there, which invitation they accepted, and enjoyed themselves immensely.

Miss Maidie Scott, who, with Miss Marie Lloyd, Miss Jessie Preston, and other artists, was injuncted on Oct. 1 by Mr. Burney, of the London, from appearing at the Paragon, put her case into the hands of the well-known theatrical solicitors, Messrs. Amery Parkes and Co. They have now brought matters to a satisfactory termination, Mr. Burney having decided to withdraw the action which was pending, and himself paying the costs of the injunction.

The 491st meeting of the M.H.A.R.A. Committee was held on Wednesday afternoon, when the following members were present:—Messrs. Fred. W. Millis (vice-president), H. Griff, Fred Neiman, Jeff Vendome, and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary). Mr. Fred Millis presided. The present agent in Newport (Mon.) having resigned, Mr. W. H. Beer, of the Hare and Greyhound Hotel, Commercial-street, Newport, was elected as agent. Mrs. Lee, the Rochdale agent, having left the Roebuck Hotel, Mr. Ned Kennedy, of the Bishop Blaize Hotel, was appointed as agent in that town. The voting for the positions of chairman and vice-chairman was declared, Mr. Joe O'Gorman being elected as chairman and Mr. Fred Herbert as vice-chairman. A certain member was expelled, in accordance with the rules. The weekly statement of receipts and expenditure was submitted, and was passed as read.

At the Bilston Theatre Royal, during the performance on Tuesday Mme. Lina (otherwise Mrs. Cooper), a cornet soloist, who, with her husband, had appeared in "Comedy and Melody," was seized with illness, which, unhappily, proved fatal. On Monday the deceased lady appeared in her usual health; but about 9.30 on the evening of her seizure she complained of not feeling well, and remarked that she seemed to have no top lip at all, it being numbed. She, however, went through her turn, and, after bowing her acknowledgments, hurried to her dressing-room, where she called for her husband, and said to him, "Charlie, I do feel bad; there is something the matter with my face. Hold me; I am going!" Mr. Cooper immediately called for Mrs. Orchid (of "The Orchids"), who found Mrs. Cooper totally unable to speak. She at once sent for Dr. Kendrick, who ordered the sufferer's immediate removal to the Wolverhampton General Hospital, where she died the following (Wednesday) morning. The Coopers, who are natives of Sheffield, joined the company (Mr. Tom Prichard's) at Oldbury last week, and came on from that town to Bilston. This is the second tragic occurrence at the Bilston Theatre within a couple of months, and recalls the recent case of the late Mr. Frank Bateman, who expired on the stage of the same playhouse whilst in the act of arranging a rehearsal.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

Among the latest novelties secured for publication by Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter are Miss Vesta Victoria's "I can't get nobody to love me," by G. A. Stevens; "What more can I do, little Girlie?" by A. E. Sidney Davis and H. E. Darewski, jun.; Frank Harwood's "Every little picture tells a story," by Barnes, Weston, and M. Scott; "She hadn't left the country very long," by St. John Hamond and Ernest Vousden; "The Gallant Greys" (which will be sung by A. H. Gee, the popular Australian baritone), by W. Cooper Lissenden; "I finish 'em off" and "So does father" (both sung by Dan Crawley), by T. W. Connor; and "Join the Navy" (Bert Dansie) and "When mother cooked the pancake," these last being by Charles Osborne.

Last week the Monte Carlo Publishing Co. received an order from a prominent wholesale music-dealer for no less than 12,200 copies of their popular "Sixpenny Successes." The numbers in greatest demand were "Bamboo bungalow," "Remember me to mother dear," "Queen of Old Samara," "Rosie is waiting," "You don't miss de water," and "She didn't come from Borneo." During the present week another principal wholesale placed a further order for 20,000 copies of this famous series with this one-year-old firm.

Miss Millie Hylton has scored an undoubted triumph with Castling and Murphy's dainty Welsh chorus song, "On the Isle of Anglesey," at the Stratford Empire this week. This number is included in the catalogue of the Star Music Publishing Co., Ltd.

Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. have an excellent comedy song in "Seaside Louise," by Burton and Delmar. The words are quaint and the melody ear-haunting, and the number should be in demand with double and single comedians. Band parts can be had arranged by the composer, George Burton, whose reputation for this sort of work is well known.

Yet further acquisitions have just been made by Messrs. Francis and Day for publication, among them being a song by Mr. Leslie Stiles, entitled "Floating." The others include "The bird in the trysting-tree," by A. du Soir and K. Lyle; "Any windows to mend?" (Amber Austa), by Fred D'Albert and Fred Godfrey; "I can't make it out, can you?" (Frank Lynne), by Bert Delmar; "There's a black man coming down the chimney," by Murphy and Lipton; two new Scotch songs, written, composed, and sung by Hector Grant, entitled "Sandy, you're a dandy" and "Lassie, dinna sigh for me"; "Something seems to tell me there'll be no rent to-day" (Will Haines), by Fred Allsopp and the singer; and "Happy little mermaid," by J. F. Lambe and H. E. Pether.

The Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s big topical "winner," "Skyland," by Harrington and Tate, which Mr. Charles McNaughton is still so successfully singing in The Belle of Mayfair on tour, has been secured for Mr. John Hart's Manchester pantomime, and will be sung as a duet by Mr. Wilkie Bard and Miss Carrie Moore, with a special production by Mr. Victor Stevens.

The Shapiro, Von Tilzer Publishing Company have this week issued Miss Jessie Preston's highly successful song, "Be advised by your father." This number is free for pantomime, and provincial music hall rights may be had on application to the publishers, Miss Preston having acquired the sole London rights from the author-composer, J. F. Lambe.

Miss Florrie Gallimore has been featuring again this week with great success "Caroline, will you love this gipsy man?" and the Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Company, Ltd., have, in consequence, had numerous demands for it from pantomime producers.

The Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Company, Ltd., have this week been successful in placing their two eleventh-hour pantomime songs, "The Wedding of Bluebell" and "Ida-ho," with various important pantomime producers and artists.

Miss Marjorie Lawrence is singing a capital new song, entitled "Miss Rosy Posy," written by Newman Harding, music by W. Snell Robinson.

Mr. Alf. Gibson has purchased and produced a song from the pen of William Hargreaves, entitled "Wait till you hear the chorus," which is a big success.

Charles Wilmott has, in conjunction with H. E. Darewski, jun., who has set the words to a charming melody, published with Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter, a pretty song, entitled "Home again, my cherry blossom."

Denmark-street, the headquarters of the "Sixpenny Pops," is just now the scene of unparalleled activity, and even the resources of the now largely amplified premises have been severely taxed owing to the enormous demand for the "Pops." Mr. David Day's manager, Mr. John Smith, has added the following numbers to the extensive catalogue, which now comprises 323 songs and pieces:—"Cleopatra Finnegan" (intermezzo), "Poppies" (Japanese Romance), "Grow, little Mushroom, grow!" "Can't you think of any other name but Baby?" "Arrah Wanna," "The good old Union Jack," "Mamma's boy," "Don't tell the world of your troubles," "Come and make love to me," and "The Galloping Major."

Mr. Herbert Darnley is out and about again after a short but severe illness, at one period of which a bad spell of pneumonia was latent and grave effects feared.

At Chelsea Palace on Tuesday evening Mr. Ernest Shand produced a new song, with which he scored in a most unmistakable manner. It is entitled "Tooral-I-ay," is by Edward Montagu, and has been secured for immediate publication by Messrs. Francis and Day.

The Star Music Publishing Co., Ltd., are to be heartily congratulated upon having scored in the two first pantomimes of the season. Their songs, "Nelson from his monument," in Robert Arthur's Aberdeen production, and "Sailing in my balloon" at the Grand, Glasgow, were both instantaneous successes.

A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott are again well to the fore in pantomimes this year, their song, "By the side of the Zyder Zee," being undoubtedly the hit of the season. They have also got there with their beautiful ballad "Snowflakes."

The same firm has just purchased C. W. Murphy and Dan Lipton's new song, entitled "Gibraltar." So great is the demand for "Zuyder Zee" that Messrs. Feldman have arranged for a special press in order to cope with it.

T. W. Conner, whose name in the song world is something to conjure with, has placed his latest and what he considers his greatest effort with Messrs. Feldman. The song is on the up-to-date "Aeroplane" topic, and author and publishers anticipate it a flyer.

Happy Fanny Fields' new comedy song, by Harrington and Tate, entitled "Then he blow, blow, blow," is now in the press, and will be issued at an early date. This number, which forms No. 53 of the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s "Sixpenny Successes," will be specially featured during the run of this favourite Dutch artist's pantomime engagement in Bristol.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE EMPIRE.

There are fewer "dumb show" turns to be noted in the Empire programme than has been customary at that fine house, and, as far as the variety is concerned, this is a decided improvement in the scheme of amusement put forward by Mr. H. Hitchens. A decided novelty, that is presented somewhat too early in the evening to be as heartily appreciated as it ought to be, is the turn of Mr. Hymack, a comedian and entertainer, whose monologue is original, ingenious, and interesting. As an elated and belated Benedict who has been to his club, he commences his entertainment by aposthrophising the village pump, a cleverly constructed property that quite realistically throws cold water on his efforts when he commences to recite "The Charge of the Light Brigade" with interpolations conceived in the eccentric vein. It seems quite an innocent action when Hymack removes a pair of red gloves, and one would scarcely note the incident were it not that his hands are immediately afterwards ganté in yellow without any action on his part that is apparent. He throws a stick away, and another is immediately spirited into his hand. He sheds his shirt cuffs, only to find them replaced on the instant; and at the finish of his turn the light frock-coat, waistcoat, and hat are scarcely discarded in his admirably assumed fit of semi-drunken freakishness than he appears in the sombre respectability of black coat and black topper. He then takes his farewell of the audience, leaving it no less puzzled than delighted. Hymack is a decided acquisition to the bill.

An interesting exhibition also is the demonstration by Raku, a Japanese, and an assistant of the same nationality, of the ju-jitsu method of defence against sudden and ruffianly attacks—a method universally taught in the gymnasia of the land of the chrysanthemum. The show becomes even more attractive when a lady pupil of the scientific wrestler displays her prowess and shows how completely equipped for "tackling" one of the gentler sex may become. Early in the evening Chinka Panne, a Tsigane, who owns some amusing dogs, plays the national instrument of Hungary—the czimbalom—choosing as one selection a difficult rhapsody by the Abbé Liszt, himself one of the very few modern composers who showed proficiency on the instrument. A favourite turn with the Empire frequenters is the Brittons, a "cullud" lady and gentleman, who evidently enjoy their work as much as the audience, which is saying a good deal. Mr. Britton is about as grotesque as a coon knows how to be, and his good humour is quite irresistible.

Mr. Herbert Lloyd's eccentricity is evidently of American growth, and you just have to laugh at his dazzling display of diamonds. Of course he removes his bejewelled coat, his gorgeous slippers, and his radiant white hat, and he does this quite deliberately. He is not quite so ceremonious when he "chucks" away about twenty shirt-fronts of various startling colours. We are uncertain about Herbert's line of business, and we rather suspect him of being a juggler, but the comic pomposity of his entry in an extraordinary specimen of a motor-car, and his equally amusing exit in a chariot, are but the heading and tail-piece of a droll chapter of accidents, in which property animals play a conspicuous part.

Arthur Prince's ventriloquism has been recognised as perfect in both hemispheres. He is still the naval lieutenant, infinitely polite to a cheeky cabin boy, who, in view of recent events, is plentifully endowed with gag regarding the "on-the-knee" incident and the proper tone and manner by which discipline should now be maintained, reminding us at times of the Gilbertian satire of H.M.S. Pinafore. Mr. Prince has a fine set in which to work his remarkable act, and he has become a great favourite with the Empire. Of the new ballet, The Débutante, we spoke at length in a very recent issue. Mlle Genée has since been indisposed, but on the night of our visit enchanted a crowded house with her delightful art. A very fine series of Biograph pictures illustrates a day's hunting; and the comic burlesque of opera, entitled Burning to Sing, still retains its place on the bill, which also includes the Daunton-Shaw troupe of clever and daring trick cyclists.

CAMBERWELL EMPIRE.

Mr. Jesse Sparrow and Mr. Harry Bawn are establishing quite a record here for new productions, for nearly every week since its opening some aspirant has bid for public favour. The latest of these is a new sensational dramatic episode, produced here on Monday last, entitled

"A RACE FOR HONOUR."

Geoffrey Thornhill .....MR. NORMAN ASTON
Gaspard Defarge .....MR. FRED NORMAN
Lord Guy .....MR. R. HUGH SHARP
Waiter .....MR. GEO. EDWARDS
Olga Varanoff .....MISS DIANE DORSAY

The scene of the story is laid at the Café Noir, St. Petersburg, where we find Gaspard Defarge—an emissary of the German Secret Service—scheming for the possession of important despatches that have been entrusted to Geoffrey Thornhill, of the British Embassy. To further his ends, Defarge has invited Olga Varanoff to meet him at the café, and by threats to reveal her career to the Russian authorities and get her deported to Siberia, he prevails on her to drug Geoffrey Thornhill, whom he has by a fictitious letter induced to come to the café. On Geoffrey's arrival he finds in Olga the woman he loves, and presses her to be his wife, but she tells him that, although she loves him, she is no fit wife for any honest man, Olga becoming faint with terror at the sight of Gaspard hovering near, Geoffrey orders brandy, and when he turns to greet his friend, Lord Guy, Olga drugs his drink. Geoffrey soon loses his senses, and Gaspard appears and sends Lord Guy for a doctor, and while left alone with Geoffrey steals the despatches and decamps. Lord Guy returns from his fruitless search for a doctor, and Geoffrey, recovering from his stupor, finds his despatches gone. Lord Guy offers him his motor to overtake the villain, Gaspard. Geoffrey gladly accepts, and on the road to the frontier Gaspard, in his eagerness to escape from the pursuing Englishman, dashes his machine into a wall, and is thrown out and killed. Geoffrey regains his despatches and continues his journey to England.

The little piece is played by Mr. Charles H. Barker's company. Mr. Norman Aston as Geoffrey Thornhill is manly and earnest, and contributes a sterling piece of work. Mr. Fred Norman makes the most of the unsatisfactory character of Gaspard Defarge. Mr. Hugh Sharp as the dude, Lord Guy, gives a fine character study full of clever points. As the waiter, Mr. Geo. Edwards does well. Miss Diane Dorsay as Olga Varanoff acts with considerable feeling, and deserves praise for a noteworthy and natural performance.

In direct contrast to the above is the bright little comedy-mélange The Little Charwoman, admirably played by Mr. William Holles and Miss Nannie Goldman. Miss Goldman is a clever protean artist, and skilfully delineates a street flower-girl, a newsboy, a Dutch singing and dancing girl, and a chic American soubrette, with a smart song, "Straight away from U.S.A." Mr. William Holles is a typical manager, and works hard, while his clerk is not only a clever acrobat, but assists in no small degree to the general success of this amusing comedy.

Almost on the same lines Miss Marion Wills essays a brisk little humorous monologue, entitled A Musical Comedy Rehearsal, which depicts the troubles and trials of a stage-manager at a morning rehearsal, and the frequent interruptions by the stage carpenter, property man, postman, fireman, and the cleaner. Miss Wills assumes all the characters in the comedy in turn. She possesses a fine singing voice, and comes triumphantly through a performance that is a severe tax on her physical energies.

The most popular turn of the evening is that of Vesta Victoria, beloved of the Empire boys, who not only join lustily in the chorus of her songs, but, by their insistent demands, compel the fair and gifted comedienne to double the length of her turn. She creates shrieks of merriment with her songs "A copper, he's no cop," "Waiting at the church," and "The deserted wife," while her grotesque dancing creates enthusiastic approbation. Blarney and Kennard, with their merry cross-talk and conundrums, together with their intelligent and well-trained waltzing poodles, come in for a large share of applause. Tom Packer, tall, and quaintly clad as a female, has two really good comic songs in "Poor me" and "Hush, hush, hush!"; Miss Barbara Babington looks captivating in her gown of shimmering white, and gives due expression to her charming ballad "Will you love me in December as you do in May?" which has a pretty, swinging chorus. Other excellent turns are provided by Harry Sims, a young comedian full of bright promise; Mueller and Coyne, an amusing comedy pair; Rappo and Ella, skilful equilibrists, and the Empire pictures. The Orchestra, under the bâton of Mr. Frank Hurst, does brilliant work, while the good order maintained by the audience is due to the courtesy and care of the acting-manager, Mr. Percy Ford.

THE SURREY.

Mr. Frank Macnaghten finds it difficult to accommodate all his patrons here, even with thirteen performances a week. So to meet the demands of his clientèle he has arranged for a Thursday's matinée, in addition to the usual Monday matinée, while for the children of the neighbourhood he is giving a Children's Animated Picture Matinée every Saturday afternoon during the winter.

The strongest attraction in the current bill is a delightful musical comedy morsel, entitled A Night in Japan. Set in one of the prettiest and daintiest of scenes, with charming and tuneful music, and admirably played by Miss Marie Santoi and company, this tale of a Japanese officer's wooing is interpreted in a manner that is sure to win enthusiastic approval wherever presented. As the young officer, Mr. Stephen Haland sings admirably "The Star of Midnight," and joins Miss Lena Franks, as the pretty Princess, in an exquisite duet, "Roses Blooming," while other vocal gems in this dainty morsel are "The Man of Japan," and "Let me be your China boy." The work of the small but most effective chorus with their kaleidoscopic dances, cannot be overpraised. Of strong dramatic interest is the thrilling story of the Boxers' rising in China, told by Mr. Frederick Maxwell, Miss Lois du Cane, and their excellent company in The Heathen and the Christian. As the specimen of muscular Christianity, Jack Beresford, the missionary, Mr. Frederick Maxwell acts with a force and sincerity that distinctly raises this interesting sketch to the topmost level of dramatic art. In this direction Miss Lois Du Cane as May Beresford lends invaluable aid, and is most powerful in the scene with the treacherous Boxer Li, where she is fighting for the lives of her child and self. Mr. Charles Levey as Li is excellent, bringing into prominence the fierce hatred of the Heathen for the Christian cloaked under a oily servility. Other characters are delineated with admirable care by Mr. William Clair, as Chang Lu; Miss Enid Grey, as the Beresfords' son, Harry; Mr. Sam Harcourt, as Bob Merriless; and Mr. Gerald Blake, as Lieutenant Villiers. The scenery and general mounting cannot be too highly praised.

With rapt attention the audience follow the exciting incident portrayed by Miss Margaret Parker and company in the dramatic episode, Under the Seal, and again an eager and appreciative audience bestow on this clever lady warm approval for her distinctly finished cockney character-study of Bet, the gutter brat. As Father David, the priest, Mr. Herbert Harden imbues his part with a priestly devotional resignation that is powerful and artistic. Mr. George Henry, as the hooligan and murderer of the priest's brother, has fairly got inside his part, and deserves warm praise for a highly finished performance.

Polly Jerome wins unlimited applause for her graceful and daring acrobatic trapeze act; Beattie Kent sings sweetly and dances gracefully, and merits the favours bestowed on her efforts; Charles Sloman is amusing in his song, "The Family Tree," and tells spicy funny stories that are witty, and winds up with a song that is without title, rhyme, or reason; Percy Hannon is the fortunate possessor of a fine baritone voice, and sings with perfect expression "The Admiral's Broom," and a vocal mélange, which introduces "The Shamrock of Ireland," "Auld Lang Syne," and our National Anthem, for which he scores an ovation; Rumbo Austin and his acrobatic kiddies have amused many audiences, but nowhere have the comical efforts of his youthful troupe been more appreciated than here; Mark Merry belies his name, for a more miserable-looking comedian we've never seen, but this is only his effective method of giving point and expression to two excellent comic ditties, "No, no, no, no" and "A piece in the paper to-day"; Kitty Marion, as a principal boy, looks very chic and smart, and is heard to advantage in her songs, "The new brigade" and "That's what our boys are made of." Raymond's animated pictures are amusing, entertaining, and instructive, and the audience keep their seats to the last to see depicted "Following in father's footsteps" and "The registry office." Mr. Charles Craig, the acting-manager, is to be warmly congratulated on the really excellent order maintained in every part of the auditorium; while the Surrey Orchestra under the skilful direction of Mr. W. Hinkinson will bear favourable comparison for efficiency and decision with any in London.

NEW CROSS EMPIRE.

After the excellent orchestra had opened proceedings with a spirited rendering of Rossini's "Gazza Ladra," under the able direction of Mr. Louis la Rondelle, the first turn on the programme was that of the charming comedienne Miss Winnie Derson, whose songs delighted all present. Next came Harry Anderson—a great favourite in this district—who was very warmly received in "My new pal" and "Women." Miss Teresa da Silva sang very sweetly and tunefully "Mistletoe" and "Thinking of me. The Three Guitanos, eccentric acrobats, amused the onlookers by their marvellous tricks, performed as they were with astonishing agility and precision. The next arrival was Harold Hughman, whose mimicry is wonderfully true to nature, and includes such familiar sounds as a couple of dogs fighting, hens cackling, pigeons cooing, wood-sawing, &c. The Northern Troupe of International Dancers are remarkably clever, and their entertainment was loudly applauded. The Great Alexander, billed as a wonderful trick cyclist, fully justifies the description. His turn includes many novel and clever bits of trick-riding. Wilson and Waring contributed a very smart turn called A Bit of Nonsense, consisting of bright comedy dialogue and dancing. Miss Waring's rapid changes of costume are exceptionally clever. Carl and Mary Ohm, who appeared next, created great interest with their trained animals, including bears, monkeys, ponies, and dogs. Last, though by no means least in importance, came Mr. Arthur Roberts, in the sketch by Harry Pleon, entitled The Importance of Being Another Man's Wife, in which he was supported by Miss Ruby Celeste and company. Mr. Roberts as Crawford Smith was as quaintly humorous as ever, and his efforts to please were very warmly appreciated by the audience, who greeted his performance with loud laughter and applause. Miss Ruby Celeste was a charming Kitty; Mr. George F. Poison and Miss Jenny Burgwitz were excellent as Mr. and Mrs. Thunder; Miss Evie Reed was good as Martha Jane; Miss Florence Darley was pleasing as Mrs. Green; and Mr. Chris Van Bern an amusing Sammy Thunder The production was most favourably received.

ISLINGTON EMPIRE.

The near approach of the Christmas holidays has a perceptible effect upon the attendance at the various places of amusement, but the Islington Empire management has little reason to complain of diminished patronage. One of the leading attractions this week is the comic military pantomime production in four scenes, entitled The Skirmishers, played by Mr. Herbert Darnley's company. Into this is introduced a great deal of bustling business of a humorous description, the first scene representing Hyde Park. Here an alfresco performance is given by a supposed strong man, who bends iron rods, breaks chains, and accomplishes other wonderful feats, while a little crowd, consisting of soldiers and others, look on. There is, of course, the inevitable policeman, who gets mixed up in a general scuffle amongst the loafers, and "runs in" a middle-aged lady, probably, judging from her violent behaviour, one of the suffragettes who have been so much before the public of late. The second scene is the recruiting office, where the measuring is carried out amid much comical confusion and noise. Then follows the leave-taking at the railway station; and, lastly, at a mountain pass in a foreign land some skirmishing takes place, and is hailed with delight by the gallery. The production is smartly played, and there is not a dull moment throughout the performance, all those appearing in the piece working hard in the cause of merriment and good humour. The pantomime business is quite appropriate to the season of the year.

Mr. Albert Whelan is a clever versatile entertainer, and an artist whose stage work shows evidence of careful study and finish. Quite excellent are his imitations of Alf. Gibson, Chirgwin, and Harry Lauder. His whistling solos—one being from The Belle of New York—are excellently rendered; and he also scores with a capital song delivered in a racy style. Then Mr. Whelan puts on his overcoat, picks up his hat, bids his audience good-night, and quietly disappears. The artist known as Primavesi is a juggler with a neat, easy style of performing his tricks. To a jacket he attaches several pockets; then, taking a billiard cue, he strikes a ball, causing it to rebound from the end of the table and cleverly catching it in one of the pockets. With this and similarly clever tricks Primavesi wins the attention and the applause of the audience. Alexander and Russell appear in a comedy duet, entitled "The Professor and the Maid." The gentleman sings some songs in good style, and the lady, representing a pert servant-maid, who boasts she has once been on the stage, also distinguishes herself as a vocalist. Miss Claire Romaine, the popular musical comedy artist, opens with a ditty, the burden of which is "There's one boot less to clean." She sings it well, but it is hardly worthy of her abilities as a first-class comedienne. In her second song Miss Romaine represents a youth of seventeen, who calls attention to the fact that he "is getting a big boy now." Cruikshank, on a return visit here, repeats his usual success, both with patter and song. He can be pathetic, as in a ballad in which a little boy objects to his father bringing home another mamma, and he can be funny, as evidenced by his rendering of a well-written parody on "Beneath the shade of the old apple-tree." Mr. Charles Norton cleverly mimics variety stars, including Gus Elen, R. G. Knowles, Eugene Stratton, Wilkie Bard, and Joe Elvin. He is deservedly greeted with loud applause. So, too, is Mr. Dan Crawley, whose ditties, "So does father" and "I finish them off," meet with much acceptance. Mr. Charles Penrose, comedian, scores with "It's a wonder what music will do," and Miss Flo Cecil, comedienne, sings of the joys of ballooning, followed by a neat dance. The Sisters Warner meet with success as acrobatic dancers; and this week the Bioscope shows picturesque views of the wonders of Canada. The overture, "Irish ballads," arranged by Mr. A. Petersen, the musical conductor here, is a feature of the programme; and mention should be made of the valuable services rendered by Mr. George L. Wilson as manager, and Mr. Harry Blight as acting-manager.

THE EMPRESS.

A remarkable ringing of the changes occurred in Brixton on Saturday, when those who hastened to the Hippodrome to assist at the gala performance to celebrate the opening were met with the news that in consequence of the County Council restricting the new hall to one performance a night the management had transferred their staff and artists to the Empress across the road, while the personnel of that popular hall had taken possession of the Hippodrome, where the programme that had been given throughout the week at the Empress was presented. The decision was only arrived at on the evening previous, but both halls were nevertheless in full working order, and did very well under the circumstances.

Prior to the close of the performance at the Empress, Mr. Walter Gibbons, the managing-director of the hall, came forward and said he thought it was necessary on behalf of his colleagues and himself to give some explanation as to the drastic change which had taken place that evening. When they made the application for a licence for the Hippodrome some six or eight weeks ago to the committee of the County Council it was recommended by that body. The change was made on account of the Brixton Theatre not being sufficiently remunerative for the holders to recover adequate interest. On the recommendation of the committee all arrangements were made for the opening of the Brixton Hippodrome, and when the application came before the full Council, it would have passed but for one man—Mr. Hubbard. That gentleman was a member of the Borough Council which opposed the application, and as he is still a member of the County Council he was not only their accuser but their judge. Suppose a man, continued Mr. Gibbons, were to be tried by three judges, who made arrangements with one another beforehand to decide against the prisoner, would not that be decidedly unfair? Mr. Hubbard knew that he had sufficient majority to say that they should not run the Brixton Hippodrome as a two-houses-a-night hall, and acted accordingly. They had no restriction on the Empress, so they had had it fitted up for two-houses-a-night, while the original Empress staff and artists had gone to the Hippodrome. He trusted they would give them the same support at the Brixton Hippodrome, and if they favoured the system of two-houses-a-night they would also support them at the Empress. The action of their opponents had been the means of throwing a large number of people out of employment, and thereby causing considerable misery and hardship. After such an act as that he did not think Mr. Hubbard was fit to hold the position on the Council that he held at the present time. He was thrown ignominiously out of the Borough Council some weeks ago. He would ask them to remember that fact at the polls next March, and not to forget their friend Mr. Hubbard.

The stage was occupied on Saturday by a numerous programme of artists, supplemented by many "extra turns." The dramatic sketch, entitled The Amber Heart, was played by Mr. Fred Eustace and company to a constant succession of cheers and laughter. Mr. Albert Le Fre appeared in his eccentric get-up to sing, patter, and dance in inimitable fashion, and the Abdullah Arabs went through their exhilarating performance of tumbling and pyramid building to the keen satisfaction of all. Datas displayed his wonderful expertness in memory. Mr. George Antill created hearty laughter by his eccentricities, and among others who appeared at the first house were Yager and Yager, Alec Kennedy, Mamie Iris, Webb and Branstone, Morny Cash, Donald Hall and company, Dorothy Drew, Espinosa and Neilson, Dot Hardy, the Wright Trio, the Two Whites, and Ruffell's Bioscope.

Another fine array of talent awaited the audience at the second house, at which there appeared Victoria Monks, Alice Lloyd, Florrie Forde, Lillie Farrer, the Five Staleys, Athas and Collins, Gilbert Girard, Nina Martino, Tom Leo, Lillian Elfreda, Arthur Pearl, Sisters Hall, Sinclair and Parr, Billie Barlow, Jackley Wonders, Claire Romaine, Silvertone Quartet, Minnie Mace, Mathews and Cowper company in When the Clock Went Wrong, Walter Stanley, Maude and Sidney Wood, Lloyd Morgan, Harry Rogerson, and Ruffell's Bioscope.

The stage was under the direction of Mr. Charles F. Read, Mr. Gibbons's smart general manager, by whom the entertainment was organised. Mr. Walter R. Draper, the manager of the hall, it should be added, worked energetically to override the difficulties of the situation so suddenly presented.

GRAND, CLAPHAM.

The bright particular star of the Clapham programme is Miss Victoria Monks, who has been here several times lately, and cannot come too often. She is giving two numbers with the customary success—viz., "There's one little spot that beats all the lot" and "Leaving home." In both of these she appears to the greatest advantage, and the choruses are most heartily taken up. At the conclusion of her turn the applause is deafening, and it is some time before the audience will allow the performance to proceed. Another excellent turn is that of the Three Laurels in their interesting item, Fun on the Ping-Pong Table. Many new items have recently been added to this entertaining turn, all of which are performed with an ease that is surprising. The turn is further improved by the antics of the comical member of the party, roars upon roars of laughter greeting his efforts. George Collins is scoring with a song about "The girls all call me Jam," the effect of which is much improved by his unique costume. C. St. John Denton and George Rowland's company are presenting the sketch, entitled Mixed Bathing, which is now much improved. The dude Sebastian is certainly the life and soul of the piece. His antics all through are very funny, and he is largely responsible for the success achieved. Miss Freda Chalmers has a fine stage presence, and does what little is required of her in a most satisfactory manner, and the singing and dancing are tuneful and neat.

Herbert Darnley and company are again presenting their sketch Muscles. This has on two or three previous occasions been reported upon in these columns, and does not call for further detailed comment. As a laughter-maker, it is a great success, and it therefore fulfils the purpose for which it was written. Walton and Lester are here again with their amusing concoction, entitled Conjuring and Comedy, and hearty laughter greets their efforts to amuse. Dan Conroy has an amusing song, entitled "It is glorious," and the applause he gets is of the right sort. It is a pity that time does not permit of his giving another. Lily Langtry, as sprightly as ever, is giving her old success, "'Ampstead 'Eath"; and Childie Stuart, a charming comedienne, is giving a number entitled "Whoa, whoa, whoa." Clarissa Talbot and Albert Pearce are presenting their song-scena, The Spider and the Fly, which is quite the prettiest item on the programme. This is followed by Sweet Eileen. The Two Bostons are here with their "Walk Up" show, which has of late been considerably improved.

Quite a feature of the bill is the bioscope, introducing pictures of Port Sunlight Soap Works, which are followed with the greatest interest. Mr. Harry Ketteman, the manager, discharges his duties in the front of the house in an able manner, and derives every assistance from his acting-manager, Mr. Charles Lurring.

STANDARD.

One of the most agreeable turns in a fine programme is that of Miss Lilian Lea, a lady of considerable vocal attainments and a most pleasing personal appearance. Miss Lea's rendering of "Sing me to sleep" and "Il Bacio" is characterised by a fine delivery, a high vocal range, and expression and feeling. The praise which is showered upon her by way of applause is vociferous, and as an encore she still further delighted her audience on the night of our visit by singing "Killarney." Mr. T. E. Dunville has a host of comical ideas to offer in his songs. His description of a cricket match and the part he played in it, as well as his attempt to swim the Channel, cannot fail to arouse the mirthfulness even of a misanthrope. His facial contortions and his quaint movements accentuate the humour of his lines. Miss Lily Kirton is a pleasing and accomplished comedienne; and an amusing "juvenile comedian" is to be found in Mr. Mike Asher. Mr. Phil Bransby is extremely entertaining in his coster business, and his song, "It don't suit your tall hat, John," finds much favour with the audience. The Smythsons have a laughter-raiser in a small sketch, entitled Love Germs, which tells the story of a scientist's concoction, and what effect it has upon his wife and servant. Mr. Geo. H. Smythson as the scientist, Miss Louie Smythson as the wife, and Miss Ciss Smythson as the domestic, contrive to make the trifle go with a fine swing and any amount of merriment. Mr. Walter Wallis's boxing song proves an amusing item, and his eccentricities are much appreciated.

Miss Mabel Bright and company are presenting what they call an original vocal mélange, called Girls will be Girls. There are two scenes, one depicting a pretty English forest glade, and the other a picturesque fastness of North America. The six ladies comprising the troupe sing and dance in most vivacious fashion, and their efforts are to be highly commended. In the first scena the delights of a hammock are the burden of their ditty, and in the second they appear attired in the fantastic garb of Red Indians. In the latter it is, of course, a case of exceedingly young ladies pretending to be Redskins, but the pretence furnishes much enjoyment to the spectators of the merry frolics. The names of the girls who take part in the number are Misses Mabel Bright, Dolly Lorne, Mina Trew, Gwen Zalska, Nina Mascot, and Lottie Thorne. Park's Eton Boys, "the champion juvenile singers of the world," are once more welcomed, and Milli May and Theresa are seen and heard to advantage in a bright and smart quick-change and vocal act. Mr. Ernest Rees dilates in a droll way on woman's dress and other subjects; and Harding and Preston distinguish themselves as a comedy duo. Miss Lucy Coventry, a sprightly comedienne and dancer, sings in good style a couple of character songs, "Oh, Dinah!" and "Gay Paree"; and from the Edisonograph we get several series of capital pictures, one of which, an anticipation of the time "when woman commands," is particularly humorous.

EALING HIPPODROME.

A melodramatic sketch of the first order, The Mystery of the Cliff, continues to gain in popularity. A happy idea is realised in the combination of the bioscope with the action of the sketch, which gains strength by the association, and, as thus presented, the clever playlet of Messrs. Will Evans and Tom Craven never ceases to enchain attention. Love is pathetically portrayed by Mr. Ernest Leicester and Miss Cissy Farrell; comedy is equally safe in the hands of Mr. Sid Craven and Miss Jessica Lait, and villainy, as interpreted by Miss Violet Fulton, leaves nothing to be desired. Catering, as he does, for all, Mr. E. W. James is wise in his presentation of Duncan's collies. It is a real pleasure to watch the youngsters' expressions of delight as these beautiful and wonderfully trained animals run, leap, and almost laugh through the items of their programme. There is much that is novel in this performance, and whether as musicians with their "Blue Bells of Scotland," as skippers and somersaulters, or as a fire brigade they are equally expert and admirable.

The Eight English Roses, vocalists and speciality dancers, are graceful and sprightly representatives of the national emblem, notwithstanding that their dresses are blue. In their ensemble song and march, "The Glory of War," their evolutions are well timed, while their pretty dance, "Poppies," has many happy combinations. Connie Morie, comedienne and dancer, makes a dainty figure in a particularly becoming Chinese costume. Her song, "Below," is of the sweetest, and her dancing excellent.

The comedy vaudeville, A Bit of String, artistically tied by Leslie Bell and Lilly Pearl's company, proves to be a cord upon which many brisk and sparkling episodes may be strung. A young lady, persecuted by the attentions of an obnoxious foreigner, is about to quit her apartments when the advent of a handsome son of the sea brings a considerable amount of breeze into the affaire. This son of Neptune proposes to smooth matters by posing as the lady's husband, but after the key has been turned in the lock by the maidservant the situation takes a compromising turn. Of course, all turns out in the best possible manner in the end, and the husband in posse is to become husband in esse.

Mr. Arthur Aldridge has undoubtedly a fine baritone voice, and in his two songs, "Oft Times" and "My Dreams," present one of the most finished examples of vocalisation yet heard upon the Hippodrome stage. Such a turn as that of Mr. Aldridge is a treat for all lovers of music, and a thunder of applause rewards his skill and talent. Regan and Ryan provide the usual cross-talk comedy act, which always evokes roars of laughter, and the "Rag-time" millionaire is responsible for many side aches in the front of the house. In his souvenirs of "Wilfred Denver," Mr. V. L. Granville, actor-mimic, is most successful, while his portraiture of Svengali is repulsively perfect. "The troubles of a chauffeur," as depicted by the Bioscope, are many and varied. Here the "road hog" is seen at his worst, but is well punished in the end. Kelly and Gillette appear in their "Billiard-room Antics," the side-splitting comicality of which is well appreciated, and Mr. James Kurry has a witty number in his song, "Philosophy," and is most popular. In a selection from The Country Girl and in the rendering of the incidental music of the various turns, Mr. W. Neale's band is in every way admirable.

RICHMOND THEATRE.

A capital bill is presented here this week. Miss Dot Hardy sings her allotted ditties with considerable vigour, and wins approval and applause. The Haytors give an amusing sketch, in which a lady who has lost her reason is consigned to the care of a new keeper; the fun waxes fast and furious when the lady appears—with apologies to Ophelia—and betrays evidence of her sanity in a marked form. Everybody in the sketch works hard to win favour, and the sketch is provocative of peals of merriment. Mr. Harry Mountford discussed the meteorological eccentricities of the weather, and thence veered on to ladies and kindred topics; his patter appeared to amuse everyone immensely, and his turn is a good one. Sibb and Sibb display marvellous agility in a double trapeze act, and are quite at home in mid-air, where they go through a variety of daring evolutions that meet with unstinted applause. Always favourites here, the Mayvilles again score heavily in their human marionette show. As an amorous policeman and a dainty damsel from the realms of Kitchen Land they are very diverting. They were equally amusing as a contingent of the Salvation Army, and followed their success by a clever Scotch impersonation. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Norfolk Megone contributes a tuneful selection from The Girl Behind the Counter.

Mr. R. A. Beaton's company appear in a farcical sketch, Poor Phil Garlic, and win considerable favour. The plot deals with an irascible old gentleman who has lost a son, Lieut Phil Garlic, in South Africa; but a certain Chandler, who bears a strong resemblance to the son reported dead, resolves to make money out of the parent by presenting himself at the dead lieutenant. When, however, Chandler is confronted with a baby and a wife he excuses himself on the score of absent-mindedness. Anon, the real lieutenant turns up—he having only been wounded, though reported dead, and is confronted by a blackmailing female, Sarah, who is also in possession of an offspring of doubtful origin rejoicing in the name of Arabella. Plot and counter-plot follow in rapid succession; of course, the inevitable explanation follows, and the troubles of Phil Garlic come to an end. The plot needs compression.

Miss Maud Walsh appears in male attire, but explains that this is by force of circumstances, having eluded somewhat injudiciously a husband who returned home late; Maud Rochez presents a variety theatre run entirely by monkeys, and wonderful they are; the orchestra is composed entirely of Darwinian species, the scene-shifters and supers are of the same type, and the "artists" are also monkeys. Their programme, too, is quite clever. They conjure, juggle, wrestle, motor, dance, steeplechase, play musical instruments, and, in short, their versatility is amazing; the chef d'orchestre would put Sousa to the blush. Nothing funnier than this has been seen for a long time, and Miss Maud Rochez must have spent much time and patience in teaching her pupils. Shang Hai, a Chinese juggler, performs his tricks with singular dexterity, and leaves everyone wondering how it is done; and the bioscope scenes, "The Cab," go to prove how happy the lady might have been "with either were the other dear charmer away."

"THE DEVIL'S SUNDAY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

DEAR SIR,—About three years ago I wrote a one-act tragedy, and produced the same at the West London theatre, which I called A Jury of One. This play I sold to Mr. Jno. Lawson. The next time it appears I find it rechristened A Bride for a Living.

The Devil's Sunday is but another variant of the same theme, and, furthermore, I find that it is to be played next week under the title of Vanity. And why not?

I think it was Dion Boucicault who said that one plot was enough to make fourteen plays out of.—Faithfully yours,

PICKETS AND PERFORMERS.

ACTION OF THE V.A.F.

A brief announcement in our columns last week stated that the L.C.C. had granted a music hall licence to Mr. Walter Gibbons for the Brixton Hippodrome, with the condition—imposed for the first time in the history of licensing—that only one performance nightly should be given. As contracts had been made for artists to appear twice nightly at the converted theatre, it was determined by its directorate on Friday afternoon to inaugurate the twice-nightly plan at the Empress, and make a complete transposition of management, staff, artists, and entertainment from one house to the other.

This solution of the difficulty in which Mr. Walter Gibbons had been placed by the unexpected decision of the Council did not commend itself to the executive of the Variety Artists' Federation, and at an emergency meeting held on the Saturday it was decided that a telegram should be sent to all members, instructing them to stick closely to their contracts, and insist on performing at the place stated therein. It was further decided that a sub-committee be appointed to wait in the vicinity of the two halls on Monday, and give the instructions sent on the Saturday to members who might commence their engagements on that evening or to deputies. A certain number of performers followed the suggestions of the Federation both on Monday and Tuesday, when the directors of the two halls obtained, from Mr. Justice Bray, an interim injunction against Mr. Frank Gerald, the general secretary of the V.A.F., Mr. Albert Schafer, and Mr. C. C. Bartram in restraint of intimidation—i.e., of "watching and besetting artists engaged at the Brixton Hippodrome and the Brixton Empress, and inciting them not to appear thereat; also, from doing anything to cause a disturbance in the neighbourhood, or do injury to the licensee of both halls."

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federation on Tuesday the following resolution was passed :—

"That on and after Dec. 4, 1906, any member acting contrary to instructions from the Executive Committee be summoned before the Committee, and if their explanations are not satisfactory, they be expelled from the Federation."

The following letter has also been issued; and from its context may be gleaned the case of the Federationists :—

"DEAR SIR OR MADAM,—We are desirous of helping artists to fulfil to the letter the terms of their contracts for this establishment. Those artists that have contracts for the Hippodrome, Brixton, are to play only at the Hippodrome, and not at the Empress, while those who have contracts at the Empress must not play at the Hippodrome. The Variety Artists' Federation hereby give you notice that in deputising for artists you are helping the management to break the terms of their contracts, and are hereby requested not to perform. If, however, you have to-day entered into contract to perform at either of the before-mentioned halls, most assuredly you are to fulfil that contract.—Yours faithfully,

MR. WALTER GIBBONS' STATEMENT.

"FRANK GERALD, General Secretary."

Speaking to our interviewer about the dispute, Mr. Walter Gibbons complained of the comments of the cheap press on matters of a rather unpleasant character which had nothing whatever to do with him. For instance, an evening journal published a conversation between its representative and an official of the V.A.F., in which the latter stated that a couple of music hall artists were paid at the rate of 15s. each, and that they were compelled to pay for a brougham out of this sum because the management desired them to keep up appearances. Such a statement scarcely calls for serious comment; but Mr. Gibbons has given us an opportunity of inspecting his books to prove that he has never paid "starvation salaries." He tells us that he has never given less than £4 10s. a week even to the most insignificant artist.

In respect to the picketing proceedings of last Monday Mr. Gibbons applied for and obtained an interim injunction on Tuesday, and a decision in connection with the injunction will be given on Tuesday next. He has also commenced an action for damages against the Federation and certain of its officials for the interference with his entertainments at Brixton this week. He informs us that on Saturday night, when he asked the artists who were engaged to appear at the Empress if they would go over to the Brixton Hippodrome, the only dissentients were Atlas and Vulcana, and their objection was a perfectly reasonable one—because they could not move their appliances from the one hall to the other in the time. "All the others," said Mr. Gibbons, "appreciated the position, and rendered us every assistance in their power. Mr. Herbert Shelley, who had a great mass of scenery for his sketch, A Dandy Outlaw, not only did not grumble, but said he was only too pleased to help us out of our difficulty. At the gala performance we gave at the Empress, in lieu and in celebration of the opening of the Hippodrome, forty-one artists appeared, including some of the most prominent members of the profession. On Monday ten artists were booked for the Brixton Hippodrome. Six of them expressed themselves as perfectly willing to be transferred to the Empress, but four objected, and did not go on.

"I wish to contradict the statement made by a newspaper to the effect that a deputation from the Federation waited upon me, and wish to say," continued Mr. Gibbons, "that I have always refused to meet any of the paid officials of the Federation. I met several artists and discussed matters with them, but I did not converse with them as a deputation from the V.A.F. I am, and always have been, willing to see artists at any time, and to discuss any little grievances that may arise between them and myself. I have no ill-feeling whatever against the artists, for the majority of whom I have a most friendly regard—an attitude which they reciprocate. In my opinion, those artists who refused to appear were misled by certain officials of the Federation.

On Wednesday evening Mr. Gibbons sent to all the artists who held contracts for the Brixton Hippodrome a letter, a copy of which we here give.

The Empress Theatre of Varieties, Brixton.

BRIXTON HIPPODROME.

DEAR SIR,—Owing to the decision of the London County Council on Nov. 30 last to attach a condition to the licence of the above hall, prohibiting two performances nightly, it would be contrary to law for your contract to be carried out at that hall.

The company does not wish, unless compelled to do so, to declare your contract as at an end (as the company is advised it has power to do), and I am glad to inform you that arrangements have been made whereby artists will be enabled to fulfil their contracts at the Empress Theatre of Varieties, Brixton, where two performances nightly will be given. Under the circumstances, I hope you will find it convenient to fulfil your contract there, instead of at the Hippodrome. If you are agreeable, kindly sign and return at once the enclosed form; if you do not agree, please fill in form accordingly.—Yours faithfully,

———, Director

The form for the artist's signature is as follows :—

To the Secretary,
Empress Theatre of Varieties, Ltd.,
December, 1906.

Strike out accordingly { I agree to perform at the Empress Theatre / I do not agree } of varieties instead of the Brixton Hippodrome under the Contracts made by me.

A similarly-worded letter was also sent to artists previously engaged to open at the Empress, who were asked to transfer to the Hippodrome. A few hours after the letters were posted Mr. Gibbons received several communications in which the writers expressed their willingness to agree to the change. One of these was Mr. Bert Coote, who wrote, "Yes, certainly; I agree to whatever suits your convenience."

STRATFORD EMPIRE.

Mr. John Leopold's company in The House Boat, a most mirthful concoction, provides the chief attraction in this week's bill. The story, which is rather subservient to clever knockabout business and tumbling feats, tells of a certain gay Lothario with the apt patronymic of Scorcher, who invites a couple of "saucy serios" to an up-the-river picnic. Through the Colonel's carelessness, his better half gets wind of the arrangement and decides to go also, taking with her the maid-of-all-work, Maria. As the Colonel's friend, who would make the fourth of the house-boat party, disappoints, he takes with him his servant Lively, and as Lively happens to be Maria's "intended" there are breakers ahead for the revellers. They do indeed have anything but the blissful time anticipated, for the irate Mrs. Scorcher and her ally Maria enlist the aid of a couple of agile tramps, and their combined efforts to spoil the pleasure of the party on the house-boat are so successful that undoubtedly Colonel Scorcher decides to reform. Mr. Watson Hume portrays the Colonel capitally, and Lively (who is passed off as a self-made millionaire) is played in just the right vein by Mr. Willie Leopold. The two free-and-easy tramps have amusing exponents in Mr. John Leopold, jun., and Mr. Ernest Leopold. The police constables are well represented by Mr. Tom Leopold and Mr. Charles Gough; Blobbs, the innkeeper, is played by Mr. Wilfred Vaughan; and Tipit, a remarkably active and ubiquitous waiter, is portrayed by Mr. Barry Lupino. Miss Kathleen Cavanagh depicts the irate Mrs. Scorcher very well, and a droll impersonation of Maria comes from Miss Gertie Winter; Dolly Damper and Daisy Damper being appropriately played by Miss Amy Hall and Miss Queenie Bronte. Mr. William Howarth, Mr. Harry Oates, Miss May Gordon, and Miss Zillah Fair lend valuable assistance in minor parts.

Miss Millie Hylton is always a favourite in Stratford, and there is plenty of applause when she appears in a smart "principal boy" dress and sings "My Irish Daisy," in which she is accompanied by pretty and graceful little Decima Brooke. Her next item, "By the side of the Zuyder Zee," is in high favour, and her juvenile assistant's clever clog dance is much admired. The Matweef-Hugoston Troupe of Russian singers and dancers contribute an expert display of balancing and jumping which is watched with keen interest, and their characteristic songs are applauded. The "Land of the Leek" is well represented by Mr. Tom Owen, who renders a Welsh dame song very acceptably, and his amusing patter compels laughter. The Saphos, in a comedy bar act, show the possession of much skill, and their clever turn is advantageously interspersed with bright comedy business Miss Sybil St. Elmo creates a very favourable impression, and her artistic vocalism is warmly applauded. Aunt Matilda, played by Mr. Frank Elliston and company, is an old theme, but served up in bright and exhilarating style. A gay young spark has "expectations" from an elderly spinster aunt, and, expecting a visit from her, he determines to be on his best behaviour. He learns, however, that his young friend is going to have some fun and personate the visitor, and he vows for "Auntie" a warm time. The joke, however, is not carried out, and the real aunt appears, and the brutal treatment she receives at the hands of her dutiful nephew would appear to spoil his "expectations" for ever, but fortunately explanations ensue, and he is forgiven. The Aunt and Nephew are played with a keen sense of humour by their respective exponents, and the inquisitive friend is well portrayed.

Mr. Fred Elton submits a refined and pleasing turn. He appears as a naval officer, and, seated at the piano, he accompanies himself in some most interesting songs, which his excellent voice enables him to do full justice to. Miss Rose Hamilton secures plenty of applause for her songs, and has to contribute numerous encore verses. Speedwell paints portraits of celebrities with remarkable facility, the easily distinguished features of Lord Kitchener, Sir Henry Irving, and General Buller being loudly cheered. The current programme opens with the overture, "Victory March," arranged by the musical director of the Stratford Empire, Mr Augustus Greco. Mr. T. S. Mayne, the popular acting manager, discharges his onerous duties to the general satisfaction, and he has an able lieutenant in Mr. W. S. Buccleuch.

MR. ROBERT ARTHUR'S pantomime at Aberdeen was, as is usual with his "annuals," noteworthy for the superlative excellence of the company and the lavish splendour of the production. A gigantic success was scored with Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter's song "There's a man in Manitoba," and other numbers published by that firm which evoked delighted encomiums and demands for repetition were "I can see red roses blooming," "Snowflakes," "Under the umbrella, Ella," "Any time you're passing by," "The shade of the old apple tree," and "Humorous history."

FEW waltzes have had the vogue enjoyed by the one named "The Choristers," by Bernard Phelps; but the same gifted composer has just published with Mr. David Day what looks like being as successful a dance as its forerunner, one which will be known as "The Convent Girl's Waltz."

No. 52 of the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s "Sixpenny Successes" takes the form of Herr Julian Kandt's famous "Queen of the West" march, which has had the distinguished honour of being performed before their Majesties the King and Queen.

Two new songs, specially written and composed by Messrs. Harrington and Tate for Miss Vesta Victoria, entitled "I've told his missus all about it" and "I'm looking for a Don Juan," which will be produced both in England (this year) and America (next), as soon as this talented artist opens there, have been secured for publication by the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.

ON Monday, at the Manchester Hippodrome, Mr. Dennis Drew, assisted by Stedman's boys and the fine choir of the establishment, will present his Kiplingesque military scena, Back to Barracks. In the first scene, Outside the Gates, he will introduce his new song, "The beat of the drum," by Kenneth Lyle, and in the second, the Barrack Square, the popular recruiting song, by Leslie Stiles and Ralph Nairn, "Come and be a soldier." Both songs are published by Francis and Day.

OWING to his success in Cork, Dublin, and Belfast, the management of each of these places have booked Mr. Frank Coyle to return in Dec., 1907.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

SYDNEY, OCT. 30.—The Christian was revived by Mr. J. C. Williamson at Her Majesty's on the 27th with absolutely the best cast yet seen in Australia. The company, headed by Mr. Charles Waldron and Miss Ola J. Humphreys, had previously appeared in an American drama of the backwoods (The Squaw Man), and its new departure was looked forward to with considerable curiosity. But the result was satisfactory. Miss Ola J. Humphreys was an ideal Glory Quayle, handsome, wilful, winning, and refined. Mr. Charles Waldron devoted much earnestness to the portrayal of John Storm. The scene in Glory's apartments was strongly yet delicately handled. Lord Robert Ure was admirably embodied by Mr. Cyril Mackay, who was the cynical man of the world to the life. Mr. Harry Plimmer played Francis Drake in polished style. Mrs. G. B. W. Lewis gave an excellent account of bluff, outspoken Mrs. Callender; and Miss Florence Gleeson did all that was possible in the part of Polly Love. The garrulous Mrs. Morgan was humorously portrayed by Miss Katie Towers; and Miss Beatrice Usher (Tilly Deane) and Miss Mary Bancroft (Betty Belmont) were also excellent. Mr. Hardie Kirkland was sufficiently stern as Lord Storm, and Mr. George Chalmers did well as Parson Quayle. The hospital matron was in the capable hands of Miss Ada Stirling, and a good low-comedy parson was the Canon Wealthy of Mr. Fred Cambourne.

"THE FATAL WEDDING" has given way at the Criterion to The Rake's Wife, which included the company already here, also Miss Roland Watts Phillips and a newcomer, Mr. Conway Wingfield, each being an element of strength. Miss May Congden is the Midge of the cast, and Mr. Charles Vane the Tom Birch. Miss Madeline Meredith's Maude Sullivan was unquestionably good, and Miss Ida Gresham also joined the company to play Nance Birch, a part cleverly acted; and Mr. C. R. Stanford presented a homely picture of David Barnett, the wheelwright; Mr. Herbert Leigh scored as the villainous Philip Kennedy; Mr. Tom Cannam was a funny Christopher Crawl, and Mr. E. M. Beresford a careful Isaac Hermann. Miss Roland Watts Phillips brightened up the play with her hearty comedy.

MR. HARRY RICKARDS returned on the 25th Oct. with glowing accounts of the kindness shown him at home. He comes back with a list of important engagements running into several years yet to come. The bicycle accident which happened to Mr. Rickards just before leaving London gave him a severe shaking, and the doctor has ordered him a "good holiday." Meanwhile, Mr. Edward Maas controls the Tivoli, and the current bill includes Alf Chester, Harry Tate's company, Cassy Walmer, Minnie Duncan, and Arthur Godfrey, Augustin and Harkey, Casselei and James, the Musical Ibsons, Victor Kelly, Phillips Brothers, Brightie Smith, Olive Lenton, Tim Howard, and others. Next Saturday Harry Jervis, Violet Stockdale, and the Alaskas, comedy acrobats, will make their Australasian début.

MISS MYRA KEMBLE, long and favourably known on the Australian stage, died in Melbourne on Oct. 28. Miss Kemble was a clever actress. Her chief successes were in The Woman in White, with Mr. Wybert Reeve, and Puck with William Creswick. In private life she was Mrs. James H. White, and for years Miss Kemble has been a great sufferer. She was a native of Ireland.

MELBOURNE, OCT. 30.—PRINCESS THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. Allan Hamilton.—The Little Stranger is attracting large houses, and bids fair to run for some time to come. Master Leslie Park, as the precocious young imp, creates much amusement, and is ably supported by Messrs. Meynell and Gunn's clever company.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Lessee, Mr. J. C. Williamson; Business-Manager, Mr. Geo. Tallis.—After a lapse of some years, The Shop Girl was revived on Saturday evening by the Royal Comic Opera Company, and served to attract a large audience. Miss Florence Young was breezy and charming as the Shop Girl, and sang in excellent style, her best number being "Over the hills." Mr. George Lauri made a most diverting Shop Walker, and caused roars of laughter. Mr. Fred Leslie, as a foreign count, had ample opportunity of displaying his talent, and contributed a couple of eccentric dances which won well-deserved applause. The rest of the company lent able assistance to the performance.

OPERA HOUSE.—Proprietor, Mr. Harry Rickards; Business-Manager, Mr. Fred Aydon.—La Moto Girl is at present the star attraction at this theatre, and on Saturday evening the doll-like figure completely mystified a large audience. Stewart and Lorraine made their first appearance in a musical act, which met with approval. Les Cabiacs and the Alaskas repeated their clever acrobatic feats; Larry Lewis rendered some quaint songs; Violet Stockelle is an established favourite, while numerous other artists supply interesting turns. Mr. Harry Rickards returned to Melbourne last week after his trip to London in search of novelties for his various Australian theatres. It is understood his engagements include some startling turns, which are being awaited with interest.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The concert on Wednesday evening was more interesting from an instrumental than vocal point of view. It commenced with a carefully-executed violoncello solo by Miss Florence Simpkins, who played De Munck's "Pensée Elégiaque" and "Arlequin," by Popper. In Beethoven's duet for violin and pianoforte, "Andante piu tosto, Allegretto and Allegro piacevole," Miss L. Ayton and Miss M. Ayton were fairly successful, although at times somewhat faulty in intonation. A very young performer, Miss Beryl Crèmes, was heartily greeted by the audience for her promising mandoline solo on popular "Scotch Airs." Miss Crèmes is a pupil of Madame Waldahoff. A pianoforte solo of Chopin's "Three Preludes" was neatly performed by Miss Florence Nightingale, an associate of the Guildhall School, and Mr. Arthur Jones deserves much praise for his painstaking playing of John Thomas's harp solo, "Melody in F." The last instrumental piece was a piano solo, "Expansion," by Moszkowski, executed by Miss Katie Deslandes. The vocal items included Sullivan's song, "Thou are passing hence," carefully sung by Mr. Ernest Muriel; and Mr. Herbert Barnett was heard in two of Findon's songs, "Allah be with us" and "Far across the desert sands." Miss Annie Osborne gained applause for "The four leaf clover," by Willeby, although the music was in too low a key for her voice. Miss E. F. Gaunt was not well advised in choosing so difficult a piece as Allitsen's "A song of thanksgiving," and Mr. Charles Reddick, who sang "A life that lives for you," by Sullivan, will do justice to his good voice by paying more attention to clear enunciation. Miss Christobel Daniel (a pupil of Miss Kate Rorke) recited "The strange case of Mr. Fogg's Baby," one of Max Adeler's amusing short stories. The accompanist was Miss Jenny Hyman, and Mrs. Charles P. Smith superintended the young ladies who appeared on the platform.

A FLYING matinée in aid of the Lilley Testimonial Fund took place on Wednesday at the Birmingham Empire. Mr. Matcham, the resident-manager, had voluntary assistance from artists from all the local theatres and music halls.

MR. JAMES DE VOYE is unable to perform through severe indisposition, and is at present an inmate of Leeds Infirmary. We hope soon to hear of Mr. De Voye's convalescence, and to see again his clever horse Billy.

PARIS ECHOES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Paulus, the famous French singer, who was the great star of the Parisian music halls some fifteen or twenty years ago, and who will still be remembered by the London public, as he appeared both at the Trocadero and the Empire, is in a very destitute condition. A group of sympathisers have organised a benefit for him which is to take place on Tuesday next, at the Théâtre de la Gaîté, which has been kindly lent for the purpose by Messrs. Isola and Coquelin. The greatest artists are to appear at this performance, and it is hoped with the proceeds to be able to save the very popular singer from a penurious existence. Amongst his many most successful songs was the celebrated "En revenant de la Revue," which made General Boulanger famous.

Paulus was born at Marseilles, and was the very incarnation of the spirit and dash which characterises the "Meridionaux," as they are called here. He was not alone a great artist, but a most energetic and enterprising business man. At one time, he possessed rather important vineyards, and used to sell his own wines and cognac. In reality he was too generous, and no artist ever appealed to him in vain. If all the money that he lent with such a free hand was returned to him, it would certainly not be necessary to organise a benefit in his behalf. At one time he drove the finest horses in Paris, and lived like a prince in the Avenue de Neuilly. He is still very active, and does not appear old at all, though his voice unfortunately has failed him, and he can only sing songs which he illustrates by pantomimic action.

Any subscriptions that might be sent him by his old admirers, would be gratefully received at The Era, Parisian Office, 60, rue de Caumartin, Paris (C. M. Ercole, representative).

Wrestling is on the wane in the Parisian music halls. Padoubny, the Russian, remains the victor of the most serious and important contest—that is to say, the World's Championship, which has been disputed at the Folies-Bergères.

The Alhambra has, as usual, a very fine programme—most varied and interesting. Mme. Henriette de Serris presents some marvellous tableaux and bas-reliefs. Mme. Anna Thibaud, the popular French singer, has reappeared, and was covered with flowers on the evening of her début. Le Sallandri plays a very pretty pantomime, Le Vertige; Eugénie Fougere has reappeared with her usual success; Radford and Valentine cause the house to be convulsed with laughter by their most comical act; the Baltus Troupe, in their strange act, are very pleasing; and amongst others, we may mention the Four Jumels, in their acrobatic act; Cornier, the Sisters Trentanovi, Amiel, the New York Comedy Four, &c. Altogether a most interesting and artistic programme.

The Hippodrome, under the joint management of Messrs. Houcke and Bostock, since the production of the gorgeous spectacular pantomime, India, is turning crowds away nightly. The magnificence of the show must be seen to be realised. It is this same spectacle which was the hit of the season at Circus Busch in Berlin. Five hundred people take part, and there are over a hundred animals.

A stampede occurred the other morning whilst the elephants were rehearsing their fight. Breaking through several gates, they were finally stopped by the energy of their keeper, as they were trying to force their way into the Place Clichy. One of their attendants was seriously hurt, and had to be taken to the hospital. Had they succeeded in getting through, things would have been serious.

Not content with the magnificence of their spectacle, Messrs. Houcke and Bostock have added thereto a most interesting programme, including Les Perez in their ladder act, Rossow's midgets, Walter's sea lions, a very clever shooting act by Rupper and Knoops, &c.

The Cirque Métropole, which has been doing very good business with the wrestling, has just added a new and sensational act to their very varied programme. Mlle. Walkirie, on her horse Wotan, is attached underneath a balloon, which rises to the cupola of the circus. When at the highest point of her ascension, there is a display of fireworks around the horse, the well-trained animal not moving under these most trying circumstances. This is a very sensational and effective act.

The Olympia presents a new and very interesting programme, amongst which we have a distinct novelty, "Little Red Riding Hood," with her pack of trained wolves. These animals are presented by the Comtesse de X., at one time a masked dompteuse, who appeared at the Westminster Aquarium some years since.

The Casino de Paris has introduced a new and so-called sensational attraction. It is called "The Human Brake." A large automobile carrying six passengers, is stopped by the sheer strength of a gentleman in evening dress, who prevents its going across the stage. Unfortunately, the show does not appear genuine, and has not created the sensation anticipated.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

On Thursday evening, Nov. 29, the Royal Choral Society at the Albert Hall, in the presence of a large audience, gave Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha. It is now some eight years since Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, then a student at the Royal College of Music, produced "Hiawatha's Wedding," a setting of Longfellow's "Song of Hiawatha," and the composition brought the young composer success; in the following year "The Death of Minnehaha" was written, and after another six months "Hiawatha's Departure" was added to the work, the complete composition, which is set to music for soprano, tenor, and baritone solos, with chorus and orchestra, being performed by the Royal Choral Society at the Albert Hall in 1900. Many works by the younger composers, after achieving a certain measure of success, have passed into oblivion, but this is not the case with Hiawatha, which has firmly established the fame of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor with the musical public, and with good reason, as the music is imaginative and clever, containing good opportunities both for soloists and choir. The performance on Thursday by the Royal Choral Society left little room for adverse criticism, even if the chorus did not at times give all the delicacy required. Mr. Ben Davies was the tenor, and sang the beautiful air, "Onaway, awake, beloved" superbly, being rewarded with loud and long continued applause. Madame Emily Squire sang the soprano music with purity of intonation, but was somewhat lacking in dramatic power, her solo, "Spring has come with all its splendour" in the second part being well received; and Mr. Dalton Baker sang the baritone music with artistic feeling. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted, and the analytical notes on the programme were by Mr. Joseph Bennett and Mr. A. J. Jaeger.

MR. HARRY S. HART has secured Mr. Charles Dixton's comedy sketch, called Uncle Obadiah, which met with much success at the Standard and Middlesex last July, and which, we understand, is being rapidly booked up for 1907.

WEATHERSBY'S AGENCY is sending a complete vaudeville company, headed by Fred W. Millis, the Australian ventriloquist, to the Artillery Theatre, Woolwich, next week.

"LORD" GEORGE ANTOUN, that old-established variety agent, is, owing to increasing business, removing to larger offices, and from Monday next, Dec. 10, his address will be 120, Kennington Park-road, London, S.E.

THE BRIXTON HIPPODROME.

Much tribulation has attended the transformation of the Brixton Theatre into a music-hall. Difficulties with the County Council arose in October last, and the opening was consequenlty postponed. Opposition at the Licensing Committee's session was successfully overcome, and the inauguration was fixed for Saturday last, but owing ot the unwarrantable action of the Council at the eleventh hour, it was prevented from opening except for one performance a night. Saturday accordingly saw the new hall opened, not with the company intended, but with that which had been doing duty all the week at the Empress opposite, the management and stall of that hall having been transferred in its entirety across the road.

The theatre, the foundation-stone of which was laid by the late Sir Henry Irving in May, 1894, has been thoroughly redecorated, and presents a pleasing interior. The scheme of colouring is cream and gold on terra-cotta. The wall-paper is of a crimson hue, and handsome plush curtains and hangings of maroon complete the agreeable effect. A number of electric lamps hanging round the balcony and gallery brilliantly illuminate the auditorium, and the ceiling bears a floreated design in gold on a tinted ground. Entirely new scenery has been provided, an elaborate scene-drop depicting a Venetian palace being tastefully painted. Further improvements, including the renewal of the seating, are also in hand.

Unforeseen circumstances prevented the presentation of this week's programme exactly as it was intended, but the audiences during the week have been regaled with a long and varied show. One of the chief features of the bill as presented on the night of our visit was the episode Vanity, a condensed version of the sketch The Devil's Sunday, which was produced at the Metropolitan last week. The parts are now practically confined to two, that of the heartless wife and her deluded husband. Mrs. Lawson plays the former rôle with the same elaboration and skill as before to seems to revel in the baseness of the frankly criminal Fay Faber, and moves the audience to laughter in the lighter passages, and electrifies them with the tigrish ferocity of the baffled woman. The part of the unfortunate husband now falls to Mr. A. Royston, who gives a remarkable impersonation instinct with dramatic intensity, and depicting by vivid facial play the passion which animates the character. The audience derived great satisfaction from the sketch, and the artists were enthusiastically recalled.

Sensation is imported into the bill by the feats of Mr. A. Kenny, who does surpassing wonders with the bicycle. He is able to ride round the stage on the back wheel without holding, and to jump sideways up two steps at a time, thence on to a bench, and over the prone body of his assistant. The thrilling moment, however, comes at the end, when, by the same method, he ascends a high staircase, leaps a couple of gaps a yard apart, and comes down the other side on to a mattress. The cheers bestowed upon his intrepid feats throughout are well deserved. Excitement also comes of the introduction of Ivy Valescoe's Australian Stage Circus. There is a small poodle who does somersaults in a skipping-rope, and there are dog and monkey jockeys, who jump through hoops in the regulation style. Later, the smallest pony in the world is to be seen within a revolving wheel, while a small dog keeps step on the top.

A new farce-comedietta, entitled Lord Bill's Bills, in which an impecunious lordling gets relieved of his debts to a moneylender by impersonating a lady causes laughter. Mr. T. W. Volt is funny in the dual part, and is capably assisted by Mr. Louis Edmonde and Miss Nellie Bouverie. My Fancy, who well maintains her claim to be "queen of sand-dancers," takes her dainty way through a maze of complicated steps, and the novelty and excellence of her rapid footplay is recognised by many recalls. Miss Maud Esmond who rises high in popular favour with the lilting song "Sailing in my balloon," also makes a captivating colleen in her song "Hold yer blarney."

A well-filled budget of comicalities was supplied by Mr. Harry Pleon, who presented The Merchant of Venice and Hamlet as they would be acted with various star comedians in the chief rôles, and a travesty of Mr. John Lawson in his "Only a Jew" song also excited great merriment. Carrie Laurie and her Juveniles supply a diverting item of the bill; the Ten Loonies cause uproarious mirth with their eccentric musical production Dotty; and contributions to the entertainment are also made by Harvey and Holt, Keith and Merson, Harry Maynard, Sam Mayo, J. Haigh (comedy acrobat), Evelyn Taylor (serio), and Hayman and Franklyn in A Matrimonial Agency. Mr. Nelson Francis, the manager, smiles serenely through the difficulties with which he has been beset, and Mr. Francis Winchcombe gives him loyal assistance.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS' AND CONCERT ASSISTANTS' PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

The second annual dinner and concert in connection with the above society was held at the Crown Hotel, Hippodrome, Charing Cross-road, last Saturday, with Mr. David Day in the chair. An excellent dinner was served by Mr. A. R. Welton, and was followed by an interesting Bohemian concert, the arrangements for which were in the capable hands of Mr. John Smith (manager to Messrs. Francis and Day), who was fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Alfred Bishop as stage-manager and Mr. H. E. Pether as pianist.

Mr. Charles West sang in rollicking style "Don't tell the world your troubles" and "See-Saw"; Mr. Charles Osborne gave two songs of his own composition, "Leave her alone with them" and "Mother"; Mr. Will Randall submitted "If the world were ruled by girls"; Mr. Fred Wilson gave "Who am I?" and "The Cheese"; and Mr. James Hillier contributed in admirable style two good patter songs, "Susan, the slavey," and "The butcher-boy." Miss Rosa Dallow sang very sweetly "With my guitar" and "Love is meant to make us glad," and, in response to an enthusiastic encore, gave "An ould plaid shawl." Mr. Frank Lynne, in a new song, facetiously asked "How do you like my new hat?" which obtained a gratifying reception. Miss Kate Willey's charming voice captivated the audience in "Angel of my dreams" (accompanied by the composer) and "If I built a world for you"; Mr. A. H. Gee, the Australian baritone, was heard to great advantage in "The Gallant Greys" and "Vanity"; Mr. Charles Wood was a humorous exponent of Chevalier's song "What for do 'ee luv oi?"; Miss Kittie Oxford sang excellently "Dear heart" and "The mellow autumntide"; Mr. Harry Briden supplied "Bargains"; Mr. Bernard Russell was in great form with "Musical neighbours" and "I wonder if that was a sign"; Mr. George Thatcher rendered "I looked out of the window" and "Wire in, my lads"; Mr. W. Bailey, who has a fine tenor voice, gave "Believe me, if all those endearing charms"; Miss Alice Braunstein, who possesses a rich soprano, delighted her hearers with "Rose of my heart" and "Never mind the weather"; Mr. Fred Rains was dramatic in a musical monologue, "Devil may care," and "The waif and the wizard"; Miss Amy Brooks was charmingly piquant at the piano in "Proposals"; and Mr. John Bird, in a most natural manner, explained that he was "Fou the noo."

The arrangements reflected great credit on the committee and all concerned in the management, and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a conclusion by speeches from Mr. J. Jennings, Mr. David Day, Mr. C. J. Smith, Mr. J. A. Hammond, and Mr. E. J. Goodman.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

MR. JOHN P. HARRINGTON INTERVIEWED.

Born some forty-one years ago, in Kingsgate-street, Holborn (since swept away by Kingsway), Mr. John P. Harrington early evinced a taste for song-writing, as is evidenced by the fact that as long ago as 1880 Mr. Harry Rickards (then performing at the old London Pavilion) accepted a song on the subject of the first Boer war from the enthusiastic young fifteen-year-old aspirant, entitled "May God protect our soldiers in the Transvaal War," which he never "put on."

Having published close on a couple of thousand songs—by far the greatest number for which any lyric writer has ever been responsible—and his songs being famous the world over at the time when the present generation of song-writers were going to school, Mr. Harrington may be accepted as something of an authority as to "what's what" in the song-writing and song-publishing world.

"The thing that first convinced me," he says, "that there was a big future for the 'free' song, if properly handled and 'placed,' was the enormous popularity and resultant huge sale of copies obtained in this country by comparatively second-rate American songs, which, being American, were pushed for all they were worth by English publishers who had acquired the British copyrights; while very excellent English songs (far better ones, in fact, than many of the American variety) went to the wall.

"After many consultations with my present song-writing partner, Mr. Jas. W. Tate, we decided, in conjunction with Mr. Tom McNaughton (one of the finest 'hustlers' the world produces) and Mr. Joseph Kandt, to form the Monte Carlo Publishing Co. for the express purpose of doing for English-made songs what other English firms were doing for the American ones.

MR. JOHN P. HARRINGTON.

"The results of our enterprise have far exceeded our most sanguine expectations. From the start we were successful. Last year we only issued six songs for pantomime, out of which four were extensively sung, and three were big 'winners,' viz., 'Remember me to mother dear,' 'Good-bye, Mr. Williams,' and 'His country, king, and girl.' This is, perhaps, a record for a young firm.

"I believe No. 7 is popularly supposed to be lucky. Well, our greatest song success, 'I've built a bamboo bungalow for you,' by Mellor and Lawrance, was our No. 7. This was not through any superstition or design on our parts, the fact being that, at the time, we had no No. 8. We were the fortunate possessors of this song a month before pantomime time; but we wisely kept the song 'up our sleeves,' realising that we were 'up against' 'The little wooden hut' song, and that the big success was ure to eclipse the unknown song to the point of extinction. The result of our waiting policy is that there is hardly a pantomime (if any) throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom in which 'Bamboo bungalow' will not be specially 'featured' this year. The sales have already run into thousands of copies, and we confidently anticipate disposing of at least a quarter of a million copies before the trade demands are exhausted.

"'Placing' songs with artists," rejoined Mr. Harrington, in answer to a query, "is distinctly an art. Mr. Tate and I, as the two 'pluggers' (as our American cousins term song-placers) of the Monte Carlo Publishing Co., perhaps enjoy a somewhat unique position in the professional eye, as compared with the representatives of most other publishers. Being songwriters who may, without egotism, claim to have won their spurs, artists naturally are prone to believe in our judgment. Having so often supplied them with the wares from our own pens which have tended to make them successful, they confidently consider us the right people to select for them the best and most suitable material from other pens in our fast-growing catalogue.

"At the present season my colleague and I are kept busy by professional callers, from 'early morn till dewy eve,' and we never fail to fit all applicants, for should we have nothing in our published répertoire or in MSS. form that exactly meet their requirements, Mr. Tate and I sat down and write them something. This facility of supply to meet demand is one of the principal factors in our present success.

"When we first started 'placing' our songs we had to 'hustle' pretty considerably. Many letters were written, many personal appointments made. Now our songs themselves do the 'hustling' for us! The success on the music-hall stage of such songs as 'Rosie is waiting' (already popular all over the country), 'Queen of Old Samara,' 'Tiny Firefly,' 'Widow Doolin,' 'Old Calabar,' and other equally popular songs issued by our firm, has had the pleasing effect of causing principal boys and principal girls by the hundred to call on us for their pantomime specialities; while we have also had such distinguished callers recently as Mr. F. W. Wyndham, Mr. J. F. Graham, Mr. Frederick Renad, and many other proprietors and producers of pantomime. Furthermore, we have been absolutely inundated with epistolary applications from practically every manager in the land, asking for our complete Pantomime Budget.

"In addition to our already-issued Pantomime Budget, however, we are this week issuing four 'dark horses' in the shape of special songs for pantomimes, viz., 'There's a big ship sailing in the morning," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; 'Britannia's School,' by Sam Rickards; 'She didn't come from Borneo,' by Pelham, Butts, and Rule; and 'You don't miss de water,' by Tate and myself. These four songs are, to our way of thinking, the finest eleventh-hour songs ever offered to a pantomime manager."

At our request Mr. Harrington supplied us with the titles and singers of a few of his greatest successes, past and present. They include "Masks and faces" (Jenny Hill), "Seven ages of man" (Charles Godfrey), "The Idler" (Stratton), "As in a looking-glass" (Millie Hylton), "I'll give him ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay" (Beauchamp), "India's reply" (Dryden), "My gal has not eyes like diamonds" (Bessie Wentworth), "Boys together" (Pat Rafferty), "Good-bye, and God bless you, Jack," "All the girls are lovely," "Oh, isn't it singular!" "Remember me to mother dear," "Oh, dearly-beloved brethren," "You're a thing of the past, old dear," and last, but not least, "Rosie is waiting." Truly Mr. Harrington has been a busy song-writer in his time.

HOLLOWAY EMPIRE ANNIVERSARY.

Seven years since the Holloway Empire opened its doors to the public, and tapped a new audience in the pleasant northern suburb, which up to that time had been without a variety theatre conducted on modern lines. Much opposition was excited by the announcement of two houses a night; and the idea seemed to obtain that the new Empire would be a centre of disturbance, in which would be focussed all the elements of disorder in the neighbourhood. But the Hollowaysiders did not know their Oswald Stoll. They did not realise that he, one of the chief apostles of rational amusement for the wage-earner, had resolutely abolished the word "gaff" by destroying its significance and replacing its chief characteristics—dirt, drink, and degradation—by daintiness, diversity, and delight. Prejudice vanished like a morning mist before the sun of prosperity; the inhabitants of Holloway soon found their local Empire a place to spend a happy evening; and commercial astuteness, and a constant and increasing care in the choice of artists did the rest.

On Tuesday, the gala night, two crowded houses testified heartily to the popularity of the numerous artists doing duty from the early hour of six until close upon the witching hour. At the close of the first house the festival character of the function was emphasised in quite a Christmassy fashion by the whole of the entertainers—led by those two light baritones, Mr. Will Bennet, of the Moss and Stoll Press Bureau, and Mr. Will Collins, the London district manager—joining in the chorus of "Auld Lang Syne." Mr. Tom Costello, who occupied the position of honour, had just previously been struggling with "Stage Suffragettes," and in the most comic fashion imaginable bringing to the bar of public opinion as expressed by gods and pit the burning question of woman's rights. Shouts of merriment greeted the humorous treatment of the subject, and when the representatives of sister woman gave the comedian a warm time of it, and filched parts of his coat from his back, the house roared again. Mr. Albert Le Fre told some amusing stories as a prelude to some excellent dancing; Mr. George Ridgwell sang in his customary artistic style; Miss Edith Courtney gave a song of domestic sentiment founded on "Home, sweet home"; Miss Lottie Lennox, with a chorus song, touched a chord of low comedy; Mr. Tom Collins introduced cleverly a number of topics into his well-rendered song; Mr. Russel Brandon, a gentleman of colour, proved himself to be an acrobatic dancer of remarkable alertness and vigour; Young and De Voie were responsible for a dancing turn in which there was a spice of comedy; and an extra turn—a lady in red—looking not unlike Camille Clifford, cooed softly of Norah of Norwood, who bore no resemblance in character and attainments apparently to the other Norah—she of Kildare. The Sisters May sang a coon melody; the Five Casino Girls played a medley on brass instruments; Lucia and Viata were responsible for an interesting wire performance; Frobel and Ruge astonished by a remarkable pole performance; Datas roused enthusiasm by the remarkable character of his memory; and other turns included the Welsh Wanderers, Marie Collins, Jeannie Mackay, James Brady, Melich, Dick Williams, Karr and Koe, the Brothers Avalone, Hester Leamore, and others. The contributors to the second entertainment were the Three Ramoniers, Tom Lytton, Leslie and Anson, Kate Carney, Charles Coverdale, Nina Martino, Lucy Weston, Athas and Collins, Lottie Lennox, Marguerite Broadfoote, Chas. Fisher Opera Company, Chirgwin, Nellie Coleman, Joe Cheevers, Tom Costello, Thorpe and Coe, W. Donovan, Grigoriews Troupe, Frank Wood, Tan Kwai Troupe, Tom Collins, Sisters May, Marie Collins. Mr. C. W. Adams worked assiduously for the comfort of two very large houses.

Among those present who were welcomed by Mr. Will Collins and Mr. Will Bennet, both most assiduous hosts, were Mr. Sam Getting, the Moss and Stoll district manager for Scotland; Mr. Gerald Morton, district manager for Yorkshire; Mr. Hatton W. Larton, of the Lancashire district; Messrs. Wieland, Sydney Hyman, Ernest Golestin, Ted Volta, Anger, Aplin, and others represented agency.

"DOWN AMONG THE COALS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

DEAR SIR,—I don't know what construction Mr. Harry Dacre wishes readers of The Era to place on the word "drivel" (it has several sloppy meanings) in his reference to the above-named song. It was sung by "the artist comique," the late Henri Clark, trained in Miss Louisa Pyne's opera company—truly an artist who never uttered a word that would not bear scrutiny. Few choruses of comic songs in cold print convey any idea of what they were in the hands of such a capable man as Clark. It was written and composed by the late George "Jingo" Hunt, the pioneer of writers of words and music to comic songs. I had the pleasure of hearing the song played by twenty-five or thirty massed bands at Sydenham, at the Drury Lane Pantomime, and by many military bands, in 1872. As a comic song or a grand march I think it one of the best I ever heard in my life. "Mouse-trap man," by H. J. Whymark and R. Hughes, was sung by the never-to-be-forgotten Geo. Leybourne; is still played and admired as a waltz. It is forty-two years old It was the stamping as a star of J. H. Milburn. The last title-page I saw was the 120th edition—verb. sap. "Up in a balloon," by Hunt, and sung by the peerless Leybourne, was very highly eulogised in The Era recently. It is thirty-eight years old, and still alive. "Ornaments for your fire stoves," by Hunt, sung by the lion comique, Geordie, was a song with a pretty three-four time Swiss melody—a clever song that had a great run in 1865 and for a long time afterwards. As young Dacre remembers it so well as to class it among the drivel, why not copy the whole sentence, and say "the drivel of the dregs" instead?—Yours faithfully, A BACK NUMBER.

"THE SLEEPING CAR."

SIR,—In fairness to Miss Ethel King, who holds the rights in the above, allow me, in reply to Mr. George Thorne jun.'s letter in your last issue, to state that the plot of The Sleeping Car is in every detail totally different to that of Mr. Dawson's piece, the only possible similarity being that the action of both pieces takes place in a railway train.

Here, again, the special scenery and effects of The Sleeping Car and the stage setting differ entirely from that of Mr. Dawson's piece. The Sleeping Car was submitted to Miss King, and accepted by her early in June, and first tried in public at Hull on Oct. 19 last.—Yours faithfully,

MAURICE H. HOFFMAN.

HORACE WHEATLEY
AT THE PALACE, GLASGOW.

There is a treat in store for Mr. Waldon's patrons at the Palace this week. Always a great favourite in Glasgow, Horace Wheatley, who heads the company, provides what is known in music-hall phraseology as the "star turn." His voice is as good as ever, and his patter as amusing, with the result that "the genial Irishman," as he is described on the bill, has difficulty on leaving the stage at the conclusion of his performance. Last night he had a very cordial reception at both houses, which, by the way, were largely attended.—Glasgow News, Dec. 4, 1906.

CHAT WITH MR JOSEPH WILSON.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

"It is always a pleasant task," says Mr. Joseph Wilson, the manager of the Tivoli, "to speak of success, whether of individuals or of places of amusement, and during the last year at the Tivoli things have been successful all along the line. Under the managing-directorship of Mr. George Adney Payne, who undoubtedly may be described as the Napoleon of the variety business, the 'cosy little hall in the Strand' flourishes like a green bay-tree.

"During the past twelve months much fresh blood has been infused into the entertainments, chiefly from the theatrical side of the profession, some of the most important engagements being those of Ada Reeve, Fragson, Arthur Playfair, Florence Sinclair, and Russell Wallett; while old favourites, including Harry Lauder, Marie Lloyd, Little Tich, Wilkie Bard, the Follies, Victoria Monks, Vesta Victoria, and Clark and Hamilton, still hold their own with the public."

One is inclined to agree with Mr. Wilson when he says that such innovations as La Main, that charming wordless play in which Miss Camille D'Alberg achieved a great success, proves the foresight of the management of the Tivoli. "This is a turn," he goes on to say, "which sets one reflecting upon the enormous alteration in the personnel of music-hall audiences during the last decade. It is not too much to say that fifteen years ago such a delightful piece of acting would not have been appreciated by the then patrons of the variety theatre. Single turns, mostly of comedians, who regaled their audiences with songs in praise of alcoholic excess, the discomfiture of the mother-in-law, &c., followed one another with monotonous dulness. Now all is changed. The Tivoli audience listens to and enjoys first-rate vocalists, such as Alice Hollander, Edith Helena, Ada Colley, the last-named raising enthusiasm with Bishop's 'Lo, here the gentle lark'—certainly a classic—and John Radcliffe, the great flautist, at his best in the obbligato; while the orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. de Reeder, proves by varied, and, in some cases, quite classical, selections, that the public taste has become elevated to a striking degree.

"There can be no doubt that the renaissance of the music hall is with us, and the first manager to trim his sails to the altering breeze should be, and is, first round the buoy. Carefully-selected turns to give variety—that absolute necessity in a music-hall programme—have constantly appeared, sketches (which have been well within the limit), acrobats, jugglers, and musical acts, have all contributed to success."

Mr. Joseph Wilson's life has been made up by a variety of experiences in different professions. Though for the greater part of it he has been mainly connected with the stage in a very active manner, yet previous to his association with the footlights he was for some time in the Army, and had interested himself in more than one profession. But it is with his theatrical career that we are most concerned. His first engagement was with Miss Mary Anderson in 1884-85, when he sang songs in As You Like It, and played several parts in that lady's Shakespearean répertoire and classical pieces. He took, for instance, small parts in, among others, Romeo and Juliet, and in Pygmalion and Galatea. Speaking of Miss Anderson, Mr. Wilson says that her charm of manner won its way into the hearts not only of her audience, but into the affections of every member of her company, and of everybody with whom she had dealings. Mr. Wilson next joined the Conway-Farren-Vaughan company, and had a long experience of touring. He played Tony in My Sweetheart over six hundred times, in this country and in Berlin. Later he was seen and admired as the Squire in Dorothy, the touring production of which he stage-managed. Following this engagement, he acted as manager for Mr. Daniel Mayer, the concert director, and, among other artists, brought out Stavenhagen, the pianist, and Jean Gerardy, the boy 'cellist. Mr. Wilson also arranged a great number of big concert parties. The subject of this sketch has appeared in no fewer than thirteen pantomimes, four of which he produced himself. Two of his most successful pantomime parts were the Cannibal King and Abanaar. Going away from the subject of Christmas "annuals," it is worthy of mention that Mr. Wilson was the first to play the part of the Vizier in Morocco Bound in the provinces, and he represented the character for a couple of years. He was also the Sir Reddan Tapeleigh in Go Bang for a couple of tours, and at the conclusion of the last run of that piece he appeared in sketches on the music halls. After a year and a half of this kind of work, he was engaged to appear as the sailor in The French Maid, for tour and in London, subsequently again going into the halls with a playlet called The Test Match, specially written for him by Mr. Fred Bowyer. Then Mr. Wilson travelled in Australasia for two years, chiefly playing Old Cattermole in The Private Secretary, Sir Francis in Charley's Aunt, Geoffrey Wedderburn in Sweet Lavender, the detective in The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown, and a similar character in Facing the Music. As a curtain-raiser to these plays, Mr. Wilson invariably played The Test Match, and, in point of fact, he was specially engaged to do this all through Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania. On returning from Australia he went into management at the Queen's Hall, and was also manager for Mr. Frank Curzon at the Avenue Theatre and for that gentleman's tour of The Marriage of Kitty. A couple of years ago the directors of the Tivoli offered Mr. Wilson the managerial chair at that establishment, and there he has remained ever since.

CHIRGWIN sent a wire to Her Majesty the Queen on her birthday on Saturday last, and received a telegram of thanks in reply, so considers himself lucky in getting the answer.

"CRYSTAL GAZING."

A new Sketch, by Fredrick Bowyer, produced at the Hackney Empire, on Monday, Dec. 3.

Tom ..... MR. WILLIAM H. DAY
Bessie ..... MISS LAURA DYSON

Mr. Frederick Bowyer is no novice in the art of sketch writing, and the little piece produced at the Hackney Empire on Monday evening affords further evidence of his possession of those qualities which are required in the author who attempts to successfully write for the variety stage. The verdict of Monday night's audience was never for a moment in doubt, and Crystal Gazing was received with those unmistakable demonstrations of approval so welcome alike to the author, the artists engaged in the representation, and the management.

The scene represents the interior of a pretty little cottage in the country, and here we make the acquaintance of the heroine of the story. Bessie, the charming little village maiden, is expecting somebody. Who should it be but her sweetheart, Tom, a sailor lad of the hearty, honest English type that has been a favourite with audiences ever since the drama came into fashion. Tom makes manifest his deep love for the girl in his own simple, manly style, and produces an engagement ring. But the wedding is not to take place until Tom had been for another voyage, and after that he will make pretty Bessie his bride. They will take possession of one of the snug village cottages, and, like the Prince and Princess in the fairy tales, will live happy ever after. His vessel is about to start on her voyage, and Tom, ere bidding his sweetheart good-bye, hands her a crystal with a request that she will take care of it until his return. While in India he purchased it of an old woman, and, according to her account, it will, if consulted, reveal the future. The girl tests the truth of the old woman's statement by gazing steadily into the crystal, and is startled by the result of her experiment, for she sees a vision of the future. At her earnest invitation Tom also becomes a crystal-gazer. The stage is darkened, and when the lights are again turned up we see a dame who is awaiting the return of her husband. It is Christmas time, and outside the snow is falling fast. An aged man enters; and we realise that the two people are Tom and Bessie grown old and feeble. But the years have not robbed them of the love which rendered them happy in their youth. From outside the cottage comes the joyous sound of a Christmas carol; and, after a brief interval of darkness, we again behold the young couple gazing into the magic crystal, but confident of the wedded happiness that awaits them in the future. Mr. William H. Day is a manly young sailor, and also plays well as Tom grown old. Miss Laura Dyson, formerly a member of the Surrey stock company and a niece of the late Mr. George Conquest, puts brightness and charm into her embodiment of Bessie, and is excellent, too, as the old lady of the vision.

Another big attraction in the current bill is the engagement of Mr. R. A. Roberts in his well-known sketch Dick Turpin, his quick changes winning the admiration and the applause of the audience. "Buddha's Blackboard," a mystery that was first seen in London at the Hippodrome a few months ago, is also an interesting item. Holden's Marionettes have a prominent place in the bill, and are very cleverly manipulated. Other attractive turns include the Mascotte Trio, Hurley and Cole, Theo. Hardeen, Miss Rale Walters, Mr. Charles Robinson, and the Bioscope.

"THE PROFLIGATE KING."

A Romantic Sketch, in Three Scenes, by Albert Ward, produced at the Queen's, Poplar, on Monday, Dec. 3.

Leandro Caselli ..... MR. ALBERT WARD
King of Lavadia ..... MR. H. W. HATCHON
Duke Lucio Castrana .... MR. HORACE HUNTER
Antonio Zanella ..... MR. HARRY J. CRANE
Valentine ..... MR. FRED BESLEY
Donna Silvia Zanella .... MISS AGNES PAULTON
Duchess of Pellitsa ..... MISS FRANCES ALLEYNE

Mr. Ward, the author of The Profligate King, has laid the scenes of this, his latest dramatic "episode," in a country called Lavadia, wherever it may be. The costumes, however, indicate a mediæval period, and there is an Italian sound about the names of the different characters. But as we have a very interesting story, there is really no need to worry ourselves as to the nationality of the dramatis personæ.

Leandro Caselli, officer of the guard at the Court of King Ferdinand of Lavadia, is in love with one Donna Silvia Zanella, whose grandfather is the King's messenger. There is a traitorous conspirator in the person of one of his Majesty's Ministers, Duke Lucio Castrana, whose desire it is to have Donna Silvia in marriage. To this end he arranges with the King to send Leandro on a special mission, and to place that young officer's sweetheart in the charge of the Duchess of Pellitsa. Leandro goes off, but it is not long before he returns with the story that he was waylaid, his despatches stolen, and an attempt made upon his life. He comes just in time to see Castrana murder Antonio. Finding his plans not succeeding as well as he anticipated, Castrana confides in Leandro his scheme for the destruction of the King, hoping to obtain the younger man's assistance. But Leandro is true to his sovereign, the plot is frustrated, and all ends well. It is a pleasure to be able to say that the little piece is well staged and capably acted. Mr. Albert Ward, who, by the way, created the part of Jack Mowbray in The Never, Never Land, and recently concluded a stock season at the Elephant and Castle, possesses a good style of delivery and acts forcefully in the rôle of Leandro. Mr. Horace Hunter is another vigorous exponent of a vigorous part; and in the rôle of the Duke he plays with conspicuous ability, as does Mr. H. W. Hatchon in the part of the King. Miss Frances Alleyne was womanly and graceful as the Duchess of Pellitsa; and Miss Agnes Paulton sweet and engaging as Donna Silvia. Mr. Harry J. Crane gave a commendable character-study of an old man as Antonio Zanella, and Mr. Fred Besley adequately fulfilled the requirements of his rôle of Valentine.

COPYRIGHT CONVICTIONS.

Clifford Jones, 24, a canvasser, of 28, Ruby-road, Walthamstow, was charged at Stratford on Monday with being in the possession and selling a copy of pirated music.

On Saturday evening defendant was in charge of a music-stall in High-street, Walthamstow, and a constable who was "out for the purpose," asked for a copy of "Down the Vale." Jones at first said that he had not got the copy, but when told that it was wanted particularly that evening, he remarked, "All right, I'll get one." He then went into a shop close by and brought out a pirated copy of the song. This he handed to the constable, charging 6d. for it, and he was then arrested.

Jones pleaded guilty, and urged that the music was a copy that he had purchased before the Copyright Act came into force.

A fine of 20s. and costs was imposed.

MISS FLO BANKS has returned to town after a successful tour of thirteen weeks in the provinces, opening at Barnard's, Woolwich, on Monday.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

THE shows and other concerns at Richmond (Yorks) were—Monti Bros.' cinematograph, Storey's fine art gallery, Crowe's steam horses, Jeffrey's big boats, shooting gallery, emma sheets and cokers, Conror's Winchester range and bottle battery, Testo's rifle saloon and bottle smasher, and other varieties by Hall, Crowe, and Snowden.

THE pleasure fair at Malton attracted some of the best concerns on the North Yorkshire round. Amongst these were—Mander's waxworks and cinematograph, Professor Colina, expert marksman, with trained wolves, James Buckley's show, Goldthorpe Marshall's motor cars, Alf Payne's galloping horses, Doubtfire's juvenile motors, H. Stevens' swings and shooters; the other caterers included Warrington, Payne, and Duck, with shooting concerns, and Doubtfire, Tarvill, Swales, Storier, and Duck, with varieties.

AT Mountain Ash, Wales, the principal concerns were Wadbrooke's cinematograph, Scarrott's boxing booth, John Studt's gondolas and motors, Bowen's shooting range and varieties.

IN Wales for private business, Dooner's show is at Ebbw Vale, Hagger's at Merthyr Vale, Danter at Ferndale, and J. Hill at Haverfordwest.

HOLLOWAY'S theatre is expected to pay a two months' visit to Henley-in-Arden, and our correspondent on this round informs us that there is a good opening at Astwood Bank for a portable theatre or a marionette show.

KNOWING how anxious our Cheshire and Lancashire readers will be to have the latest news of the negotiations between the Guild and the Town Clerk to the Cheshire County Council, we give the last letter received on this important question.

THE SHOWMEN'S GUILD.

Byelaws for Good Rule and Government of this County.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of yesterday's date you are quite right in assuming that the byelaws made by this Council with reference to organs, and music near houses, churches, and hospitals, will come into operation unless disallowed by the Secretary of State at the expiration of forty days after a sealed copy thereof has been forwarded to the Secretary of State.

A sealed copy of the Byelaws was transmitted to the Secretary of State in accordance with the Statute, on the 9th ult., so that unless they are disallowed by him within 40 days from that date they will become operative, and this was my reason for suggesting in my letter of the 1st inst. that you had better submit the suggestions contained in yours of the 30th ult. direct to the Secretary of State, who will no doubt forward same to me for the observations of the County Council thereon, and assuming that such is done they will be in the ordinary course submitted to the committee of the County Council who suggested the making of the byelaws, and probably some arrangement can be arrived at for them to receive such a deputation as is suggested in the last paragraph of your letter.—I am, Yours truly,

REGINALD POTTS,
Clerk of the County Council.

Cheshire County Council, Clerk's Offices, Chester.
Dec. 4, 1906.

Rev. T. Horne, c/o "The Era," Tavistock-street, Strand, London, W.C.

As we have already intimated, a petition from the Showmen's Guild is in preparation, and will be forwarded to the Home Secretary. Our readers will be glad to notice that the letter given above still leaves an open door for consideration of the matters in dispute between showmen and the Chester County Council, and we still have considerable hopes that the matter will be amicably settled on the same lines as that secured in the similar circumstances with the Lancashire County Council.

SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Showmen's Guild.—Per Mr. W. H. Marshall: A. Morley, 1905 and 6, £1; W. H. Marshall, 1905 and 6, £3; C. Barker, 1905 and 6, 10s.; C. Burgess, 1905, 5s.; A. Barker, 1905, 5s.; D. Johnson, 1905, 5s.; S. Waddington, 1905, 10s.; C. Brookes, 1906, 5s. Per Mr. Frank Turner: Mrs. Bishop, 5s.; A Special Subscription, 11s. 6d. Per Rev. T. Horne: James Pettigrove and Son, £2 2s.

THE Guild Secretary would be glad to receive all outstanding subscriptions for the present year. Will committee men make up their accounts and forward names of subscribers enrolled by them as soon as possible?

THE death took place on Monday, Dec. 3, of Mrs. John Ridley, at her residence, Battersea. The deceased lady was a well-known metropolitan traveller, and attended the fairs in the London district. The funeral cortège will leave Battersea on Monday next, Dec. 10, 12 o'clock noon, for Manor Park, where the interment will take place.

P. COLLINS is continuing his successful Birmingham round of fancy fairs.

THE aggregation of novelties on this circuit includes the No. 2 Coliseum of living pictures and varieties, the set of motor cars, Cullis's school of boxers, and varieties. The attendant providers of all the fun of the fair were Dobson, Young, Stokes, and Humphries.

MR. ARTHUR DASHWOOD, late business agent, Bostock and Wombwell's No. 1 Royal Menagerie, has been specially engaged as acting manager by the International World's Fair Co., Olympia, London, for their forthcoming World's Fair. Mr. Dashwood has been piloting Messrs. Sedgwick's menagerie all through South Wales this summer, with great success.

A SHOWMAN eye witness sends us the following interesting account of a touching incident in a cinematograph show. The picture being shown was the well-known film the Sailor's Wedding. At one part of the story in picture there is the burning vessel at sea, and on the shore is depicted the wife watching the heroic efforts of the rescue party to reach the burning vessel. Her face depicted the agony of her feelings, and she is seen to beg her father to kneel down with her and to pray to the Great All Father for help. They kneel together and offer their prayer for "those in peril on the sea." At this point in the development of the picture the lecturer made an effective pause in the story; but the solemn silence was broken by a clear treble voice from the audience. A dear child three years old, carried away with the realism of the picture, clasped her hands together, and kneeling upon her mother's knee, seen of the audience, she prayed, "Our Father which art in Heaven." Petition after petition, until the well-known prayer was ended, the audience and the showmen listened spellbound to the voice of the praying child. Then the audience burst into a furore of applause, and thus again was verified the divine truth "That a little child shall lead them."

THE New Tivoli, Liverpool, opens its doors on Monday. Public interest in the latest addition to the places of amusement in the city on the Mersey is great, and when viewed next week the general opinion will be that it is one of the prettiest and most convenient resorts that could be desired. Miss Vesta Victoria tops the opening bill.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

WELL-KNOWN SHOWMAN'S ESTATE.

The estate of the late Mr. James Anthony Bailey, partner With Mr. Barnum in the "greatest show on earth," was mentioned in an application made by Mr. Barnard, K.C. (with him Mr. le Bas), on behalf of the widow, Mrs. Ruth Louisa Bailey.

Counsel said the lady had commenced an action propounding the last will of her husband, who died in April last. The will was dated April, 1885, and had a codicil of May 29, 1894. When the concern was turned into a limited company Mr. Bailey held nearly one-half of the shares out of a capital of £400,000 in £1 shares. The company was registered in London, Mr. Bailey being managing director down to the time of his death. The deceased was domiciled in America, where there was litigation in refernce to whether the will and codicil were entitled to be proved there. Application had been made by Mrs. Bailey to be appointed administrator of the estate pendente lite. The lady was appointed. After the death of Mr. Bailey other directors were required. They were appointed, and a meeting would have to be held during the present month to confirm, or otherwise, the appointments. Mrs. Bailey would have the largest interest in that meeting, and it was necessary that an administrator should be named, so that the registered holder of the shares should be able to vote. There was a further claim of £25,000 by the estate of the deceased against the company with refernce to 10 per cent. of the profits made in America on the show. The only point against the application appeared to be that the other parties, who were in America, had not been served, but as it was essential something should be done at once, the present application was made to the Court to appoint an administrator notwithstanding. It was open to the other side to apply.

His lordship thought the plaintiff had better take a grant, and ordered security up to £60,000 on an affidavit of Mrs. Bailey that the property was of that amount.

MARRIAGE OF JACOB STUDT, JUN., TO MISS DOONER.

The event of the past week in the showman world was the wedding of Jacob Studt, jun., eldest son of Jacob Studt, to Miss M. A. Dooner, daughter of James Dooner. The town of Southampton, where the wedding took place, is the winter quarters of Mr. Studt and his many fairground enterprises. Great interest was shown in the happy event by the people of Southampton, and the grand old church of St. Mary was thronged at noon on Wednesday by the hosts of friends of both families concerned The Rev. W. White, senior curate of the church, assisted by the Rev. T. Horne, hon. chaplain to the Showmen's Guild, took the service, which was fully choral. The bride was given away by her father, and the principal bridesmaids were the Misses Studt, Miss Dooner, and Miss A. Hancock. Mr. J. Johnson was the best man. At the end of the service the Rev. T. Horne delivered an appropriate address. The wedding luncheon was held in the Victoria Rooms.

Amongst the prominent guests at the wedding and the festivities after were (in addition to principal members of both families):—Mr. and Mrs. Haggar, Mr. and Mrs. Chiappa, Miss Hancock, Mrs. Henry Studt, Miss L. Studt, Mr. Hibbert, Mr. J. Johnson, Mr. Nesbitt, Mr. Wentworth, Mr. R. Dooner, Mr. Bert Davies, and Mrs. Panton..

Amid many expressions of good will and best wishes, the happy pair left Southampton in the afternoon en route for London, then on to Paris for the honeymoon.

We hope to give a more detailed account of the marriage, with full lists of guests and wedding presents, in our next issue.

ANSWERS TO SHOWMEN.

LEO (Whitehaven).—Both your communications to hand. With reference to your first letter, we hope to do something this week. Kindly forward your itinerary for next few days. Yes, always glad to do what we can.

MRS. W. H. M. (Bradford).—Very glad to have your letter; there will be no mistake now as to your address.

ENQUIRER.—The Parliamentary Defence Fund is an entirely independent organisation, and has no connection with any other showman trade society. Parliamentary work protects the interests of all classes and sections of showpeople who travel the fairs, and its existence and well-being is just as important to the man with a twelve-foot stall as it is to a riding-master or show proprietor. It has only one work and one policy—to defend the business interests of all who travel the fairs.

E. W. (Glasgow).—Your exceedingly appreciated letter was one amongst others acknowledging the good work done by the executive officials of the Guild at Burslem. It is a great satisfaction to us to know that on all hands there is a growing sense of the importance of the Guild work. Hope to write you next week.

G. W. (Glasgow).—We are sending you a more detailed answer as soon as we have made an inquiry or two; we believe that all the concerns and side shows you name exist in Canada, but, according to our information, they are old-fashioned and out-of-date concerns.

LEO (en route).—We have not forgotten your request, but pressure of urgent work has prevented us giving it our personal attention. Will let you know results as soon as possible.

ANXIOUS INQUIRER.—The Mitcham dispute is still pending, and it is contrary to our practice to comment on a case when once it is on the list for hearing in the higher Courts. We do not expect that the case will be heard until the New Year.

E. W. (Glasgow).—Your very encouraging letter with regard to the work of defending British Fairs has very much pleased us. We hope to still further justify your praise.

THE following additional subscriptions to the Fred Locke Fund have been received by Mr. J. G. Crichton, 9, Bridge-street, Glasgow:—Willie Downs, of Downs and Langford (second subscription), 10s. 6d.; Mrs. J. G. Crichton, 10s. 6d.; Miss Jenny M. Crichton, 10s. 6d.; Mr. Thos. Hill, 10s. 6d.

MR. KARL KAPS has contributed yet another important item to the already long list of enjoyable numbers from his pen. The latest is called "Her Royal Highness," a waltz cotillon. The numerous enquiries for this piece—Christmas being imminent—have caused the publishers, Messrs. Francis and Day, to accelerate its appearance.

SHOWMEN OF TO-DAY.

ROBERT DIXON.
(Lessee of the Trinity Market Ground, Salford, Manchester.)

When the story is fully written of the trade defence movement and organisation of the amusement caterers of the British Empire, a very high and honoured position must be accorded to the subject of our present biography. Himself a showman, born of show parents, cradled and reared on the road, he has that expert experience and technical education that has qualified him to undertake almost every branch of the active life and work of a travelling showman. "I was born at Chester," he says, "in the month of September, 1849, the youngest son of a family of six. My mother was left a widow a fortnight before my birth."

We can well imagine, knowing, as we do, the closeness of the family ties amongst the bohemians of the road, that as the widow's small family grew in years, their helpfulness to their widowed mother would also increase. As a boy, with his family he travelled the fairs in Cheshire, Shropshire, and North Wales, working for his mother with a small pannum stall.

"In the days of my youth," he says, "I came under the jurisdiction of the late James Dean, the famous president and founder of the Van Dwellers' Society, and association with such a grand, noble-hearted man as that impressed upon me, by word and precept, lessons of high integrity and devotion to the interests of my brother showmen that I shall never forget." Mr. Dixon changed the rôle of disciple and admirer of James Dean for that of son-in-law, for he married the eldest daughter of the celebrated showman. This, he tells us, happened thirty-eight years ago.

He travelled the whole of the United Kingdom with various amusements, and was a well-known figure upon the great fair-grounds throughout the country, making Manchester his centre and Salford his home. Twenty-five years back he undertook for the late Robert Hancock, sen., the management of the well-known Trinity Market, locally known as "the Flat Iron," and continued this work until the death of Robert Hancock, when the owner of the show-ground would not accept, in spite of many offers, any other tenant than Robert Dixon. This determination of the owner was based upon his personal observation and knowledge of Mr. Dixon's high business ability and moral worth, strengthened by the recommendation of the authorities. It must never be forgotten that a showman's life has to be lived in the open light of day, and subject to the constant criticism of an observant, sometimes carping, but always in the end appreciative, public opinion, and to finish this important part of Mr. Dixon's labours, to his credit it is to be recorded that he has held the lease from the first moment of his penalty down to the present time, without the slightest complaint or serious objection.

To Manchester showmen who know "the Flat Iron" ground, and the difficulty of maintaining such an admirable site for private business in the heart of a great city, this constitutes an undoubted record; but to showmen throughout the country, without the local knowledge, it is also a remarkable experience for one lessee to hold a position of this importance so long and so worthily. In public life, though this may seem a paradox, it is not always for the individual a good thing to be the son of a great man; the greatness of the sire in the public eye overshadows the personal worth and ability of the members of the family, however talented they may be. This, in a measure, was true of Robert Dixon in the very prime and vigour of his life's work.

To be the son-in-law of James Dean, and to work shoulder to shoulder in the splendid enterprise for the good of the showman world, of such a man, whilst it carried with it the constant satisfaction of being a fellow-worker with a great leader. It bore also the inevitable difficulty of feeling himself at times obscured or utterly absorbed in the stronger personality of his leader and father-in-law. As might have been expected, amongst the very first "enthusiasts" to answer the call of arms for the crying necessity of showman defence, and in vindication of the domestic and business life of amusement caterers, was Robert Dixon. To his credit also it must be recorded that, in the day of "small things," before the Society could employ paid officials, Robert Dixon acted as the first hon. sec. of the organisation.

No man has a keener memory of those early and absorbing days of strenuous effort for the betterment and uplifting in the eyes of the general public of the men and women of the road. Robert Dixon is honorary vice-president of the Guild, and occupied for many, many years, the onerous and responsible position of treasurer and trustee. For a great number of years, and with great distinction and much local respect, Robert Dixon was business-manager for Mr. John Whiting, of roundabout fame, and the principal Manchester local lessee of wakes. Some three years ago he left Mr. Whiting's service, and entered upon other undertakings. It is not to be wondered at that such a man, and with such unique business experience, should be frequently consulted by his fellow travellers upon matters affecting the business of the fair-ground. His ready response to the necessities of his fellow travellers, and shrewd advice in their time of difficulty and trouble, has endeared him to the heart of showland, and it is a fact that there is not a better-known or more highly-respected showman in the Manchester district than Robert Dixon.

In treating of Mr. Dixon's life work it would be obviously unfair to complete the story without a full acknowledgment of the estimable lady—Mrs. Dixon—who has been, in a true sense, the helpmeet for him, and "right-hand man" in all his many business enterprises.

Mr. and Mrs. Dixon have sons and daughters following in their footsteps, and actively engaged in fair-ground business.

"TOMMY" is a Striking Melodrama.

WANTED, Dates by Miss Annie Hughes, for "TOMMY," a Striking Melodrama.

Extracts from the Press:
So seldom is it that the plot and interest of a modern piece develop together pari passu, and find their real climax at and not before the fall of the final curtain, that—if only for its achievement of this rare virtue—Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's play, which was produced last evening at the Camden Theatre, occupies an unusual position in modern drama. Such a bold challenge to the convention has hardly ever before been placed upon an English stage, and the loud and prolonged approbation of yesterday's audience is not the least curious incident of the evening's production.—Daily Telegraph.

The part is obviously one which would exactly suit Miss Annie Hughes. The first act and half of the second act show Tommy in her comedy aspect, and a very delightful figure she is. Miss Annie Hughes is quite at her best in the earlier scenes, but when the piece suddenly turns to melodrama she rises to the occasion, and shows a power and an intensity which will surprise all those who have followed her career.—Globe.

WANTED, Known, Mr. Tom Norman (Silver King, regd.), having been favoured with instructions from the Owner, who is retiring from business, to Sell by Public Auction, on Wednesday, Dec. 12, 1906, at the King Edward, King Edward-street, Upper-street, Islington, N., near the Agricultural Hall, the whole of the Stock and Plant of those Three well-known Roundabout Riding Machines, together with the Goodwill as a going concern, and as now built up in the grounds of that world-renowned amusement resort, the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, Kent, where they have been established and doing terrific business.

The above Machines consist of:—Firstly, all that well-known Riding Machine, the Boston Riding School, having 72 Life-sized Horses and 2 Full-sized Wagonettes, and being the only one of its kind in England, and cost over £2,500 to construct, and has taken over £143 in one day, and still capable of doing so.

Secondly, a Steam-driven Roundabout, having 24 Horses and 2 Boats. This is a most convenient and light machine for getting about the country.

Thirdly, a Steam-driven Set of Roundabout Bicycles, carrying forty persons at one time.

Each of the above Machines are driven by first-class Engines, by such well-known makers as Savage, King's Lynn; Walker, Tewkesbury; and Thuxford, Boston; each Machine also having Organ and Organ Engines with same.

The Auctioneer desires to call attention to the above important Sale, which offers extraordinary facilities to the purchaser to make a fortune in a very short time.

Each of the above lots are complete in every detail, and in thorough good condition and repair, and the rent of the ground they stand on is remarkably moderate, as well as having no opposition, and considering that the Crystal Palace Company has been reorganised, and great preparations are being made to make the Palace and grounds still more attractive, &c., than ever, the above cannot fail to prove one of the best paying concerns of its kind in this country.

The Auctioneer will also offer, at the same time, Four Covered Trucks, for conveying, &c.; Three Sheds, comprising Workshop, Paint Shop, and Tool House; also a large quantity of Water Tanks, Oil Cans, Jacks, Ropes, Fittings, Engineer's and Workmen's Tools, &c., &c.

N.B.—The whole of the above lots will be offered in one lot as a going concern, when, if not sold, it will then be submitted in several lots, as per Catalogue, for removal or otherwise, to then be decided and stated by the Auctioneer.

Each machine can be seen built up complete, and a trial run given to intending purchasers, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., on Monday, Dec. 10, and Tuesday, Dec. 11 next.

Sale to commence at 7.30 p.m. prompt.

N.B.—Roundabout and Large Show Proprietors desiring to dispose of their Concerns by Auction at any large Fair, Feast, &c., &c., that they may be attending, thereby giving likely purchasers and others an opportunity of inspecting the same built up and in working order, and to be seen to the best advantage, can be assured of satisfactory results by consulting

THE STAGE ARC LIGHT OF THE FUTURE.

THE
MACHIN ELDORADO STAGE LANTERN
(Fully Patented and Protected).

These lamps have been designed by an expert in stage lighting, and have proved themselves a great success where fitted.

Among the many advantages claimed are a Saving in Current of from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. over battens, without taking the cost of incandescent lamps into account; a great saving in labour, one man can easily control twenty lamps with one lever-board; all battens and lengths can be dispensed with; specially-prepared flexible coloured mediums are used; the danger from falling glass is thus avoided; the simplicity of construction, there is no danger of them getting out of order; they can be adapted to any stage; no counter weights are required, and the lamps cast no shadows, thereby getting over a difficulty stage-managers of big productions have had to contend with in the past; they flood the entire stage with a powerful, soft, sunlight effect, not the steel cold light of the ordinary stage lamp; there are no shadows and no flickering.

A perfect stage lamp in every way, which will meet a long-felt want. The saving in current will pay the cost of the lamps in a very short period.

THE LYCEUM THEATRE

An exceedingly valuable Freehold Property, comprising the Lyceum Theatre and Shop and Business Premises adjoining thereto, situated a few yards out of the Strand, almost facing Aldwych, and with most important frontages to Wellington-street, Exeter-street, and Burleigh-street, aggregating 423ft., with an additional approach from the Strand, the whole covering an area of 23,500 square feet, or over half an acre.

The Lyceum Theatre, renowned as the scene of the late Sir Henry Irving's greatest triumphs, has recently been entirely reconstructed and brought up to the standard of modern requirements, and has a capacity for seating about 2750 persons. This occasion offers a unique opportunity for acquiring a suitable National Theatre; while (apart from the value and histrionic traditions of the present buildings) the site, from its size and the fact that it is situated in one of the most valuable business centres of the metropolis, opens up great building possibilities to Land Syndicates, Capitalists, Public Companies, and others. Vacant Possession of the Theatre will be given on completion. The property includes also the Shop and Business Premises, Nos. 33, 34 and 35, 36 and 37, Exeter-street, which are at present let on tenancies producing £331 per annum; and portion of No. 21, Wellington-street, which is now in hand.

Messrs. GLASIER & SONS will Sell the above most important Property by AUCTION, at the MART, Tokenhouse-yard, E.C., on THURSDAY, Dec. 13, 1906, at 2 o'clock precisely, in One Lot.

Particulars, plans, and conditions of sale may be obtained of Messrs. Witham, Roskell, Munster, and Weld, solicitors, 1, Gray's-inn-square, W.C.; or of the Auctioneers, 7, St. James's-street, London, S.W.

MAKE UP YOUR MIND!
One of the things you want in Panto. is a chorus-song with "grip" and "go" in it; one that will hold your audience from first note to last, and then leave them wanting more.
Two songs fulfilling these conditions are
"BRIDGET"
and
"WHY DO THE GIRLS LOVE CHARLIE?"
by the Author-Composer of
"MOLLY, I LOVE YOU!"
one of last season's biggest hits.
Recent trial-trips have proved them to be
THE REAL THING.
Band parts for each song are now ready.
FRED W. LEIGH, 142, Charing Cross-rd., London.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follows:—

MANCHESTER, LIVERPOOL, AND DISTRICT
MR. ALAN W. YOUNG,
Empire Theatre, Liverpool.

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously

A GRANDCHILD'S DEVOTION.

SCENE I.—DRINK AND DISGRACE.—In a grocer's shop a father and daughter are engaged in serving a number of customers. At one corner of the shop an old man is leaning against the walls; as he totters forward it is seen that he is in drink. The old chap, father of the shopkeeper, advances with familiarity towards the customers, much to their dislike. All would-be purchasers now leave the shop highly indignant, and the irate shopkeeper, hastening up to the old man, turns him out into the street. The child, clinging to her grandfather in spite of her father's persuasions to return with him, is left quite discarded by her parent.

SCENE II.—POVERTY AND REPENTANCE.—The child and old man although clinging together are not quite happy. The little girl in the garret is in tears, because of the old man's love for the bottle. The heartbroken sobs of his grandchild, just as he is once again about to indulge, touches the old man keenly, and with sudden re-awakened resolution he dashes the bottle to the ground and smashes it to atoms. Turning to the child he holds out his arms, and she flies to him with great gladness and love. He comforts her by his assurance to mend his ways, and putting on the boards for sandwich work he leaves the house.

SCENE III.—HER FATHER'S CARRIAGE.—Outside a London theatre in a very busy street our little heroine is walking about offering her goods for sale. While strolling about she suddenly spies her father's carriage draw up near the kerb. With sudden resolution she opens the door, and comfortably settles down on the cushions. The owner of the carriage soon makes his appearance, gives his instructions to the coachman, and jumps in. Driving down the street, the coachman is ordered to draw up, and a policeman is called. The officer is made acquainted with the facts, and he pulls the poor child from her warm corner. As the man leaves his carriage to give further details to the constable, the child rushes to him and discloses her identity. The parent, much surprised and pleased, clasps his child fondly, and promptly squares the officer. After explaining to her father the alteration in her grandfather, the man immediately says "we must go and find grandpapa." She takes her father to the garret, where he views with much remorse the sad conditions under which his dear ones have lived. The old man not being at home they go once more into the street to look for him; nearing a confectioner's they see grandpa enter, a place he has formerly seldom patronised. Hurrying forward, his dear grandchild places her arms around his neck, and father and son forgetting the past, shake hands.

FOX HUNTING.

A DAY WITH THE RENOWNED G. W. FITZWILLIAM PACK.

"I freely confess that the best of my fun I owe to the Horse and the Hounds."—WHYTE MELVILLE

IN 23 DIFFERENT SCENES.

Section I. LEAVING THE KENNELS.—"Simply marvellous."—Standard.
The Hounds scratching at the gate, anxious to get out. Huntsmen and hounds leaving.

Section II. ON THE WAY TO THE MEET.—"Tit-bits of the first order."—The Field.
Huntsmen, runners and hounds coming through the woods and crossing a swollen ford with the water well over the huntsmen's boot tops. Horsemen, Lady Riders, traps, lads on ponies on their way to Milton.

Section III. THE MEET.—"Full of the most interesting details."—The Bystander.

Section V. THROWING HOUNDS INTO COVERT.—"The best representation of the winter sport that can be imagined."—Morning Leader.

Section VI. THE FOX BREAKING COVERT—"The 'view-hollos' and 'tally-ho'" were loudly cried by excited hunting people in the fauteuils."—The Bystander.

Huntsmen, Hounds and Riders taking hedges in full cry. Along the road, over fields, away they go helter-skelter. Another view of the fox is also shown.

Section IX. "FOR'D AWAY."—"Again the fox comes down the screen at full speed, with that twisting action one knows so well."—The Field.
Reynard is closely followed by the hounds and huntsmen. Again we see the field in full cry. Two fine incidents happen in this section. One is a terrible tumble and the other the pony clearing a fence on his own chased by the luckless rider.

Section X. BREAKING UP THE FOX.—"The great charm about the pictures is that they are so distinct."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Section XI. RETURN TO KENNELS.—"Brimful of life and healthy movement."—The Star.

Section XII. FEEDING AND LOOKING OVER HOUNDS.—"The Public will loudly applaud the pictures."—The Sportsman.

Section XIII. THE LAST HOME.—"And then——there is seen a plaintive figure limping home across a field ever so slowly and so sorry for himself. A pathetic expression and scarcely able to move, but he will get there eventually. The expression of that dog is human——"—The Express.

"EVERYTHING IN THE WHOLE PICTURE IS SPLENDID."—The Times

NEW THEATRE, CARDIFF.

The New Theatre in Park Place, Cardiff, which Messrs. Runtz and Ford have built for Mr. Robert Redford, was opened by Mr. Beerbohm Tree on Monday. The building, which seats 1,570, is of brick and Bath stone. The principal elevation is to the south-east. The lower portion is of Bath stone, above this is brick, and a fine colonnade of Ionic columns is surmounted by a cornice and balustrade all in Bath stone. Two turrets are utilised for ventilating purposes. The style is English renaissance. From a large circular crush-room open the usual cloakrooms, ticket office, etc. The orchestra stalls are reached by a corridor on the right hand, and the dress circle is approached by a flight of stairs on the left. Corridor and staircase are richly carpeted and are draped at the entrance, brass handrails being fixed at the sides. The pit is approached by separate entrances. Behind the dress circle is a balcony. This is very spacious, and there is a broad promenade at the rear. Each portion of the house is provided with a spacious saloon or refreshment bar. That for the dress circle, which is immediately over the crush-room, is circular. The mural decorations in cream and gold are extremely tasteful. The dress circle, orchestra stalls, pit stalls, and balcony are furnished with tip-up seats luxuriously upholstered in crimson velvet.

The general scheme of decoration is white and gold with Rose du Barri draperies, the carpets being of a slightly deeper shade. The pelmets over the boxes are richly embroidered in the Empire style. The proscenium is 30ft in width by 34ft. in height. The distance from the curtain line to the back of the pit is 74ft. The stage is 76ft. in width and 54ft. in depth, while the height from the stage to the grid is 57ft. There are seventeen dressing rooms, all well heated, well ventilated, and well lit. All are fitted with hot and cold water, electric light, and gas. The ventilation on the most modern principle. Electric fans are arranged to carry off the foul air and to bring in fresh air. The fire extinguishing appliances are effective and elaborate, and there are also double fire and smoke-proof doors. The contractor for the building is Mr. James Allen. After the fall of the curtain on the last act of Twelfth Night on Monday, Mr. Tree and the principals were called four times.

Mr. TREE said: Ladies and gentlemen: This night will be ever a memorable one to all of us here on the stage, and I am sure it is a source of great joy to most of us who have appeared for the first time before a Welsh audience and to have listened to the sweet music of your applause, and also the sweet music of your voices in the earlier part of the evening. I say to most of us, because there are some of us who made their first appearance on the stage in this Principality. First of all, there is my very old friend Lionel Brough, who, I am glad to know is such a favourite with you here, as he has ever been a favourite with us in London. He was born in Monmouthshire. Then there is Mr. Lyn Harding, who was not only born in Wales, but is of Welsh descent, and has passed a considerable portion of his life, I believe, in Cardiff. It was a great source of pride to me as an actor when I cast my eyes on this building and its surroundings to know that in your beautiful park, where you have already your municipal buildings and your law courts, where you have also your University College and your national museum, that you have been able to find a place for a theatre, showing that in Cardiff you regard a theatre not only as an amusement, but as a means of education. It is also a source of pride to me that my company should have been selected to open this theatre, which I hope will not only be an outward adornment to this city, but which may add something to its inward and spiritual grace. Ladies and gentlemen, I am glad to think, too—and I say that I was anxious that it should be so—that a Shakespeare play should be selected for the opening night, for although Shakespeare was perhaps not geographically a Welshman, yet he understood the Welsh and its people, and I remember in a play in which I played many times—Falstaff in Henry IV.—there is a little scene which is conducted almost entirely in the Welsh tongue. But, indeed, Shakespeare, as he was not of an age, but for all time, so he did not belong to any country, but to every province in the whole world. As I say, I hope every country has the music that it feels, every community has the drama it deserves, and I hope that Cardiff will deserve well of the drama, and that the drama will deserve well of Cardiff. I congratulate Mr. Redford, who, I am sure, is the man for you, for he will not only consider your interests, but he will consider the interests of our art. And remember that a theatre is not only a vehicle for amusement, but that it should give something more, and I hope that it may be the nurse, the feeder, and the moulder of the soul of Cardiff. You will forgive me for thinking so well of the drama. I also congratulate Mr. Runtz, who has built this very admirable theatre. For, ladies and gentlemen, the first thing in a theatre is to see, the second is to hear, and the third—perhaps I ought to say the first—is to be safe, and in acting to-night I felt I could see every person in this theatre from every part of the stage, and, I also hope, that we on the stage were all heard. I remember some years ago I built a theatre of my own in London, which is called His Majesty's Theatre, and I remember the laying of the foundation-stone. I also remember that I had exhausted my little capital on the prospective bricks and mortar of that theatre, and that on the occasion of the laying of that foundation-stone I was so poor that I could not invite my friends to it. But I did crack a bottle over the foundation-stone in solitary grandeur, and I remember saying with a quaver in my voice, "God bless this house." Ladies and gentlemen, I don't think that in opening this theatre I can do better than repeat those little words, "God bless this house." May it ever remain a source of joy and a source of pride, and may it ever hold the dignity of art we all here love so well. Thank you for your splendid reception of us. Thank you, thank you, again and again.

After the curtain fell there were loud calls for Mr. Redford.

Mr. REDFORD thanked the audience very heartily for their kind reception, and for their attendance. He hoped they all liked the theatre. It had been a very anxious time for him and his staff for some weeks past, but he thought they had succeeded in providing a very comfortable theatre, one worthy of the great city of Cardiff. He hoped they were all pleased with the great intellectual treat which Mr. Tree and his company had given them that night, and if the public rallied round him in the future he would give them of the best that the stage could produce.

Enthusiasm marked the performance of Twelfth Night throughout. Seldom have Cardiffians had the opportunity of witnessing such a masterly production as Mr. Tree's life-like conception of Malvolio. Miss Viola Tree played Viola with an irresistible charm, and won a host of admirers. Miss Constance Collier as Olivia gave a portrayal that displayed her grace and beauty, and invested her part with a sweet and captivating charm. As Maria, the waiting-maid, Miss A Bruce-Joy took advantage of the many opportunities afforded her. Mr. Lionel Brough as Sir Toby Belch was a great favourite in his clever impersonation of the dissolute roysterer; Mr. Basil Gill's Orsino was a fine piece of acting; Mr. Sydney Brough made an admirable Feste; Mr. Norman Forbes undertook the part of Sir Andrew Aguecheek with success; Sebastian had a faithful impersonator in Mr. Reginald Owen; and Antonio had a powerful interpretation at the hands of Mr. J. Fisher White. Mr. Charles Quartermaine did well with his clever performance of Fabian.

"THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO."

A Play, in Three Acts, by David Belasco and Richard Watson Tully, Produced at the Belasco Theatre, New York, on Nov. 27.

This is a drama of Spanish California during the late 'fifties, and is full of colour, lively incidents, and striking situations. It has made a pronounced hit. The story deals with an attempt of a notorious American "land-grabber" named Kincaid to obtain possession of the Castro rancho under an Act of Congress, which virtually dispossessed thousands of the old Spanish families of their estates. The love story concerns a Government agent from Washington and Dona Juanita, the daughter of the Castros, known as "the Rose of the Rancho."

The scenes are laid amid the picturesque Spanish missions of Southern California. Through pride and indolence the Castros have neglected to make their property secure by filing their claim with the American land agent as required. Kincaid, of Beaver, Neb., has come to the San Juan valley, intending to grab everything in sight, and at the same time Kearney, of Washington, a Government agent, sent to investigate the land disputes, appears on the scene. Kearney meets and falls in love with the fascinating Juanita, whose mother has arranged that she shall marry a young Spanish gallant from Monterey—Don Luis de la Torre. Juanita and her people hate the "Gringos" (Americans), but the girl's father was a Yankee, and her admiration for Kearney is only half-concealed. Kincaid gives notice that he intends to dispossess the Castros of their beautiful ancestral home within a few hours. Kearney has no authority to interfere. The only thing he can do is to send a messenger to Monterey to make the required registration for the Castros before the land-grabber can take possession of the rancho. Juanita gives Kearney the necessary data, and Kearney's friend, Lieut. Martin, rides post haste to Monterey, while Kearney undertakes to delay Kincaid by trickery as long as he can. Larkin is to bring back the State Militia for Kearney's protection. In the meantime, Juanita's mother learns that the girl has tossed a geranium to a "Gringo," the flower signifying "I love you," and Juanita is locked in her room. In the second act, in spite of the danger that threatens, the mother gives the engagement party she has planned in the patio or courtyard of the rancho. Juanita's friends are all present. There are dancing, the throwing of cascarones and confetti, and other picturesque Spanish customs, and Don Luis appears to claim his bride. Juanita is defiant, and when they are about to betroth her she blows out her engagement candles and declares her preference for the American. For this her mother threatened to disown her, and is about to turn her out of the house when Kincaid and his men force their way into the courtyard, and Juanita is dumbfounded to see the man she has trusted among them. Kincaid's men are a band of ruffians. They insult the women, and are eager to possess them. Kearney tries to protect them, but he must pretend that he is friendly to Kincaid. When Juanita appeals to him he answers her coldly. Persuaded by Kearney, Kincaid agrees not to take possession till dawn, thereby giving Kearney the time he desires. At the first opportunity he tries to explain to Juanita, but she lashes him with her tongue for his betrayal of her people and strikes him. Unable to make her listen to him, he catches her in his arms and holds her by force while he explains the situation. She tells him she believes he is a liar, but she will wait till morning to see if the Militia comes.

The third act takes place on the roof of the ranch house. Dawn is breaking, and no help has arrived. Kearney pinions Kincaid suddenly, takes his pistol from him, and holds him as a hostage to ensure the safety of the women. But Don Luis, being jealous of Kearney, attacks his rival, and during the struggle Kincaid recovers his revolver and joins his men. An attack is imminent, and Padre Antonio assembles the women and offers up a prayer for their delivery. At the last moment, when Kearney has given up all hope, the sound of a bugle is heard, and the soldiers from Monterey dash in. The rancho is saved, but still the mother will not give her daughter to a "Gringo." If she clings to him she must leave the rancho. Juanita must make her choice, and she does so—in favour of the American.

The three scenes were stage pictures of rare beauty, Mr. Belasco, pastmaster of the art of embellishment, again excelling himself. The play was admirably acted by a cast which included Miss Frances Starr, Miss Maria Davis, and Messrs. Charles Richman, Hamilton Revelle, Frank Losee, John W. Cope, and Frank H. Westerton. Miss Starr, who emerged from obscurity but a short while ago, is Mr. Belasco's latest "find." Her rendering of the title-rôle was such a captivating performance that she had the critics and the general public at her feet.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS THEATRE.

The Theatre Royal, Bury St. Edmunds, reconstructed and beautifully redecorated, was opened on Monday evening under brilliant auspices, with every promise of a fair and prosperous career. A large and fashionable audience assembled to greet the Moody-Manners Grand Opera Company, the production for the opening being Faust. Previous to the commencement of the opera the curtain was raised on the entire company, grouped behind the Mayor of the Borough, Mr. Owen A. Clark, who formally declared the theatre open, calling on the audience to signalise the same by joining in the singing of "God Save the King." Mr. Charles Manners as Mephistopheles had excellent scope for displaying his fine bass voice, one of his best efforts being the serenade, "Catarina, while you play at sleeping," in the fourth act. Mr. Maurice Paul in the title-rôle sang tunefully; and Mr. Marshall Vincent as Valentine used a fine baritone with good effect; Mr. G. Gorst also sang well as Wagner. Miss Alice Boaden gave the numbers allotted to Marguerite exquisitely, and her duets with Faust were faultlessly rendered, as was also the famous "Jewel Song." Miss Rosina Beynon (Siebel) was compelled to respond to an enthusiastic encore for her charming rendering of the beautiful romance, "When all was young." Martha was taken by Miss V. Barry in a satisfactory manner. The well-balanced chorus worked hard throughout for the success of the opera, and the scenery and mounting were first-class.

During the evening the lessee and manager, Mr. Eade Montefiore, who has already established himself as a general favourite, was introduced by the chairman of the board of directors, Mr. E. W. Lake, and received with tumultuous applause. Mr. Montefiore, in a neat and appropriate speech, alluded to the historical associations of the theatre, urging the need of some place of pure and wholesome entertainment for the townspeople, and declared his intention of making the Theatre Royal once more worthy of the ancient borough of St. Edmundsbury. Mr. Manners also responded to an enthusiastic "call," and in a few well-chosen words expressed his pleasure at being present on such an occasion.

Certainly the production of Gounod's masterpiece will live in the memory of Bury St. Edmunds playgoers as the forerunner of many such evenings, and, to quote the words of the manager, "though to control the public bent is not within one's power or scope, to guide the spending of hard-earned money, and brighten the evenings after toilsome hours is a mission earning a certain gratitude." Carmen, Lohengrin, Maritana, Cavalleria Rusticana, Tannhäuser, and The Bohemian Girl were to be presented during the week.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

On Wednesday night the students of the operatic class of the Royal Academy of Music gave a performance of the Spinning Scene from Act 2 of Wagner's Flying Dutchman, and Acts 3 and 4 of Verdi's Falstaff. Mr. Edgardo Levi conducted, and the students, both soloists and chorus, may be heartily commended for their acting and singing. In the Spinning Scene Miss Josephine Ottlee gave an artistic performance of Senta, singing the music well; while Miss Dorothy Webb appeared with success in the part of Mary; the chorus of maidens at the spinning-wheels was also admirably sung. In Falstaff Mr. David Evans impersonated the hero in a jovial and bluff manner quite in keeping with the character, and causing much amusement by his clever acting in the fourth act, where Falstaff appears at the meeting-place in the forest wearing a pair of huge stag's horns on his head. Mr. John Bardsley also deserves much praise for his singing in the part of Fenton, and we may heartily compliment Miss Mary Fielding on her performance of Mistress Ford and Miss Dorothy Webb on Mistress Page, while Miss Margaret S. Wilton proved a lively Dame Quickly and Miss Aileen Hodgson a charming Anne. The characters of Cajus, Pistol, and Bardolph were intelligently played by Mr. Thomas Gibbs, Mr. Cecil Pearson, and Mr. J. Musgrove Wright. The graceful and effective dance in the fourth act was cleverly arranged by Mr. B. Soutten; and a word of praise must be awarded to Miss Mary Burgess, who presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Benjamin Dale at the organ. The costumes and properties were kindly lent by the Royal Opera Syndicate.

After the performance of the operatic students on Wednesday, the dramatic class gave a really excellent performance of Sheridan's comedy, The School for Scandal, on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 13. To avoid loss of time there was no change of scenery throughout, and this plan answered admirably, as otherwise it would not have been possible to have given the four acts in so short a time, and the one scene of a room at Lady Sneerwell's, with some alteration of the furniture and pictures, served all purposes, as the action of the comedy takes place in the various rooms of the principal characters. In the character of Lady Teazle Miss Elsie Williams displayed no little talent, acting in a bright and sparkling manner her quarrel scenes with Sir Peter Teazle, and in the famous screen scene showing that she was at home in the more serious side of her art. She was admirably supported by Mr. Campbell Cargill as Sir Peter, although his make-up was hardly old enough for the part. Mr. Cecil Pearson made an excellent Sir Oliver Surface, speaking his lines with clearness and decision. The part of the hypocritical Joseph Surface was skilfully enacted by Mr. Patric Curwen; and Mr. Emile d'Oisly acted the character of Charles Surface with freedom and grace, being particularly good in the scene where he sells his ancestors' portraits to Mr. Premium. Mr. R. Jones did well as Sir Benjamin Backbite, and Miss Esther Telling made a capital Mrs. Candour; the part of the caustic Lady Sneerwell being cleverly acted by Miss Ruth Parrott; while Miss Kathleen Coombes was a sympathetic Maria. As the Jew Moses Mr. J. M. Duncan was very effective, although his make-up was not particularly Jewish. Snake, Careless, and Sir Harry Bumper were carefully acted by Mr. Campbell Cargill, Mr. Basil Taylor, and Mr. J. Melvin Nightingale; and even the small parts of Lady Sneerwell's and Lady Teazle's servants were well performed. The scene of the room in Charles Surface's house was cleverly managed, and the song, "Here's to the maiden," encored. The dresses of the various characters were handsome and correct, and the entire performance and the stage-management reflected the greatest credit on Miss Rosina Filippi. Miss Mary Burgess and Miss Myra Hess presided at the piano. During the performance all the principal characters came on, and Mr. Cecil Pearson advanced to the front saying that, as Miss Filippi was about leaving the school, he took this opportunity of making a presentation to her, and, at the same time, expressing the deep regret of all her pupils, to whom Miss Rosina Filippi was endeared by her kindness and marvellous patience. In answer to loud applause, Miss Filippi said she heartily thanked them all, and that she was sorry to leave.

CASTLE THEATRE, RICHMOND.

On Thursday, Dec. 13,
"THE CHRISTIAN."

Mr. J. Bannister Howard has concluded his first season here with an attraction worthy of its predecessors. By arrangement with Mr. Wentworth Croke he was enabled to produce The Christian here, and, as was to be expected, the play met with an all-round enthusiastic reception. The company concerned in the interpretation did well from start to finish. The wisdom of selecting Mr. E. Stanton Sharp to play as the Hon. John Storm was early apparent; his acting was excellent throughout, and his elocution added much to the success of a really finished performance. To Miss Laura Walker, as Glory Quayle, honours should not be stinted; never for a moment was the safety of the part in jeopardy—in the lighter comedy scenes she was irresistibly naïve and amusing, and in the more arduous parts of the play she manifested talent of an unmistakably high order. Mr. Harry Colbeck did well as the good Father; and Mr. Phipps Stanley displayed a sense of humour as Archdeacon Wealthy. A good, homely soul, Mrs. Callender found a clever exponent in Miss Alice Maude; Horatio Drake was forcibly and capably sustained by Mr. Duncan Yarrow, who will do much by this impersonation to enhance his reputation. Paradoxically, Mr. P. Gedge Twyman, as Lord Robert Ure, made quite an agreeable villain. As the manager of the Colosseum, Mr. Stuart Black did the little he had to do very well; and Mr. Anthony Rawle was satisfactory as the Faro King. Miss L. Kingston may be complimented on her efforts as Polly Love; in Act II. she did splendidly. Some creditable work was shown by Miss A. Hearne (Betty), Miss K. Graeme (Netty), and Miss V. Herne (Letty); Mr. Percy Johnson played Farmer Quayle with discretion; and Brother Paul found a capital exponent in Mr. H. Louis Wilson. The play was admirably staged and mounted. The business-managership, in the hands of Miss Marie Beckenham, left nothing to be desired. Mr. Arthur Howard's success as acting-manager during the season has left nothing undone, and he has worked indefatigably to bring success to the little Temple of Thespis.

"THE WEBSTERS," a play, in four acts, by Frank Kingston, was produced at Terry's Theatre, on Tuesday afternoon. It can only be described as "amateurish," both in construction and treatment. Frank Webster, son of Sir Reginald Webster, Bart., has to suffer for a forgery which has been committed by his brother Douglas. Indignant at the injustice, he goes to London, and writes plays. One of these is accepted by an American manager; and, in the end, Sir Reginald leaves Frank his sole heir. He is thus able to marry Léonie de Fernandez, whose guardian, Kenneth Clairville—who is in love with Léonie himself—has tried in vain to represent as illegitimate. The artists engaged in a piece of this sort merit mercy and sympathy. Miss Beatrice Bevan brought an engaging personality and manner and good enunciation to bear upon the part of the heroine; and Mr. Percy Calton worked hard and well as Frank Webster. The other members of the cast did the best they could with the materials at their command.

PROVINCIAL PANTOMIMES.

OPENING OF THE KING'S THEATRE, EDINBURGH.

The beautiful new King's Theatre, Edinburgh, was opened last Saturday evening in the presence of a crowded audience. The house has already been fully described in these columns. When the musical conductor took his place in the orchestra, punctually as seven o'clock, the electric lights in the auditorium were turned on one by one, the strains of the National Anthem were struck up by the band, and the audience, upstanding, joined heartily in singing the words. The curtain then rose upon the first act of the pantomime, The Clematis Glade, where two of the immortals, Malevolentio and Icicle, enter, and scornfully speak of the inhabitants of the earth. The Fairy Godmother comes upon the scene, and defends the mortals from the aspersions of her fellow spirits, saying that she will make the experiment of asking a favour from some of the earth-born, and will shower her gifts on the one who shows a kindly heart. The scene changes to The Heart of the Forest, in winter, where the villagers come gathering wood, and break into song and sabot dance. The Fairy Godmother, in the guise of an old beggar-woman, finds her pleadings rejected, until Cinderella, daughter of the Baron, and Choddles, the Baron's retainer, enter. Cinderella pities the old mendicant, and gives her a bundle of sticks. This generous action touches the fairy, and, by a wave of her wand, she transforms the wintry scene into spring-time, with the brooks bursting their icy barriers and rabbits frolicking about the leafy glades. This ingenious effect, the pictures from the brush of Mr. Conrad Tritschler, was loudly applauded. Prince Rudolph and his courtiers appear in hunting garb, and the Prince, in a merry mood, induces his valet, Dandini, without much pressure, to assume the Royal name and privileges for one day. The party retire, to allow of the entrance of Archibald, Baron Lacklands, of Poldoody Hall, his wife, Daisy, and his two step-daughters, Mopsa and Arethusa. The fun now grows fast and furious. The Baron and his family make free in a very comic manner with the lunch, which the Royal party has left until their return. The Prince, coming back, finds Cinderella alone, falls in love with her, and, having previously, on learning of the disappearance of the victuals, invited his household to dine at the Baron's, now looks forward to meeting the sweet little wood-gatherer once again. The interior of the baronial hall gives the Baron (Mr. Dan Rolyat) an opportunity for the display of genuinely humorous acting, which stirred the audience to loud and prolonged laughter. The Baronial Kitchen shows Cinderella lamenting the fact that she cannot go to the ball at the Palace, to which her father, mother, and sisters have been invited. The Fairy Godmother arrives at this moment, and transports her to The Toilet Chamber, a charmingly arranged scene, in which various fairies bring Cinderella the necessary articles—ball dress, jewels, fan, and flowers, for her visit to the Palace. She is told to leave the ball before the stroke of twelve, and departs in a glittering carriage, drawn by four beautiful little Shetland ponies. This concludes the first act, and permits the audience to see the very complete arrangements for their comfort, in tea-room, smoking-room, and lounge. The second act begins with The Ballroom at the Palace, a gay and splendid spectacle. Cinderella, forgetting the injunction of the fairy, hears with dismay the clock striking twelve, and, stripped of her finery, rushes home in her old dress, losing one of her glass slippers in her haste. The remaining scenes of the pantomime follow the old story in the customary way. The Prince offers, as a reward for the owner of the slipper, his hand and a share of his throne, and the lucky maiden is, of course, found in the person of Cinderella, the curtain falling upon The Fairy Wedding, a lovely finale to a lovely pantomime.

The management has made a powerful bid for popularity in the company which has been engaged for the production of the spectacle. Miss Phyllis Dare is an ideal Cinderella. She plays with all the winsome grace and girlish freshness which have won so many hearts, and her acting confirms her rising reputation, and stamps her, young as she is, as a thorough artist. She sings with charm, and dances with exceeding daintiness. A specially delightful number is sung in the first scene of Act 2, in which Miss Dare has the assistance of a pretty child, who danced with the assurance of a grown performer. Mr. Dan Rolyat as Archibald, Baron Lacklands, and Mr. John Humphries as Daisy, are a tower of strength in the comic scenes. Mr. Rolyat is an excellent comedian, who commands the laughter of the audience at will; and Mr. Humphries assists, by his quiet, unforced humour, which never grows vulgar, towards the success of the production. Another very clever performance is the Choddles of Mr. Stephen Adeson. Mr. Adeson is not only an admirable comedian, but a good singer and expert dancer, and his work is thoroughly appreciated by his audience. Mr. Ray Russell is effective as Dandini. He is a vocalist of merit, and dances with grace Miss Violet Englefield makes a good appearance as the Prince, and her efforts were rewarded with many handsome floral tributes. Miss Gwennie Hasto as Princess Rexana looks extremely well, and acts with vivacity and finish. Her song and dance in the second part were one of the hits of the evening. Notable appearances are made by Miss Vera Vere and Miss Marie Rignold as the two daughters of the Baroness. The talents of Miss Dorothy Chard have little scope in the small part of the Fairy Godmother; but the young actress speaks her lines with telling expression. The retainers of the Prince find attractive representatives in Miss Dorothy Ward, Miss Margaret Webster, Miss Kitty Sparrow, Miss Rhoda Clighton, Miss Kitty Devlin, Miss Mabel Dark, and Miss Nita Yorke; while Miss Louie Lochner and Miss Delian Clark are satisfactory exponents of Malevolentio and Icicle. The scenery, designed and painted by Mr. Conrad Tritschler, Mr. R. McCleery, Mr. James Gordon, and Mr. W. R. Coleman, are felicitous examples of work. As already indicated, The Heart of the Forest is a singularly fine canvas; and equally good in the suggestion of the subjects are Mr. McCleery's and Mr. Coleman's interiors, and Mr. Gordon's pictures of Cinderella's garret and Hall at the Baron's. The special numbers, composed by Mr. Alfred Haines, are lively and tuneful; and the dresses and accessories, designed by Mr. Wilhelm, are blended with excellent taste in colouring.

At the close of the pantomime, which went with perfect smoothness from first to last, there were loud calls for Mr. Courtneidge, who expressed the pleasure it gave him in producing a pantomime in his native city, and said his thanks were due to the artists, who had worked so loyally to ensure the success of the piece. Mr. R. C. Buchanan was then summoned to the footlights, and read telegrams from Mr. Tree, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. George Edwardes, Mr. Martin Harvey, and Miss Ellen Terry, wishing the King's Theatre good luck Mr. Buchanan said that this was a memorable night, and he thanked the audience for their splendid reception of the pantomime. He did not intend to forecast the plans for the future, but the production of that evening was an earnest of what might be expected.

"DICK WHITTINGTON" AT GLASGOW.

On Thursday, the 6th inst., Mr. F. W. Wyndham produced his nineteenth pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, and the result of his completed labours was received with acclamation by a large and delighted audience. In choosing the popular subject of Dick Whittington for his pantomime, Mr. Wyndham doubtless felt himself on secure ground. It is one of the half-dozen themes which hold the record in pantomime annals, and the story, ranging as it does from London to Morocco, lends itself readily to the most picturesque attainments of the scene-painter's art. In the matter of scenery and dresses, the Royal has always been in the forefront of provincial theatres, and the present production is no exception. The action is divided into two parts, of seven and eight scenes respectively, and most of these are undoubtedly triumphs of scenic splendour, alike in regard to design and execution. The opening scene, the Village of Ellesmere, is an attractive set, and here we are introduced to all the principal characters, for the story is so far extended as to make Dick Whittington first be seen in his native village, where he rescues Alice Fitzwarren from an infuriated bull, then takes service with the Alderman, as does also Idle Jack, and the whole party then depart for Scene 2, Fitzwarren's Home in London, the reception hall of which affords the artist excellent opportunity for an impressive old baronial hall of ample proportions and luxurious style. Both scenes are by the resident scenic artist here, Mr. T. F. Dunn, who is responsible for another charming picture, Fitzwarren's Garden, and also for the opening scene of Part 2, The Port of Tangiers. This is another particularly striking set, and evoked the hearty applause of the audience. The concluding scene, The Betrothal, is a further example of Mr. Dunn's work, and, in addition, he is responsible for several fine cloths, notably On the Ocean Wave, Bluebell's Home, and the humorously labelled one, called A Mean Street. Mr. T. E. Ryan is well represented in the scenes representing Highgate Hill, "Turn Again, Whittington," and the Ante-chamber of the Palace. Two clever scenes are contributed by Mr. Ernest Glover—The Kitchen and Fitzwarren's Garret. The Coast of Ratland, by Mr. A. Glendinning, completes the list, and the several charming scenes form a fitting setting for the many and varied adventures of the dramatis personæ.

Among these, first mention might be made of Mr. Bransby Williams, who, as Alderman Fitzwarren, gives a performance which is a gem of neat and finished comedy, with just that soupçon of exaggeration to make it suitable for pantomime. The self-satisfied airs of the man who has risen in the world, the little tricks of speech and action which render the part distinctive, and the consistent way in which the type of character is always kept in view, make the performance fit to rank with anything Mr. Bransby Williams has yet played here, either in Dickens' or other parts. In the scene where he imitated various well-known actors, he aroused the enthusiasm of the audience to a great pitch, those of Messrs. George Alexander, Beerbohm Tree, and Martin Harvey being voted absolutely lifelike, and that of Sir Charles Wyndham almost perfect. In other scenes Mr. Williams hit off the style of R. G. Knowles to a nicety, and also reproduced with fidelity the methods of Tom Murray. Another clever comedian is Mr. Will Evans, who returns to Glasgow after an absence of several years. His idle Jack is a most amusing character, and from his first exciting entrance in charge of an angry bull, which he latterly fights, à la toreador, he keeps the audience in the best of humour. His antics as a piano-tuner were excruciatingly funny. Then, in conjunction with Messrs. Downes and Langford, he attempts to build a chicken-house, and the fun in this scene alone would equip many a pantomime. His shopwalker lesson, with Mr. Bransby Williams, was also extremely funny; while his own special item as a street minstrel who is rewarded with sundry offerings of old boots, tin cans, rags, &c., was one of the hits of the evening. Messrs. Downes and Langford gave with excellent effect some of their clever patter and cross-talk scenes, while their parts in the pantomime were both specially well done. Mr. E. Jerome Langford as Rupert Ruffles, the dude-like private secretary and Press agent of Fitzwarren, played an eccentric part with most humorous effect; and Mr. Wm. Downes as the bluff sailor, Captain Jack, with his propensity for advice, was also particularly good. In Mr. Will Evans' interpolated burlesque of a scene from Robinson Crusoe (in which he played Will Atkins and stage-managed), Messrs. Downes and Langford lent able assistance, the former as a burly and massive Polly Perkins, and the latter as an emaciated principal boy, being funny to a degree. Mr. W. F. Frame, the popular Scotch comedian, who had a most hearty reception on his first entrance, played Elizabeth, the cook, with much humour, and sang a lively ditty, extolling the talents of the said cook in all branches of the culinary art. Mr. Frame added his quota to the humours of the evening, one of his items being an exaggerated rendering of Vesta Victoria's tuneful song, "Waiting at the church." Miss Madoline Rees as Dick Whittington was a handsome principal boy, with lots of dash and go, and as a singer soon took the fancy of the audience. The pretty ballad, "Whispers of love," was especially well received, and another attractive item was "Good-bye, dear old London town." Miss Lena Vere made Alice Fitzwarren a more sedate young lady than we are accustomed to see, acting, however, with pleasant appreciation, and singing her various songs with much taste and expression. As the Prince of Morocco, Miss Edna Morgan brought a handsome and striking presence and a good voice to the part, and amply deserved the number of recalls she received for her spirited singing of "Hello, hello, it's a different girl again." Miss Mena Brae was an attractive Princess Zoe, and shared the honours in the love-making scene with Mr. Bransby Williams. She acted with much humour, and her "Zuyder Zee" song, with its accompanying sabot dance, was most enjoyable. Miss Aimee Grey was a charming Fairy Bluebell and a sweet singer, as her "Snowflake" song amply proved. Mr. Albert Felino as the Cat gave a clever performance as the harmless, necessary feline, who so faithfully follows the fortunes of Dick throughout the story. Mr. Arthur Burgoyne as the King of Ratland completed an able cast. The Tiller Troupe of dancers received quite an ovation for their various smart dances; and the flying ballet of Mme. Preciosa Grigolatis appeared in one scene with good effect.

As is usual at the Royal, the handsome and costly dresses were the theme of admiration from the first scene to the last, and the striking tableaux which conclude each part were equal to anything Mr. Wyndham has devised in the way of stage pictures. The book of the pantomime is again by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and affords the various characters ample scope for showing their ability. Mr. Alfred Carpenter has selected and arranged the music, which includes all the tunes likely to be popular during the Christmas season. The Royal stage staff deserve credit for their share in the general success, the properties by Messrs. George Sutherland and Duncan Wright, the machinery by Mr. Charles Penman, and the ingenious electrical effects by Mr. J. D. Milligan, being important factors.

Mr. F. W. Wyndham superintended the rehearsals and the production, and received a unanimous and hearty call at the conclusion. In thanking the audience, he alluded to the fact that they had a hard task trying to beat the Harry Lauder records in the pantomime of last year, but he felt sure they would run it a dead-heat. Mr. William H. Morgan as stage-manager has ably carried out his arduous duties, and the performance on the opening night went from beginning to end without a hitch. In response to loud demands, Mr. Bransby Williams and Mr Will Evans each thanked the audience for their enthusiasm; and Mr. W. F. Frame also endorsed their sentiments. Mr. Percy Humphrys, the courteous acting-manager at the Royal, had a huge audience under his control on Thursday, and doubtless will have for every performance from now onwards.

"THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT," AT GLASGOW.

On Wednesday, the 5th inst., the first of the Glasgow pantomimes made its appearance, the Grand Theatre again leading the way. This year's annual has been entrusted to Mr. Fred Karno, and, considering the reputation enjoyed by that gentleman as a fun provider, as witnessed by the numerous sketches constantly touring the theatre and variety halls, the success of the pantomime was practically assured from the first, especially when it was announced that Mr. Fred Kitchen would be seen in the leading comedy part.

A crowded and enthusiastic audience gave a hearty send-off to the production on the opening night, and enjoyed with the best of good humour one or two trifling mishaps (almost inseparable from a first night), which but served to emphasise the smoothness of the production generally. While it can be seen at once that fun, and plenty of it, has been aimed at more than scenic splendour, the pantomime includes some very picturesque sets, notably the opening scene, The Village of Happie Dayes, a beautiful scene with a charming background, "practicable" mill wheel, and real live ducks disporting themselves in the mill-race. Then another pretty set is The Home of Dame Trot in Shoeland, a humorous embodiment of the legend of the old woman who lived in a shoe. The cloth representing the interior of the Squire's ancestral halls, shows that—despite the poverty which dogs the footsteps of pantomime landowners—this gentleman rejoices in a ball-room which would not be out of place in Windsor Castle or Versailles. The concluding scene of the first part, The Home of the Water Lilies, with its revival of old-time "transformation" effects, and the final scene, The Prince's Court, are good examples of the scene-painter's art, and Mr. E. Grimani and his assistants deserve every credit for their share of the work. The book is by Mr. Harold Gatty, and, to suit the exigencies of modern pantomime, incorporates such nursery heroes and heroines as Jack and Jill, Dame Trot, and the Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe, under the protecting ægis of The House that Jack Built. Regarding the company engaged, Mr. Fred Kitchen has in recent years established himself a strong favourite in Glasgow, and on his first entrance as Dame Trot he received a vociferous welcome. His abilities as a comedian are well-known, and he soon had the house in roars with his quaint comments on things in general, and his humorous facility in the devising of business. His share in a love ballad sung by the Prince was most diverting, and the fun with the various callers at Dame Trot's door (including an unfortunate insurance canvasser, a butcher's boy, and a milkman), was the occasion for shrieks of merriment. Then a wealth of funny business was worked up between the Dame and her diminutive husband, played with much spirit by that clever young artist, Mr. Harry Lappo, who in facial make-up and moleskins made a typical labouring man. Prominent among the comedians are that smart combination known as the Harmony Four, and in their own musical speciality, as in their respective parts of Tommy Green, Johnny Stout, and the two broker's men, they were well to the fore in their efforts at fun-making. As the Prince Veritas of the story, Miss May Mars was particularly well suited. She is possessed of a handsome presence and a taking style, while her vocal items were given with much taste. She caught the fancy of the audience right away with "I love Molly," and had them joining lustily in the chorus at the second verse. In the tuneful ditty, "Waltz me around again, Willie," she is also provided with a number that is sure to catch the public ear. In the part of the hero, Jack, Miss Luna Love is another strong favourite. In her previous appearances here, as Mamie Clancy in The Belle of New York, and later in The Duchess of Dantzic, she showed herself a comedienne of decided ability, and the liveliness, humour, and sprightliness of her performance as Jack will still further enhance her reputation here. She installed herself in the good graces of the audience in the first scene, and improved in popularity as the night wore on. In the song and sabot dance, "The Zuyder Zee," she was particularly good, and was rewarded with several encores and two handsome floral offerings. Miss Frances Kapstowne as Jack's sweetheart, Jill, was a dainty principal girl, and acted, sang, and danced with commendable enthusiasm. Two clever little girls, Little Maudie Frances as Tommy Tucker and Wee Mona as Marjory Daw, made the dancing hits of the evening, the former in a neat step-dance (accompanied by the Cat) and the latter as a Hungarian top-boot dancer. The Cat was played with wonderful fidelity to nature by Mr. Fred Whittaker, and was voted the best example of this class of work seen here for some considerable time. Mr. Helier Le Maistre as Squire Squareface acted the bold, bad man with due emphasis, but was unfortunately not given a suitable opportunity of displaying the fine voice we know him to possess. Mr. Bob Sloan as the Squire's man, Sandy, made up in lurid red wig, and whiskers en suite, infused some Scotch fun into the pantomime, and in his comic recital of the demands made by the tenants who passed under his observation was seen at his best. Mr. Cattenack as Farmer Honeysett was good, and acted the much-tried father of the heroine with the necessary severity. A couple of attractive damsels were the Phyllis of Miss Agnes Lane and the Doris of Miss Ada Whittaker. Miss Genevera Tree as the fairy, depicted in this case in the allegorical rôle of Good Times, acted and sang with good effect. The Sisters Hopkins were seen to advantage as Princess Sincerita and the Enchantress. Other parts were ably filled by Mr. Dave Laird and Misses Flo Pragnell, Freda Vaughan, Helen Le Maistre, Lallie Forsyth, and Ianthe Gordon.

The pantomime has been rehearsed and produced by Mr. Harold L. Hilliard, who deserves the utmost credit for the way in which he has marshalled his forces. As stage-manager he is ably assisted by Mr. Kenneth McLeod, who remains during the run. The final rehearsals of the production were under the personal supervision of Mr. Fred Karno, and this gentleman, with the energetic manager-director of the Grand, Mr. R. C. Buchanan, had to respond to hearty calls at the conclusion of the pantomime, and to express their thanks in a few chosen sentences. Mr. Duncan Macfarlane, the new acting-manager at the Grand, enters upon his duties at a busy time, and the interests of Mr. Fred Karno are in the hands of Mr. J. B. Helm. Mr. H. Henderson, the conductor of the orchestra here, looks after the musical requirements with his accustomed ability. The ballets and processions were drilled and arranged by Miss Dollie Bell. The success of the latest Grand production is undoubted, and it should draw the crowds for a considerable time to come

"THE SLEEPING BEAUTY" AT MANCHESTER.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Levy and Mr. J. E. Cardwell introduced to Manchester on Monday last its first pantomime of the season at the Queen's Theatre, before a large and appreciative audience. The novel feature of Messrs. Levy and Cardwell's company is that it is made up largely of juvenile talent, and it is notable that the talent in question is of a peculiarly precocious sort, so that the production, as a whole, supported as it is by older hands, steers clear of the character of a children's pantomime, while appealing to children of all ages. The book is by H. B. Levy, and tells the story of the sleeping princess and her resuscitation, after a hundred years, with becoming regard to the easy demands of pantomime, whereby the progress of events shall be enlivened by the introduction of all manner of entertainment without any harassing subordination to the text. It is accompanied by incidental music of a lively character by G. F. Dodds, and the scenery and dresses have been provided on an elaborate scale. Twelve scenes depict the progress of the story, which is bodied up by a chorus of seventy voices and an orchestra of adequate proportions; added to which are specialities by the Marguerite Quartet of Dancers, a clever and graceful combination; La Belle Annette, speciality dancer; Miss Edie Camm, baton swinger; and wee George Wood, a truly remarkable comedian and mimic, not yet eleven years old. In the way of spectacular effects there are three ballets worthy of mention, namely, the "flower," the "musical," and that of "various nations." Here, it must be admitted, are the constituents of a success, and last Monday's audience gave the production a most promising start.

Miss Dolly Dodds as Beauty is a very pleasing figure throughout, and she earned considerable applause for all her songs, but chiefly for "Somebody's sweetheart"; her share in a duet with the Prince (Miss Kitty Trewhitt), "Will you love me in December as you do in May?" (a big success); and "I'm looking for a sweetheart," an appeal answered by an obliging gentleman in one of the boxes beside the stage. Miss Kitty Trewhitt filled the requirements of the part of Prince Florizel with a nice restraint, and, in addition to her success in the song named above, was heard to advantage in the successful Irish song, "Arrah Wanna." Governing the fortunes of these two, in spite of the machinations of the witch Maligna (Miss Beattie Townshend), is the good fairy Queen Claribel, a part very agreeably filled by Miss May Gibson, whose voice, a good one, delighted the house in "Fancies" and a ballad called "Return." Also prominent among the ladies are Miss Daisy Fielder as Sir Alfonso, valet to the Prince, and Miss Isa Gibson as Trixie, Beauty's maid-of-honour. Miss Isa Gibson sang "Good-night, Mr. Brown, I'm out," and afterwards joined Miss Daisy Fielder in "By the side of the Zuyder Zee," a well-sung duet, followed by a characteristic Dutch dance, which proved extremely successful. Among the laughter-makers little George Wood, a very diminutive comedian, to all appearances scarcely out of his nurse's hands, provoked the most amusement and applause. He has all the airs of a practised entertainer, and not only sang one or two songs in approved style—"Father coaxed it in," and "Eh, dad—don't you know?"—but, responding to an encore, gave a long dramatic recitation, "Kissing Cup's Race" (dressed like a jockey), in a fashion that speaks well for his future, if his sheer precocity is not allowed to kill the natural talent that is in him. Another embryo comedian, who is not without individuality, is Master Jack Harrison, the slender King Fearnought. He is active, spontaneously funny at times, and has a voice that will do him good service some day. His Queen, a large and terrible personage, is played by one of the Brothers Armstrong, who might cultivate a quieter style with advantage. The other of the Armstrong duo makes a good comic maid, Asbestos. Besides these are Colonel Dreadnought and Major Flashlight, two busy and humorous characters, cleverly impersonated by Messrs. Doyle and Gibson; and the fun is further augmented by the efforts of Messrs. Pat Sloan and Taylor Snowball as a couple of living Gollywogs.

In addition to the vocal numbers already mentioned, a duet, "Don't you remember?" is given by Master Jack Harrison and "Queen" Armstrong; a burlesque trio "Excelsior" by the same couple and "Maid" Armstrong; a quartet, "The House that Jack Built," by Misses Dolly Dodds and May Gibson and Messrs. Doyle and Gibson; and a song and dance, "My rag-time coon," by one of the Gollywogs. It should be mentioned that the scenery is from the brush of R. D. Graham (and assistants), and that the entire production is under the personal supervision of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Levy. The success of the production is certain.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

On Tuesday afternoon the pupils of Mr. John Francis Barnett gave a highly successful historical pianoforte recital. The works performed included examples of all the great composers, from Purcell (1658) to Jensen, who died in 1879. The recital began with Purcell's "Courante" and "Ground," played by Miss M. J. Powell. In "Sarabande" and "La Poule," by Rameau, Miss Nellie Atkinson displayed neat execution; and Miss Frances Fox was equally successful in a delightful "Pastorale" and Toccata in A by Scarlatti. Handel's Fantasie in C had an intelligent exponent in Miss Cady Hassell; while the difficult Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue of Bach was cleverly played by Miss Dora Beeson. A quaint Arietta by Leonardo di Leo and Paradies' Toccata in A were performed in quite the right spirit by Miss Margaret Gray; and Miss Beatrice Dunn was much applauded in Haydn's Fantasia. One of Mr. Barnett's most promising pupils was Master Mischa Levin (a prize-winner in 1906), who essayed, and with a fair amount of success, no less an important work than Beethoven's "Moonlight" sonata, the slow movement of which was remarkably well played, the youthful performer being warmly greeted by the audience. The first movement of Hummel's Concerto in A Minor was given with good expression by Miss Dorothy Ellis, the second pianoforte being played by Master Mischa Levin. Schubert's charming Impromptu in G Op. 90, was skilfully rendered by Miss Muriel Kingsbury; and the duet for two pianos of Mendelssohn's Allegro Brilliant was intelligently performed by Miss Frances Cox and Mr. Wallis Bandey. Miss Jessie Attwell played "Larghetto" and "Rondo," from Chopin's Concerto in E Minor, with considerable spirit, the second pianoforte being ably undertaken by Miss Dora Beeson. Other clever items by the pupils, who all did themselves and their esteemed professor great credit, were Mr. Wallis Bandey, heard in Schumann's Toccata, Op. 7; Mr. Walter Lawrence, in Liszt's Rhapsody Hongroise, No. 12; Miss Alice Edwards, in Scherzo in E Flat Minor of Brahms; Miss McKechnie; and Miss Beatrice Dunn, who played a clever Valse Caprice written by Mr. J. F. Barnett.

In the fine hall of the City of London School, the Guildhall students on Wednesday evening gave an orchestral concert which attracted a large number of visitors. Dr. Cummings conducted the orchestra, with the exception of the first item in the programme, a concert overture (MS.) written by Mr. W. E. Lawrence, which was conducted by its composer. The concert overture, on first hearing, reveals the fact that Mr. Lawrence has no small ability in writing for the orchestra. That the young composer is a lover of contrasts was evident, but the overture also has melody of a distinct character, while the scoring for the wind instruments deserves great praise. Mr. Lawrence is a pupil of Mr. J. Barnett. The other new work produced was a pianoforte concerto (MS.) in C minor (first movement), by Miss Ethel Scarborough, pupil of Mr. A. Barclay. The concerto has a consistent theme, and is written in a promising and musicianly manner. The composition was admirably played by its author, Dr. Cummings conducting the orchestra. Both Mr. Lawrence and Miss Scarborough were warmly greeted by the audience, and recalled several times to the platform. Included also in the programme was Max Bruch's violin concerto, Miss Doris Cloud giving an intelligent performance of the solo instrument, being ably supported by the orchestra. The vocal items were Donizetti's romanza, "Spirto gentel" (La Favorita), capitally sang by Mr. Wallis Anderson, and recitative and aria, "Ocean! thou mighty monster," and "Still I see thy billows flashing," from Weber's Oberon, sung with ability by Miss Eva Colton. Both vocalists, who were much applauded, had the advantage of clever orchestral accompaniment.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Play, by Hall Caine, entitled
"THE ETERNAL CITY."

A large and expectant audience took advantage of the opportunity afforded them on Monday of again seeing Mr. Lewin Mannering and company in Hall Caine's play, The Eternal City, notwithstanding the fact that this is the third visit since the opening of the theatre. Mr. J. Bannister Howard's company is in every way a capable one, and the remarkably successful play is performed in an excellent manner. The Baron Bonelli of Mr. Lewin Mannering is quietly powerful, and throughout he succeeds in giving a most effective reading of this central figure. Mr. W. O'Flynn cleverly depicts Bruno Rocco; and Mr. J. Poole Kirkwood plays with subdued force the part of Commendatore Angelelli. Miss Sara de Groot, although plainly playing under difficulties through a severe cold, exhibits admirable method in her treatment of Donna Roma, her presentment of the part being both natural and intense. Mr. Henry Deas's stalwart appearance and robust style of acting are in admirable keeping with the character of David Rossi. Mr. Court (General Morra), Mr. E. Charles (Father Pifferi), Mr. K. Arthur (Colonel Cavilli), and Mr. E. Clowes (Tomasso) are each valuable factors in the general success of the play. Mr. Jack Fortescue imparts the necessary dignity to the rôle of Pope Pius XI.; and Mr. Edward Comberbach ably interprets the part of Charles Minghelli, the police spy. Miss C. Stokes as Francessa, Miss May Fortescue as Princess Bellini, the Misses Eva Stuart and Violet Campbell as Elena and Nattalina may be congratulated on their work; and the other numerous characters are all well placed. The incidental music, entrusted to Mr. Chas. Elcock and the Marlborough orchestra, is well rendered, Mr. D. Lewin Mannering is responsible for the management of the stage, and Mr. Arthur Hales is the business-manager for Mr. J. Bannister Howard.

KING'S THEATRE, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Musical Comedy, entitled
"THE CATCH OF THE SEASON."

As an effective wind-up of the season no greater attraction than this musical comedy could have been chosen, and as the company is organised by the indefatigable Mr. George Dance, no further guarantee of excellence is needed. The crowded state of the King's on Monday evening proved this, and the audience enjoyed the piece just as much as on the previous visit, encoring the catchy songs and choruses of Messrs. Haines and Baker, smiling at the smart lines and sallies of Messrs. Seymour Hicks and Cosmo Hamilton, and being quite satisfied with the efforts of the talented company. The mercurial Duke of St. Jermyns was ably rendered by Mr. Frank Lincoln, who appeared to be the legitimate successor to the restless style of Mr. Seymour Hicks. Mr. E. H. Kelly made an exceedingly droll personage of Lord Dundreary; Higham Montague was racily played by Mr. A. R. Boielle; and Mr. Alfred Lloyd made an amusing Mr. William Gibson. A clever and delicate performance was that of Mr. Julian Cross as Sir John Crystal. Master Grata, a born comedian, won deserved success as the precocious page boy, Bucket. Captain Rushpool and Almeric Montpelier found capable representatives in Mr. Joseph Bruce and Mr. Vincent Lawson. Angela Crystal introduced a most bewitching young lady in the person of Miss Moya Mannering, who succeeded in making herself a general favourite by her refreshing naturalness and dainty singing. The Duchess of St. Jermyns was satisfactorily played by Miss Gwynneth Galton; and Miss Ida Mann impersonated Lady Crystal very capably. Miss Jane Eyre acted engagingly and sang brilliantly as Honoria Bedford; and Sophia Bedford was sustained very skilfully by Miss Margaret Savill. Miss Belle Napier repeated her artistic performance of Lady Caterham. The Gibson Girls were a number of fascinating young ladies, and the general chorus was quite adequate. Mr. J. A. Robertson conducted the orchestra with his customary ability.

THE CAMDEN.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, by Frederick Melville, entitled
"HER FORBIDDEN MARRIAGE."

This is the last week of the season here, and the theatre will now be closed until Boxing Day, when it reopens with the annual pantomime. A special attraction is provided by the first appearance here of Mr. Frederick Melville's company, in Her Forbidden Marriage. Mr. Melville has been well schooled in the requirements of modern melodrama, and he has written a play which simply rushes along at a breathless pace, and bristles with thrilling scenes. The whole production is staged in a most complete manner, and it is small wonder that good houses are being attracted. Mr. Henry Lonsdale is seen to advantage as George Maddison, the much-wronged hero, a part that he plays with great force. Lucy is pathetically presented by Miss Nellie Bonser, who has a long and trying part to act; but she is equal to her task, and is most successful, winning full sympathy for the character. The rascally Charles Devereux is capitally depicted by Mr. Louis Hector, who plays in a most finished manner. Sir George Lancaster has an admirable exponent in Mr. Beresford Whitcomb, who plays the rôle with sincerity. Lady Lucretia Lancaster is ably depicted by Miss Octavia Noel, who acts with great skill throughout. Too much praise cannot be given to Miss Barbara Gott, who appears as the Mother Superior of the Convent. Mr. Fred de Vere is exceedingly humorous as Timothy Tuttut; and he is ably seconded by Miss Sybil Hammersley, a very bright Patty. The other characters are in capable hands, Messrs. Philip Renouf, Leonard Maxwell, and Bowdon Vivian especially lending valuable assistance. Mr. John A. Attkin is stage and general manager for Mr. Melville.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, in Four Acts, by James Willard, entitled
"A WOMAN'S PLUCK."

The attraction here this week is Mr. James Willard's original spectacular drama, A Woman's Pluck. The plot is of the simplest, but fullest advantage has been taken of the various episodes to make each scene thoroughly realistic, and, with the earnest and convincing acting of an excellent company, the interest of the audience is fully sustained. Miss Grace Lester is admirably placed as Grace Daremont, a part which allows full scope for her talents, and she achieves a distinct success. Miss Violet Carr as Jessie Pope makes a sweet, refined heroine, and her efforts receive due recognition. Warm praise must be given to Miss Tina Shaw, whose impersonation of the precocious boy, Bertie Daredevil, could scarcely be improved upon. Mr. Austin Mortimer is to be congratulated on a powerful impersonation of the villain, Dick Darrell; Mr. Harry T. Wood as Winston Dale, a young artist, acts with zest and sincerity; and Mr. Fred Norburn submits a finished study of the ex-convict, Jim Daremont. Mr. Harry Emerson's delineation of the blind basket-maker, Matthew Pope, is one of the leading features of the play. As Roger Pippin, Mr. Dicky Bird is responsible for a good deal of quiet humour, and is well supported by Miss Nellie Freeland, who looks and acts the part of Ophelia Pippin, the showman's wife, to perfection. Mr. John Compling is to be commended for a sound and natural embodiment of Sir John Daredevil; Mr. Frank Etheridge is a satisfactory Sir Noel Fordyce; and Mr. Highman Twyson a manly Rev. John Raymond. Miss Elsie Maitland capably sustains the part of Mrs. Pope; and Miss Helen Elmar is sufficiently dignified as Lady Daredevil. The play, which is produced under the direction of the author, is excellently staged and mounted. Mr. Harry Emmerson is business-manager and Mr. John Campling acting-manager, for Mr. James Willard.

KENNINGTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Play, entitled
"EAST LYNNE."

Lovers of melodrama are well catered for this week, as the dramatised version of Mrs. Henry Wood's famous novel is being presented by Miss Dorothy Grimston and her powerful company. The piece furnishes a welcome interlude between the successful autumn season at this theatre, in which musical comedy has been interspersed with society plays and opera bouffé, and the Christmas pantomime of Humpty Dumpty, now busily rehearsing, and the development of the story was followed with the keenest interest by the audience on Monday night. The dramatic possibilities and touching pathos of East Lynne are too familiar to the theatre-goer to need comment here; suffice it to say that the play is one which affords a marked opportunity for the display of the highest histrionic gifts on the part of the actress who takes the rôle of Lady Isabel, and that Miss Dorothy Grimston fully rises to the occasion. In the third and fourth acts, when the erring wife returns in the guise of the governess, to watch over the last moments of her child, and pays the penalty of past folly with her life, Miss Grimston acted with wonderful realism. The death-bed scene was a fine piece of dramatic interpretation, and worthy of the daughter of the Kendals. Mr. Wilfred Beckwith had a difficult character to sustain as Archibald Carlyle, but played it with credit to himself. Mr. Eric Moxon made an admirable Francis Levison, his villainy being artistically presented. Mr. Guy Hastings was a manly Richard Hare; whilst Miss Ena Ferry sympathetically supported the part of Barbara Hare. A lot of fun was occasioned by Miss Blanche Stanley as Miss Carlyle and Mr. Walter Russell as John Dill, the quaint make-up and frank expressions of the former appealing to the risible faculties of the audience. As Joyce and Wilson, the servants, Miss Beatrice Bell and Miss L. Crampton did well; and Miss Dora Crisp made a pathetic figure as the dying child Willie. Miss Amy Peters (Susanne) and Mr. Albert Johnston (the detective) should also be mentioned. The piece was produced under the management of Mr. B. A. Meyer, and the dresses and accessories left little to be desired; but the change of scenes might have been more expeditiously performed.

GRAND THEATRE, ISLINGTON.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, in Five Acts, by Henry Arthur Jones, entitled
"THE SILVER KING."

After a long interval, the patrons of the Grand have an opportunity of renewing their acquaintance with this ever-popular drama, Messrs. G. M. Polini and Austin Melford's company presenting it. The large audience were soon completely engrossed in the play—a tribute to the excellent development of the plot and the clever character studies that are introduced. Mr. Herbert Ford as Wilfred Denver submitted a portrayal of great merit, completely in accord with the established traditions of the part. Mr. Austin Melford himself (though not billed), owing to the unfortunate indisposition of Mr. Osman, appeared as Combe and as Parkyn. In the first rôle a capital study was the result, grimly humorous; while as Mr. Parkyn he extracted far more than the regulation amount of humour, the scene proceeding to the accompaniment of unbounded laughter. Mr. Tom Paulton as the benevolent Jaikes was quite admirable, and speedily enlisted the sympathy of the audience; Mr. Charles Baird as Captain Skinner was clever in the heavy rôle, the cool, callous nature of the man being well depicted; Mr. Claude Fernon was commendable as the foolish clerk Corket; Mr. Arthur J. Rooke as Baxter gave a neat study of the detective; and Messrs. S. Burgham, Hatchway, and Manfree were acceptable in small parts. Miss Victoria Addison was sympathetic as the unfortunate Mrs. Denver, and made a good impression; Miss Violet Holland enacted the small part of Mrs. Skinner satisfactorily; Miss Margaret Rooke as Susi was good in a part of no importance; Miss Jessie Apted as Cissie and Master Eric Dene as Ned were natural as the children. A word is due to Mr. Charles H. Fenton for his performance as Cripps, and the remaining parts were all in good hands. The scenery and mounting are satisfactory, and the drama was received with enthusiasm. Mr. Burton is the general-manager of the company.

THE PAVILION.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Historical Opera, in Four Acts, by Dr. Zaifert, entitled
"KING FLORODUS."

Standing-room was at a premium on Monday night at the Pavilion, when the Jewish Operatic and Dramatic Company presented, for the first time, Dr. Zaifert's historical opera of King Florodus, which was received by an enthusiastic audience, who, by hearty and continued applause, testified their appreciation of a careful and intelligent interpretation. The piece is well mounted, and is most interesting, some of the scenes being exceedingly powerful, while the members of the company are all well suited to their parts. The performance went with commendable smoothness, due largely to the united efforts of Mr. Joseph Fineberg, the stage-manager, and Professor F. Staub, the musical director, both of whom must be complimented for the successful results achieved. Generous recognition was given to Mr. S. Feinman for his portrayal of Hurdus, which was a carefully-studied representation, being marked by much breadth of treatment. As Miriam, Mme. J. Kayzer once more proved herself a valuable acquisition; the varying phases of the part were given with subtlety and skill, worthy of unqualified praise. Miss R. Bryh was admirable as Tomor, all her scenes being invested with the requisite sparkle and vivacity; while Mme. Goldstein adequately impersonated Diana. The vocal and dramatic abilities of Mr. J. Goldsmith met with a well-deserved reception for his presentment of Avadia; and Mr. N. Hamburger was extremely good as Azricom. Mme. Berman displayed talent of a very high order as Schleimis; and Mme. Bloom was seen to advantage as Zole. Mr. S. Schilling was easy and natural, and gave a thoroughly appreciable rendering of Tarchus, which he played in splendid style. Excellent performances have been given during the week of Against His Father's Will, Eve, Uriel Acosta, and Moshka and Mishka.

LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, entitled,
"AT DUTY'S CALL."

Though Mr. John Gerant, who is at the head of the excellent company performing at the Lyric this week, has played the part of Harold Allison nearly 2,000 times, and probably many of the members of the audience on Monday night had seen the drama before, yet he was greeted with hearty and evidently sincere enthusiasm. Mr. Harry Scott, who acts the part of Captain George Allison, makes a vigorously gallant hero. As Dora Drummond, Miss Lily Crammonde is highly successful; Mr. Ernest St. John gives a lifelike impersonation of General Gordon, and his make-up as the hero of Khartoum is admirable. Mr. Harry Ugar as Terry O'Hallaron, an Irish servant, is extremely amusing; and he is well supported by Miss Eva Belle as Mary, the maid. A clever character-sketch is given by Miss Beatrice Western as the slave girl Salema; Mr. Walter P. Carr makes a dashing and manly Jack Spencer; an amusing rôle is that of Joey Trott, an overgrown drummer-boy, whose clothes are too small for him. This part is creditably played by Mr Ivan Mavis. Others who rightly deserve praise are Mr. J. F. Lewis as Abdullah, Gordon's servant; Mr. Harry Austin as Sergeant O'Rell; Miss Hettie Poplin as Nurse Slater; and Miss Emily Cleveland as Merrua.

CORONET THEATRE.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, by John Rutherford, entitled
"THE BREED OF THE TRESHAMS."

A crowded and delighted house welcomed Mr. Martin Harvey back to London on Monday, and testified to their appreciation by continuous applause and recalls innumerable. At the fall of the curtain the audience were so insistent that at length Mr. Harvey complied with their request in a few well-chosen words: "On behalf of Miss de Silva, my company, and myself, I thank you for the honour you have conferred on me in asking for a speech. All I have to say is, to express my gratitude for the very cordial way in which you have received us on our return home, and to hope that we shall always merit your approbation."

It is just about two years since Mr. Martin Harvey appeared here in his notable and artistic impersonation of "Rat" Reresby, and the excitement and glamour of the rôle, allied to its pathos and painful probing of the emotions, always with a grim humour lurking in the background, have lost none of their vivid intensity and realism. It is a magnificent rendering of a part which fits him like a glove. Half devil, half saint, dreamy, romantic, daring, and crafty, but, above all, loyal and innately honest, it is a character which irresistably appeals to the imagination and tugs at the heart-strings. Miss N. de Silva gives a splendid silhouette of character as the boy Batty, and very touching is his devotion to the "Rat." Mr. Charles Glenny is admirable in his display of craven cowardice and dastardly treachery as the pharisaical and traitorous Colonel the Hon. Clement Hungerford, and he certainly earns the execration of the audience in his low-down portrayal of the renegade officer. Mr. Alfred Mansfield as the saturnine scoundrel Captain Rashleigh and Mr. Philip Hewland as the craven cur Captain Stanhope, also Mr. George Cooke as the truculent scoundrel Corporal Lumsford and Mr. Leslie Palmer as Corporal Saxton, do excellent work in the depiction of different types of villainy and ruffianism. Miss Coleridge acts with winsome earnestness and sincerity as the simple and trusting Margaret Hungerford; and Miss Madge Fabian is a graceful exponent of the part of Mrs. Bagshaw. Mr. Albert E. Rayner is uncommonly good in the fine part of Colonel Sir Henry Curwen; Mr. Charles J. Cameron is duly impressive as the stern relentless Viscount Dorsington; Mr. Leonard Craske acts with verve and ability as Cornet the Hon. Francis Tresham; and other minor rôles are capitally rendered. Mr. Frank B. O'Neill acts as business-manager, Mr. Alfred Rivers as stage-manager, and Mr. Clemens Franckenstein as musical director for Mr. Martin Harvey.

NEW PRINCE'S THEATRE, POPLAR.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, by J. A. Campbell, entitled
"THE SIN OF HER CHILDHOOD."

This drama serves as an excellent foil to the musical comedy we had last week. Variety is charming, and plenty of it is provided at Mr. Sounes' popular playhouse. The Sin of Her Childhood contains many interesting situations, and it is an exceptionally strong drama. Miss Jennie Douglas-Hicks ably acts the rôle of Maria Haysel; and as Mary Haysel Miss Mary Fulton does good work. Miss Nellie Hook is exceedingly good as Eliza Muggins; and the youthful Ivy Rocheforte displays great cleverness as Eric Dugdale. Little Dott Moss is full of life and vivacity as Hannah Spry, her singing, dancing, and banjo solos winning her great applause. As Stephen Haysel Mr. Austin Milroy shows great force and earnestness; and Mr. Charles Fancourt as the Rev. Alan Grey is decidedly good. As Captain John Thornton, Mr. Wordley Hulse could scarcely be bettered; and the Barney O'Reilly of Mr. Hugh Brady is decidedly Irish, and full of native wit and humour. The play is capitally staged, and the whole production reflects great credit on all concerned.

GRAND, FULHAM.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Play, in Four Acts, by Fred Melville, entitled
"THE BEAST AND THE BEAUTY."

This, the last week before the closing of the theatre in preparation for the annual pantomime, has been occupied by a visit of F. Melville's company, in his latest production, The Beast and the Beauty. There are some capable players in the cast, and they do their work well. Mr. W. S. Hartford played the young rake, Jack Barrymore, "the Beast." He is best in his more serious moments, in which he acted with uncommon tenderness and power, and a certain personal charm that made his performance singularly pleasing. In the rôle of a boxer, too, he acquitted himself very well. Mr. W. E. Passmore was successful as the stern parent, the Earl of Loman, and showed some power. Mr. Bernard Mervyn made an admirable villain as Henry Denver, playing it quietly and yet forcefully. As Ned Samson, the fighting man, Mr. Eric Campbell was very good, with his splendid physique, the part suiting him down to the ground. His acting was full of spirit. Mr. Harry Talbot raised many a laugh as Tom Chicken, an aspiring boxer of meagre proportions; and Mr. Harry Wimpenny was effective as the ruffian, Dick Soanes. The fighting men, Messrs. Ruggles, Franks, James Neal, Will Costa, and Howard, all played their parts manfully, and showed their skill with the gloves. Miss Mamie Rendle was humorous as Mimi; and Miss Daisy Gwynne was a capable representative of Delilah Vane, acting with all the necessary seductiveness. Miss Alice Bowes as the ingénue "Beauty" showed great charm and sincerity.

THE STANDARD.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Romantic Drama, in Four Acts, by Frank M. Thorne, entitled
"NAPOLEON THE GREAT."

A highly meritorious performance of this play is this week being given at the Standard by the excellent stock company engaged there. Every possible detail in the mounting and staging has been well attended to, and the production is a conspicuous success. Mr. Roy Redgrave plays with admirable firmness and decided power as Napoleon. His make-up is good, and he scores an undeniable success. Mr. J. C. Aubrey plays the part of Col. Lavarennes with the necessary amount of villainy, and is well deserving of high praise; as Col. Jules Meuron, Mr. Wingold Lawrence supplies a careful and clever study; Mr. John Nolan suitably acts the rôle of Paul Laczinska; and Mr. Roy Byford proves of great service, and is wonderfully good as the bombastic Sergeant Choupin. As the Minister of Police, Monsieur Fouche, Mr. Jack Denton is well placed; whilst Mr. Austin Melford, jun., is all that can be desired as Claude of the Old Guard. The lighter scenes in the drama are capitally handled by Mr. Willie Reid as Pierre Pomponnet, and Miss Marie Kildare as Marcelle Choupin. The combined efforts of these two raise many a hearty laugh, and praise is due to them for their able performance. Miss Jessie Winter is a charming Mlle. Leonie Marboeuf, and plays her part with considerable pathos and feeling; Miss Polly Marsh contributes a humorous delineation of Mere Dumont; the Marie Walewska of Miss Hilda Beverley is a clever piece of work, indeed she deserves to be congratulated upon a sterling impersonation of a part containing many difficulties. The minor characters are ably supported by other members of the company.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, by Fredk. S. Jennings and W. P. Sheen, entitled
"WHY WOMAN SINS."

In Why Woman Sins we have a dramatic dish exactly suitable to the appetite of a popular audience. The piece contains an abundance of thrilling incidents, and other ingredients that go to the satisfactory making of a popular sensational melodrama. Mr. Samuel James's company gives an interpretation of the piece which merits warm praise. Mr. John D. Saunders makes a spirited hero of Lieutenant Harry Maxwell; Mr. Jackson Hayes is a duly villainous Captain Herbert Carlton; Mr. George Ellis supplies a good sketch of the dude, Cecil Spencer; Jim Rainbird is excellently rendered by Mr. Alec Forbes; and Mr. A. P. Kay makes a humorous Sam Spavins, causing abundant amusement, and singing a clever topical song. Mr. Edwin Wilde does all that is possible with the rôle of Oliver Desmond; Miss Hilda Baynton acts with grace and tenderness as Nell Desmond; Miss May Seton is pert and amusing as the maid, Nancy Nibble; Miss Gertrude Netterville supplies a powerful character-sketch of Ida Valette; and Miss Bertha Baker is pathetic as the unfortunate waif Jack Smith.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, in Five Acts, by G. Carlton Wallace, entitled
"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH."

For the close of the season, Mr. J. M. East has this week booked Messrs. Dottridge, Longden and Livesey's company in The Village Blacksmith, and a very strong finale it proves to be. Mr. Sam Livesey, in the title-rôle, is responsible for a forcible and convincing portrayal, his fine presence and great dramatic gifts are seen to great advantage. Miss Maggie Edwards makes an unaffected and eminently successful heroine as Mrs. Strong. Harry Strong, the child, as played by Miss Bertha Hanbury, is a bright and manly little fellow, who wins his way to all hearts. Mr. Joseph Carter makes Captain Leo the personification of gentlemanly blackguardism in appearance and gesture. Mr. Edwin Maydew gives a clever reading of Lucas Marlow, his accomplice; Mr. Thomas E. Marshall and Mrs. T. C. Livesey submit clever character-sketches as a travelling tinker and his wife; Mr. George V. Campbell as Billy Twigg, a country yokel, causes much amusement; he adopts a broad country accent which in a lengthy part he cleverly maintains. Mr. George Wilton is effective as St. John Harman, a music hall manager; Miss Cassie Le Grande does good work in the really pathetic character of Ruth Parkins; Miss Edith Giddens is entirely happy as Martha Mopps; Mr. Halstead does well as the landlord of the "King's Arms"; Mr. Gus Ratcliffe as Inspector Grant, Mr. S. Bale as a detective, Mr. E. Morris as P.c. Wilkins, Mr. A. Walker as Humpy Tom, and Mr. Bert Butler as a servant all do good work. The staging and general effects of the piece are excellent, such scenes as the Village Smithy—very pretty—and the stage of the Empire Music Hall show the greatest attention to detail. Mr. R. A. Neville is the courteous acting-manager here.

THE TERRISS.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, by F. A. Scudamore, entitled,
"SETTLING DAY."

This week the talented stock company gives an excellent representation of the above drama, by the late F. A. Scudamore. It proves much to the taste of audiences here, and may rank among the list of the author's successful productions. The leading part in the play is that of Jesse Lugg, a pauper, who is afterwards made a millionaire. The rôle is excellently played by Mr. John Sargent, who is at times grimly humorous, and on some occasions pathetic. Mr. Sargent has not been seen to better advantage in any character during the stock season. Mr. Ashley Page is dashing and earnest as Arnold Avondale, but the part affords him somewhat limited opportunities. Miss Marion Denvil acts with vivacity and at times pathos as Winifred May; Miss Mattie Everett is coy and amusing as the artful music hall artist, Lottie Lark; and Mr. C. A. Chandler makes the most of the part of Lord Grey Washington. Mr. Johnny Chippendale is humorous as the love-stricken barber, Rufus Nubb; Mr. Alfred Harding is excellent as the villain, Jabez Wentworth; and Montagu Morgan is played with much cleverness by Mr. Fred Yarnold. Mr. Alfred Hicks as Philip Templeton, Miss Georgie de Lara as Lady Florence Dovecott, Miss Maggie Lindsay as Mrs. Lark, and Mr. Frank R. Robertson as Sir Razzle Prosser all contribute to the success. The scenery and effects are first-class. Special mention may be made of the illuminated fête in the first act.

BROADWAY THEATRE, S.E.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Play, in Four Acts, by Dion Boucicault, entitled
"THE SHAUGHRAUN."

This famous Irish drama by the late Dion Boucicault was revived here on Monday by a capable company of experienced artists under the management of Mr. J. M. East, whose good work is too well known to need more than a passing word here. Suffice it to say that the play went smoothly and briskly from start to finish. Mr. Albert Ward was well placed as Captain Molyneux, and did full justice to the part; Mr. W. Felton played Robert Ffolliott with care and earnestness; Mr. H. Crane gave an excellent interpretation of the character of the lovable old priest, Father Doolan; Mr. Henry Hatchman presented Corry Kinchela boldly and characteristically; Mr. J. P. Dryden was seen at his best—which is very good indeed—as Harvey Duff; Mr. Gus Wheatman was an enormously popular Conn, the typical Irish boy; Mr. Roberts a good Sergeant Jones of the 41st; and a word of praise must be given to Mr. Edward Sheedy, who did all that was possible with the part of Sullivan; and the same must be recorded of Mr. E. Godfrey as Reilly, Mr. J. Murphy as Mangan, Mr. Ellis as Doyle, and Mr. P. Wells as Donovan. Miss Kathleen Russell was a charming Claire Ffolliott, and Miss Daisy Murch a pathetic and attractive Arte O'Neal, Miss Agnes Paulton being a delightful Moya. Mrs. Calhaem was very amusing as Mrs. O'Kelly, the mother of Conn, and gave an impersonation replete with character and cleverness; and Miss Daisy Marshall as Bridget, and Miss De la Rue as Nancy Malone played the two Keeners capitally.

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Dec. 10, the Play, in Four Acts, by Paul Kester and Charles Major, entitled
"DOROTHY O' THE HALL."

Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry received quite an ovation at the Borough Theatre on Monday night where they commenced a week's engagement with their company in Dorothy o' the Hall. Many times at the conclusion of each act did the curtain have to be raised to the clamorous demands of the large audience present, and their splendid reception testified to the great appreciation of their histrionic ability. Miss Julia Neilsen is well suited in the part of Dorothy Vernon. In the comedy scenes she imparts those deft touches of sly humour and smart repartee for which she is so famous, and in the love passages she plays with all the tenderness necessary, making the wayward, impulsive girl a truly delightful characterisation. In Mr. Fred Terry is found a handsome and manly hero as Sir John Manners, and he bears himself with all the ease, fluency, and distinction required for so important a part. Miss Miriam Lewes contributes an extremely clever portraiture of the vain Queen Elizabeth; and Lilias Waldegrave is no less successful in her delineation of the deposed Mary Stuart Queen of Scotland. A very interesting and well-defined sketch of the dwarf Perkins comes from Mr. Horace Hodges; and Mr. Jerrold Robertshaw scores heavily as the traitorous Sir Malcolm Vernon. Mr. Frederick Groves admirably represents the Earl of Rutland; Mr. J. Carter-Edwards is seen to advantage as the autocratic Sir George Vernon; and Mr. D. J. Williams makes the most of his opportunities as Lord Burleigh. Mr. Malcolm Cherry is well placed as Sir William St. Loe, and Mr. W. A. Haines renders good service as Will Dawson. Miss Claire Pauncefort contributes a performance of much value as Lady Vernon, and Miss Mary Mackenzie plays brightly as Jenny Faxton. Minor parts are carefully handled, and the play is sumptuously mounted and dressed.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Drama, in Four Acts, by Frank E. Thorpe, entitled
"HER ONE GREAT SIN."

Miss Blanche St. Albans and Mr. J. Leicester Jackson's company is this week paying a return visit to the Stratford Theatre Royal with this popular piece, which is meeting with much success. Miss Lydia Donovan in the important rôle of Grace Warhurst plays with skill and tact, and enlists the sympathies of the audience throughout. Mr. John Cecil contributes a powerful performance as Ruben Warhurst, and an incisive portraiture of the villainous Arnold Thornhill comes from Mr. C. Quinton Fulford. Mr. Charles E. Lambert depicts Dan Humble exceedingly well; a sound performance as Jack Humble is contributed by Mr. Arnold B. Ford; and Mr. Fred Hudson provides plenty of mirth as Jerry Jumble. Miss Louie Walton gives a capital sketch of Bet Hundle; Miss Nellie Lambert is a pleasing Nancy Winpenny; Miss Phyllis Damian is a great favourite as the flower-seller, Charlie; and Miss Maudie Lambert shows much promise as Little Gracie. Other parts are all intelligently played, and the piece is well mounted.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, Dec. 10, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Arthur Shirley and Sutton Vane, entitled
"THE SPIDER AND THE FLY."

Very attractive fare is provided by Mr. Bailey this week for his patrons, in the shape of Messrs. Shirley and Vane's play, The Spider and the Fly, which is full of those exciting episodes so dearly loved by Marylebone playgoers. Mr. Stanley S. Gordon is pathetic and piteous as Cyril Girdlestone; Mr. H. C. Lanceley tenderly portrays the Rev. Mr. McAllister; Mr. Ellis J. Preston is full of fire and energy as the rascally Welby Girdlestone; Mr. Fred Terris is indisputably successful as Romulus Roe; Mr. Charles A. Preece cuts a comical figure as Remus Roe; and Mr. Frederick Ross is responsible for a powerful and well-sustained embodiment of David Strong. Miss Nina Vaughton enacts Edith McAllister in such a realistic style as to fairly hold her audience spellbound; Miss Lucy Murray is kindly and homely as Molly Blake; Miss Marjorie May is precociously sprightly as Flipps; Miss Ada Palmer gives a characteristic representation of Jane Ellen Scriver; whilst Miss Amy Venimore sustains the rôle of the adventuress, Stella Grey, with so much fervour and realism as to quickly secure the disapprobation of the susceptible "gods." The play is well mounted and staged, Mr. Arthur H. Hill being the acting-manager for Messrs. Carpenter and Cooper.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
the Comedy, entitled
"DAVID GARRICK."

A very good representation of this evergreen comedy is being given at the Kingston playhouse this week. The title-rôle is filled by Mr. Walter Maclean, who makes a most creditable appearance in the part. Violet Gresham is portrayed charmingly by Miss Evelyn Mills; and a particularly fine piece of acting is given by Mr. W. T. Ford as Alderman Gresham. Other characters are ably filled by Mr. J. H. Brewer as Mr. Rumbelow, Mr. Burges Barrett as Mr. Sowerberry, Mr. C. Lionel Brocknor as Mr. Simpkins, Miss Clara Nicholls as Mrs. Rubelow, Miss Lily Edmonds as Miss Selina Sowerberry, and Mr. R. P. Hamilton as the Hon. Tom Tallyhaut. The comedy is prefaced by the comedietta Mrs. Malone's Honeymoon, in which the parts are taken by Miss Clara Nicholls, Miss Lily Edmonds, Mr. L. C. Brocknor, and Mr. Burges Barrett. To-night the theatre closes for a week for rehearsals for the pantomime Bluebeard.

THEATRICALS IN BEDFORD-STREET.

In the little studio of the Ben Greet Academy, situated in an upper storey of a house in Bedford-street, a very painstaking performance of Pygmalion and Galatea was given on Wednesday afternoon. The story and dialogue of Mr. W. S. Gilbert's clever mythological comedy are well adapted to bring into prominence the gifts of its exponents, and the performance revealed in most cases a decided aptitude for the dramatic art and carefully cultivated methods. Mr. Courtney gave a well-studied reading of Pygmalion, and though his delivery was unimpassioned, he was at all times distinct, and played with earnestness. A prepossessing and sweetly pathetic Galatea was found in Miss Marjorie Villis, who, however, in endeavouring to preserve a plaintive tone, became occasionally indistinct. She played prettily, and engaged the close attention of the audience throughout. An admirable embodiment of Daphne, the wife of Chrysos, was given by Miss Stella Cedron, who made a handsome appearance in the picturesque costume, which admirably became her tall figure. Miss Cedron has an imperious manner and a flashing eye, which were of inestimable value to the part, though her voice—probably on account of the severity of the weather—seemed a little wanting in flexibility; but she acted with a keen sense of humour, and, in contrast with most of her companions, seemed to realise the necessity of action, even when not engaged in speaking. A worthy coadjutor was furnished in Mr. Frederic, who, as Chrysos, revealed unmistakable talents as a comedian. His make-up as the parvenu art-patron was exceptionally good, and the clever lines, uttered with droll inflection, were ever an occasion of mirth. High praise must also be given to Miss Margaret Wiley, who had an intelligent appreciation of the part of Cynisca, and spoke with excellent elocution. Mr. Porter made the short scene of Leucippus even more brief by the rapid manner in which he took it, but he bore himself with true martial dignity, and looked the part to perfection. A graceful, though colourless, rendering of Myrine was given by Miss Dorothy Drewe; and Misses Maiva Herne and Cicely Oates, as slaves, helped creditably towards the effect of a performance that gave great enjoyment.

The name of the author of The Jungle is omitted from the programme. Possibly he is not very proud of his work. The new play, produced at the Dalston Theatre on Monday evening, is unquestionably crude and unsatisfactory as a whole; but its weak points are in some degree redeemed by a powerful last act. As this is the predominant feature of the drama, it deserves first mention. The scene is the laboratory of Dr. Whitmarsh, commonly known as the "mad doctor." He has become a physical wreck through hard drinking, and his past has been an unhappy one. His wife, Barbara, left him some years ago, to join Sir Martin Gerard, the leader of a band of bank robbers, who, in order to get the husband out of the way, secretly placed some stolen banknotes in his pocket, and then gave information to the police, resulting in Whitmarsh's arrest and conviction. While attending a dying convict he becomes possessed of a letter which is evidence of the rascality of Martin Gerard, who is naturally extremely anxious to obtain possession of this compromising document. Barbara pays a visit to her husband's home, and makes an unsuccessful search for the letter. Here Jacob finds her on his return, and the scene which follows is intense and thrilling. The false-hearted woman pretends that she is repentant, and wishes to live with her husband again. But Jacob, drunkard as he is, is on his guard, and puts her to the test by snatching off her hat and asking her to remain with him that night. This proposal does not suit Barbara's plans at all, for she has arranged to accompany her paramour to France. Then Jacob plays a trick upon his wife. He agrees to give her the paper she has asked him for, and hands her an envelope. Believing that she has obtained her object, the woman turns upon him savagely, asserting with fierce emphasis that she never loved him, but only married him for his money—he is a sot and a fool. In reply he asks her to open the envelope, and she finds a blank sheet of paper. She has been trapped. Cursing him in the strongest possible terms, she flies from the room. Jacob has another visitor, Martin Gerard, who, however, finds the "mad doctor" in a dangerous mood. Jacob has resolved to have his revenge and the life of the man who has destroyed his happiness. He commits suicide, but in such a manner that Gerard is arrested on the charge of being his murderer.

The story opens with an attempted bank robbery at Durban, organised by Martin Gerard, and arranged to be carried out by him and his gang. Cyprian Randal, the manager of the bank, has secretly wedded Jessie, the daughter of Simon Thyme, the wealthy banker, and he promises to return to the premises at a late hour of the evening. He does so, and discovers the robbers at work. He is felled to the ground, two of the gang are taken into custody by the police, but the leader, Martin Gerard, escapes, and, returning, denounces the unconscious manager as one of the thieves. Jessie rushes forward and explains the reason of Cyprian's presence at the bank, and declares that he is her husband.

We next meet the hero of the story in Castaway Jail, he having been convicted of complicity in the bank robbery. The prison is an extraordinary establishment, inasmuch as the convicts seem to be able to quit their cell just when they please, and the warders are allowed to crack silly jokes with the Governor. In one of the cells lies Nathan Shirer, a member of Gerard's gang, dying of jungle fever, who makes a confession implicating the leader. Left alone with the dead body, Cyprian removes it into another cell, and takes its place on the stretcher. Two of the convicts throw the supposed dead body into the sea, and, dodging the sharks, Cyprian swims ashore and escapes into the jungle, where he and his wife meet with sundry exciting adventures. Martin Gerard and the Governor of the jail are in hot pursuit, but Cyprian, armed with a revolver, proves more than a match for them. Later, Gerard, who has pestered Jessie all through with his odious attentions, finds her alone, and behaves like the brute he is; but Jessie makes her escape on the back of an elephant, which opportunely is making its ponderous way through the jungle. Though an original device for getting the heroine out of a tight place, it did not prove very effective on Monday night, and the audience were left wondering how the half-fainting girl managed to mount the huge beast. In the last act, after the scene already mentioned, Cyprian's innocence is proved, and all ends happily for hero and heroine.

That well-known actor, Mr. C. W. Somerset, unfortunately does not get his opportunity until the last act. But here his impersonation of Jacob Whitmarsh, "the mad doctor," was an admirably impressive piece of acting. The physical ravages caused by drink were realistically indicated, and the sardonic manner in the presence of his wife and of her lover was cleverly assumed. High praise is also due to Miss Winnifred Pearson for her artistic rendering of Barbara, the intensity and passion shown by the desperate woman being depicted with remarkable ability and truth. Mr. Alexander Bradley played the villain, Sir Martin Gerard, on conventional but quite effective lines. Mr. John Hood portrayed with sincerity and earnestness the part of the hero, Cyprian Randal; and was ably supported by Miss Ada Homer as the heroine. Mr. Sydney Sarl gave a graphic and telling sketch of Nathan Shirer, the long death-scene in the prison being well acted. Mr. George Barran was satisfactory as Governor Beaumont; and Mr. Lawrence Stevenson scored as Ikey Lemon, a young thief, who being brought under the good influence of Cyprian, becomes a reformed character. Mr. Fred Lake was fairly amusing as Ossage, a comic policeman; Mr. R. E. Treeves did well as Obadiah, an old black servant; Mr. Albert Bernard carefully embodied Simon Thyme; Mr. Erric Terry and Mr. Ping Watson introduced some humour into their respective portrayals of a couple of convicts; other minor parts being assigned to Messrs. Harold Cotter, Mark Daly, J. Templeton, Thos. Young, Mrs. K. Palmer, and Miss Olive Gray. The new play was excellently staged, and the scenery, from the brushes of Messrs. Edward Nicholls, Julian Hicks, and Richard Douglass, gave complete satisfaction. Special music was composed by Mr. Denham Harrison.

MR. PERCY ASHDOWN writes:—"Now that I am again able to use my right hand and to resume work, may I ask you to allow me, through the medium of your columns, to sincerely thank all those friends in the profession who have shown me so much kindness during my recent illness (rheumatic gout)."

"THE LIGHT ETERNAL," a play in four acts, by Martin V. Merle, was produced for copyright purposes at the Adelphi Theatre on Monday.

"TODDLES" AT WYNDHAM'S.

Toddles, on his first appearance at the Duke of York's Theatre on Sept. 3 last, created something of a mild sensation. Mrs. Grundy, who had been but little exercised by the French plays at the Royalty in July, became quite minatory at afternoon at-homes concerning the actor representing the protagonist of a farce playing one whole act in pyjamas. But Brixton and Bayswater for once saw the real fun of the whole concoction, winked at the absurd prudishness of the dear old lady, and crowded the Duke of York's to applaud and laugh at Mr. Cyril Maude. The popular actor and his company have now gone round the corner to Wyndham's, where, on Monday night, they had the heartiest of welcomes from a crowded house giving full reign to expressions of enjoyment. An assured success—in which category we may place the clever and humorous adaptation of Triplepatte—has a magnetic influence on the acting, and the presentation of the farce is smarter, droller, and more enjoyable than ever.

The gaiety of the Mairie scene, which went somewhat slow on the opening night, has been well worked up, and the acting, which shows observation, is instinct with humour. Miss Gertrude Kingston and Miss Lottie Venne play admirably into each other's hands, the former as Lady Dover, a sharp, up-to-date representative of the smart set, and the latter as Mrs. Joblyn, an amiable parvenue, whose attempts at being quite "correct," are quite in the best vein of refined humour. Mr. Cyril Maude's Toddles is one of the most genuinely comic creations to be seen at present on the London stage, and it is immensely to his credit that he does not give way to exaggeration or overemphasis. An actor with less delicacy or refinement would entirely spoil the second act, wherein Mr. Maude is simply delightful in his capacity for inertness. Mr. Kenneth Douglas as Boolby is active and interesting in a part that has little opportunity; there are charm, and not a little minauderie in the rendering of Constance Joblyn by Miss Alice Crawford; and nothing in the piece is richer in its suggestions of fun than Mr. Alfred Bishop's elder Joblyn. Miss Helen Ferrers is irreproachable as the Countess de Chambry; Miss Nancy Price's Mrs. Bowler is acute in its perception of the worldliness of the character; Mr. Ernest Cosham's Mayor is an impersonation quite excellent in its way; Mr. Ivo Dawson's Dr. Baird is blessed with a perfect "bedside manner"; Miss Beatrice Terry is effective in the small part of the maid at the spring; and Miss Madge Titheradge's Cicely lacks nothing of charm.

In the opening piece, The Scapegrace, Miss Madge Titheradge now plays the title-part, created by Miss Pauline Chase, who has departed to embody Peter Pan. Miss Titheradge is a clever young actress, whose gesture play expresses the varying emotions of the character. The other members of the cast have much improved their original renderings.

MR. BLAKE ADAMS

AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE, SHEFFIELD. "BEAUTY AND THE BARGE" AT THE LYCEUM.

Cap'n Barley, of the Heart and Hand, is back again at the Lyceum Theatre, giving Sheffield another week of laughter. Cap'n Barley promises to rival Charley's Aunt. He improves on acquaintance. The old bargee is one of the best of the canal characters Mr. W. W. Jacobs has sketched. But even Mr. Jacobs would admit that the success of the character, so far as the stage representation goes, is mainly due to Mr. Blake Adams. Playwright and manager made a happy hit when they found so clever a Cap'n. Mr. Blake Adams has, in the highest degree, the merit of never-failing freshness. One does not see the actor; one forgets even Mr. Blake Adams. It is only Cap'n Barley who is seen—as fresh and original and captivating as when he first skipped on to the stage and encountered poor old John Dibbs. So long as Mr. Blake Adams is skipper of the 'Art and 'And, Beauty and the Barge ought never to cease sailing.—Sheffield Daily Telegraph, Dec. 11.

ACTRESSES' HAT COMPETITION.

A novel competition was held last month at the Modern Club, in Paris, when a "grand concours de chapeaux," or competition of hats, took place. No less than one hundred and fifty of the smartest women in Paris, comprising the most fashionable French actresses, took part in the contest, and the jury who adjudged the winners were three eminent French painters, namely, M. Carrier Belleuse, M. Gervoise, and M. Jean Berot.

The first prize, which consisted of silver plate to the value of £50, was awarded to Mme. Fontana, of the Paris Vaudeville. Mme. Fontana's hat was designed and made by Lewis, of 210, Regent-street, and Paris. The brim was composed of silver cloth trimmed with black tulle, with white spots, the crown consisting of three large roses made in tulle colours—pale blue, pink, mauve and grey—with a steel rose in the centre. The hat was embellished by three feathers, in pale blue, pink, and grey.

The second and third prizes were also given to creations of the Maison Lewis. Mlle. Carlier, of the Théâtre Porte St. Martin, who came second, wore a satin hat of Louis XVI. style, with velvet crown, satin brim, and four tips on right. Mme. Lutz, of the Parisiana, won the third prize with a pink hat trimmed with pink tulle and uncurled pink feathers.

Out of the fourteen prize-winning hats, eleven were the work of Lewis, and the names of the successful actresses who wore confections made by the famous firm referred to are as follows:—Mme. Riquier (Gymnase), Mme. Orsère (Antoine), Mme. Grandval (Porte St. Martin), Mme. Marion de Lorme (Folies Bergères), Mme. Harloff (Folies Bergères), Mme. Terence (Folies Bergères), Mme Ling (Théâtre Mathurin), Mlle. Martineau (Théâtre Odéon).

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

MR. TOM CRAVEN.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

Mr. Tom Craven produced his first play when he was fifteen. It was called All Lost, and was produced at Sadler's Wells under the management of the late Matt Robson. Mr. Craven admits that it was scarcely what would be called an artistic and financial success; but, at any rate, it helped to introduce him to the stage, though, for the matter of that, it would seem that he required little introduction when the name of his father is remembered. After various experiences, literary and theatrical, Miss Sarah Thorne engaged him, at a salary of 15s. a week, for "utility," and to use his pen in the work of modernising some of the old plays in her répertoire. It is to Miss Thorne that he attributes his knowledge of the legitimate drama. There is scarcely a play of Shakespeare's or of any of the other famous works in which he has not appeared. Leaving Miss Thorne, he joined another company, but, sad to relate, he couldn't get his salary, and for eight weeks his victuals were of the starvation order. His father, who had always set his face against the young man embarking upon a stage career, was glad enough to hear that the said young man was willing at last to follow his sire's advice, and Mr. Craven entered the service of the London Joint Stock Bank. But, after all, his theatrical inclination proved too strong, and within a comparatively short time he accepted an acting-managership under Mr. Fred Gould, who was then running Hermann Merivale's drama, All for Her, and The Black Flag, by Henry Petitt. Subsequently

MR. TOM CRAVEN.

Mr. Craven toured a piece of his own, The Stowaway, previously produced and written during his banking days. This play he sold to a well-known manager for £30, and the present owner, we are informed, has netted thousands by it. The author sold the American rights for another £30 to the late Mr. Jake Litt, who some years before his death acknowledged that he had amassed a large fortune out of the play.

"Then," says Mr. Craven, "I turned out drama like hot cakes. I have written about forty plays, many of which, I am proud to think, are still well remembered owing to their popularity. Among these were The Ballad Singer, The Fugitive, The Miser's Will, Time the Avenger, Half-mast High, The White Star, and The Village Forge. I have played in various companies in London and the provinces, and for over fifteen years was my own manager. I have also served most of the principal pantomime producers, from Sir Augustus Harris downwards, as principal comedian. Likewise have I undertaken the duties of resident-manager. I opened the Grand Theatre, Croydon, in 1895 with Mr. Beerbohm Tree, and retained the management of that playhouse until it was sold to Mr. George Edwardes. A little later it occurred to me that, as there was a slump in theatrical work, I would enter the variety lists, and I was engaged by Mr. George Adney Payne for the Tivoli, Oxford, Canterbury, and Paragon, doing single turns and monologues. Then I was engaged by the late Charles Morton for the Palace Theatre, where I introduced the song 'Dear reader,' written and composed by myself."

FRENCH ACTRESSES' HAT COMPETITION.

Finding, however, that he had more literary work to do than he could undertake while playing in the music halls, Mr. Craven relinquished the footlights for the desk, intending to stick to his pen for the future. But, apparently, the excitement of the stage is not a thing to be looked upon lightly, and lonesome and quiet evenings are not to be tolerated by the man who has lived among the whirl, the gaiety, the life, the gilt, and the glitter of the stage. "There is a chance," thought Mr. Craven, "for tabloid dramas and farces; and it was not long before I started off with a version of Milky White, which carried me up to the time that I produced The Lady in Red, which has been seen at various London music halls lately."

Presently Mr. Craven joined forces with Mr. Will Evans, and the two gentlemen have arranged to produce and tour several sketches during the next few months.

In his delightfully cosy and well-appointed house at Brixton-hill, Mr. Craven showed us many mementoes of famous literary, artistic, political, and theatrical people. Some of them are exceedingly rare, and of great value from a commercial point of view, though, of course, Mr. Craven scarcely regards them in that light.

Romance and Robin Hood are so intimately associated that it is little wonder that the redoubtable hero should figure frequently on the stage. The latest to be presented at the footlights is from the joint pens of Messrs. Dennis Cleugh and Cecil Jones, who have produced a work abounding in scenes of excitement, tempered by those of wholesome sentiment. The episodes are a little detached, but the chivalric atmosphere is well preserved, and the poetic quality of the dialogue serves to redeem the piece from actual melodrama. The play, which was first produced at Tunbridge Wells on Nov. 24 last, though it was written, we understand, last May, deals with the beginning of Robin Hood's outlawry, the opening scene revealing the interior of Huntingdon Hall, where an old lady sits crooning by the fireside. The burden of her chant is,

When Norman visits Saxon hall,
Then shall the House of Huntingdon fall—or words to that effect. Sure enough, before many hours have elapsed, Lord Guy of Gisborne and Simon Hardwryst, both descendants of the Gallic invader, arrive with a warrant from King John, proclaiming Robert, the son of the Earl of Huntingdon, an outlaw. While the old Earl is in the act of reading the missive he is stabbed from behind by Hardwryst, who afterwards calls upon Robert to surrender. The youth, however, draws his sword, and, after a terrific combat with four armed ruffians, makes good his escape to Sherwood Forest, where he takes up a permanent abode, under the style and title of Robin Hood.

Round him he gathers a trusty band, who levy toll upon all who pass. An early prey is found in Hardwryst, who, with his niece Clorinda, are taken captive, closely followed by Lord Guy of Gisborne. After possessing himself of their valuables, Robin orders the miscreant Hardwryst to be tied to a tree and left to perish, and sends Lord Guy blindfolded back to Nottingham. One wayfarer at least is unmolested by the robbers, and that is the fair Maid Marion, of Clare, who comes upon Robin Hood while he is enjoying a noonday drowse. Marion wakens him to inquire the way, and, on learning that she is persecuted by the attentions of Lord Guy of Gisborne, Robin vows to protect her, and bids her blow three blasts on a horn, which he hangs on the greenwood tree, whenever she needs help.

Meanwhile Lord Guy has returned to Nottingham, and is found, in the third act, on the battlements of the Sheriff's castle, plotting with that worthy to capture Robin Hood. An arrow drops between them, and is found to bear a note, announcing the arrival of Robin, who speedily appears, having mounted the wall without so much as turning the feather in his cap. He encounters the Sheriff, to whom he is a stranger, alone, and induces him to believe that Friar Tuck, who comes in the disguise of an old apple woman, is the outlaw, and the spectacle is presented of the Friar careering round the battlements with men-at-arms in hot pursuit. Robin prevails upon the Sheriff to visit his forest home, under the promise of delivering up the outlaw, and great is the consternation of the dignitary when Robin reveals himself. Marion, who has been an unwilling guest at the castle, makes her escape clad in a suit of mail, and finds her way to the forest, where she tries in vain to blow the horn to summon Robin Hood. Unexpected assistance comes from a Red-cross Knight, who sounds the required call, whereupon the bold band appear, and are about to attack the strangers, when Robin recognises Marion in the younger knight, and the encounter is prevented.

A reward is offered for the head of Robin Hood, and Gisborne organises a large force, and invades his stronghold. Robin, overwhelmed by numbers, begs for time in which to wed Marion; but the concession is not required, for the unknown knight reveals himself as the doughty Richard Cœur de Lion, newly returned from the Crusades, who, after degrading Gisborne, restores the rank and estates of Robin Hood, and enrolls him under his banner.

Cordial applause marked the progress of the play, admirably acted by Mr. Norman V. Norman's company, most of whom are well practised in their art. Mr. Norman himself was a debonair Robin Hood, blithe and gay in the lighter passages, but admirably impressive in the more tender moods. He made a fine specimen of vigorous manhood, and declaimed the stirring lines with power and effect. Maid Marion was impersonated by Miss Beatrice Wilson with the requisite sweetness and modesty, her well-marked delivery and varied emphasis giving added value to the dialogue. She made a comely knight in her suit of chain mail, and the grace and refinement of the performance was well worthy of so finished an actress. A striking impersonation was also that of Mr. Dennis Cleugh, who acted with kingly dignity as Richard Cœur de Lion, and made his acting tone skilfully with the effects of the adversity through which the Royal adventurer had passed. He had a long speech about the King as a man and as a monarch, the delivery of which called forth a hearty outburst of cheers. A praiseworthy study of the crafty Simon Hardwryst, in whom the essence of spite and malevolence was contained, was given by Mr. Brember Wills, who cleverly doubled his part with that of Sir William Trusty, a loyal adherent of Richard. Mr. Norman Leslie realistically presented the unscrupulous Lord Guy of Gisborne, whose forbidding appearance well reflected his evil nature. The humour of the piece rested chiefly with Friar Tuck, played with a buffoonery that had a marked effect on the audience by Mr. Francis Hope, who also utilised a resonant tenor in a number of songs. Harmony was also promoted by Miss Letty Rushforth, who, as one of the merry men, sang a song of the woodlands melodiously. A diverting rendering of the Sheriff of Nottingham was given by Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, jun., whose make-up and facial expression were irresistibly droll. Miss Sybil Ruskin embellished her rendering of Clorinda, a Court lady who takes up her abode in the forest, with bewitching archness, and made the utmost of the opportunities of the part; and the haughty disdain of Isabella, wife of the Sheriff of Nottingham, was well assumed by Miss Dorothy West-Symes. Mr. Kenneth Bruce was a stalwart Little John; and Mr. Howard Brenan and Mr. Frederick Lock shared the responsibilities of Will Scarlet and Allan-a-Dale with credit.

"THE NEW YORK IDEA."

A Play in Four Acts, by Langdon Mitchell, produced at the Manhattan Theatre, New York, on Nov. 19.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mrs. Fiske has scored a brilliant success in this play, and the principal members of her supporting company, Messrs. John Mason, George Arliss, and Charles Harbury, have won high praise for their respective interpretations. "Marry the man you have a whim for and leave the rest to the Divorce Court—that is the New York idea correctly stated," so says one of the characters in the play; while another remarks that "New York is bounded on the north, south, east, and west by the state of divorce." Cynthia Karslake (Mrs. Fiske), divorced from a sporting lawyer who has spent a fortune on horses, is about to marry Phillip Phillimore, a Supreme Court Judge, who is also divorced from his wife. His family do not approve of Mrs. Karslake, who smokes cigarettes and "gets on their nerves"; but they make the best of things, and prepare for the wedding. The day before the interesting event is to occur Cynthia's former husband, John Karslake, drops in to see Phillimore on business connected with the selling of his stable, and comes face to face with his divorced wife. A few minutes later Mrs. Vida Phillimore calls to congratulate her former husband, the judge, and have a look at the bride-to-be. Then Sir Wilfrid Cates-Darby (Mr. George Arliss), an Englishman of some means and no conscience, and an easy prey to women, happens to come in. Sir Wilfrid promptly falls in love with Mrs. Karslake and Mrs. Phillimore, and is in a fearful stew all the next day as to which one he most desires to marry.

On the day of the wedding nearly all of the parties concerned meet again in Mrs. Phillimore's bourdoir, and after Karslake has refused to take his former wife's hand in friendship and accept her good wishes for his success with Mrs. Phillimore—who is openly flirting with him—the baronet asks Cynthia to take a trip to the races with him for the afternoon, and postpone the wedding until the evening. Cynthia has already invited her former husband to be best man and give her away, and has bet her wedding gown against his best saddle-mare that he won't dare do it—a bet he promptly takes. In a sporting spirit she accepts Sir Wilfrid's invitation, and leaves her former husband to inform her husband-to-be that the wedding will not take place until evening.

The third act shows the Phillimore home dressed for the belated wedding. It is 10 p.m. and there is no bride. Cynthia sends a telegram to say that she is delayed by an automobile breakdown, and marches in unconcernedly at 10.30. To the amazement of the pompous old judge, who forgives her escapade and prepares for the ceremony, Cynthia's former husband appears on the scene with a big bouquet for the bride, ready to act as best man.

"Who has a better right to be present at his wife's obsequies?" he demands when Phillimore questions the propriety of his presence. When the gay baronet, who eloped with Cynthia in his motor-car for the afternoon, comes in blithely he is shown the door, which he refuses to see; and the former wife of the bridegroom adds the sunshine of her presence to the scene. She continues her flirtation with Karslake, while the baronet calmly proposes that Cynthia shall cut it all and marry him. "An Englishman expects five things when he marries," he tells her, as she nervously watches her former husband and his new flame; "love, obedience, and three children." The unwelcome guests leave, and the ceremony is about to begin, but Karslake's departure with the divorced Mrs. Phillimore and Cynthia's belief that they are about to be married causes her to weaken. She seizes her wraps, calls a hansom, and bolts. Straight to her old home in Madison-avenue she goes, and arrives, as she supposes, too late. A wedding has taken place, Karslake's man assures her of that fact. But Sir Wilfrid and Mrs. Phillimore were the contracting parties. Before this is made clear to Cynthia, however, she and her former husband take part in a capital scene of cross purposes. Karslake believes she has married Phillimore, while she thinks he has thrown himself away on the other creature. She finds his room exactly as she last saw it on the day of their quarrel six months ago. Even the chair which she knocked over in her fury lies just as she left it. She explains that she has visited him at this late hour merely to save him from throwing himself away on Mrs. Phillimore. He asks her point blank about Phillimore. To gain time she rings for a hansom, and tells him that she isn't quite sure what she is going to do yet. Then they begin to talk over their quarrel, and fall to laughing over it; and he persuades her that she is hungry and must stay to supper. Karslake has learned in the meantime that his wife's Dakota divorce is invalid, so he sends the cabman away, and having assured himself that Cynthia still loves him, he slips upon her finger the ring that she threw away when she left him.

"THE notice given to Miss Lily Kirton at the Standard, Pimlico, in last week's issue should have been credited to Miss Kitty Gresham, as I deputised all the week for her.—Yours faithfully, KITTY GRESHAM."

WE regret to announce the death of Mrs. Jones, professionally known as Miss Ada Mansfield, the beloved wife of Mr. Theodore Jones, which took place at 88, King-street, Southport, after a painful illness. Miss Mansfield was well known in both the dramatic and music-hall professions, and her many friends will deeply mourn her loss.

"IT'S A DIFFERENT GIRL AGAIN"

IMPORTANT NOTICE

TO

Pantomime Producers, Managers, Conductors and Artistes.

The above Song cannot be sung in Pantomime unless a stamped assignment bearing the signature of

"FRANCIS, DAY & HUNTER"

is first obtained, no one but ourselves having any right whatever to arrange for the use of this Song in Theatres.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

MR. BEERBOHM TREE, who with such éclat opened the New Theatre at Cardiff on Monday, was entertained, with the members of his company, at a complimentary banquet on Thursday, by the commercial men of Cardiff. Miss Viola Tree, Miss Constance Collier, Mr. Lionel Brough, and Mr Henry Dana were among those present. The toast of Mr. Tree's health was enthusiastically honoured, and in reply the popular actor-manager expressed the delight of himself and the company at the way they had been received on their first visit to the metropolis of Wales. Especially were they gratified that there should have been such appreciation in the cheaper parts of the house of that wonderful work Hamlet.

AFTER eulogising the attractiveness of the new theatre, Mr. Tree continued, "There are those apostles of dullness, who imagine that the dull have a monopoly of godliness. I said the other night, quite simply and naturally, 'God bless this house.' Some people seem to have been surprised at such an utterance, but to me it came quite naturally. There is even a kind of feeling that people must be ugly to be good. It is pleasant to think, however, that this city recognises the enormous importance of having beautiful buildings. While our children look on beautiful things their minds become more beautiful, and it is on that score that the theatre gives sweetness and light to the people." We are able to announce that Mr. Tree and his company will shortly give a benefit performance in aid of theatrical charities.

MISS JESSIE BOND, the original Phœbe Meryll, was among the brilliant audience at the Savoy on Saturday, and received a hearty welcome from those assembled. Miss Geraldine Ulmar, Miss Fortescue, and Mr. Henry Lytton, other popular Savoyards, were also present. The distinguished assemblage also included the Earl of Kilmorey, Sir Anderson Critchett, Sir John Wolfe-Barry, Sir Bruce Seton, Sir John Runtz, Sir George Lewis, Lady Katharine Coke, and Sir Marcus and Lady Samuel. Among the hundred or so telegrams of goodwill received by Mrs. D'Oyly Carte were those sent by Miss Leonora Braham, Mr. George Grossmith, and Miss Rosina Brandram, whose names recall the best days of the Savoy.

SIR SQUIRE BANCROFT and Mr. Edward Terry were amongst those who helped to swell the total of the subscription list at the annual festival in aid of the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, held on Wednesday at De Keyser's Royal Hotel, and presided over by the Lord Mayor. The amount realised was over £3,000.

MR. CHARLES FROHMAN, who arrived in London on Wednesday from America, has a busy time immediately before him. His work starts with the revival of Peter Pan, due at the Duke of York's on Tuesday. Following in quick succession is Nelly Neil, the attractiveness of which will be heightened by a number of American belles selected by Mr. Frohman from his musical companies in New York. After that comes the installation of The Beauty of Bath in her new home in Shaftesbury-avenue, with Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Terriss, the appearance of Mr. John Hare as Napoleon in La Belle Marseillaise, and the presentation of Miss Marie Tempest in a new play. In addition to the foregoing important enterprises, Mr. Frohman has a number of original pieces in hand which are to be produced as occasion serves.

MR. LEWIS WALLER has fixed upon Monday next for the matinée of Robin Hood, at the Lyric Theatre, in aid of the Lord Mayor's Cripples' Fund, a certain number of seats being reserved for such of the little ones who are able to be moved. The Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs will be present. The only seats available for the public on this occasion will be those in the upper circle (reserved) and gallery (unreserved).

MRS. S. BERKSTON DOUGLAS, who had the privilege of having Mrs. Kendal for her patron at her pupils' performance at Queen's (Small) Hall on the 3rd inst., received a letter wishing her success from Sir Theodore Martin, who was unavoidably prevented from being present. Encouraging messages were also sent by Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft, Mr. George Bancroft, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. and Mrs. George Alexander, Mr. Pinero, Mrs. Arthur Bourchier, Mrs. Cyril Maude, Mrs. Seymour Hicks, and Miss May Moore. The dramatic students, it is gratifying to record, received double and treble recalls.

THE Council of the Actors' Association held an especial meeting on the stage of the Comedy Theatre on the 6th inst., when there were present Mr. Cyril Maude, V.P., in the chair, Mr. C. Aubrey Smith (chairman of Council), Mr. A. E. Drinkwater (deputy chairman of the Council), Mesdames Kate Bishop, Beatrice Lamb, and Saba Raleigh, Messrs. Cecil Barth, J. Cooke Beresford, Acton Bond, Burton Cooke, F. Cremlin, William Devereux, Quinton McPherson, E. Story-Jofton, and Charles Cruikshanks (secretary). The questions under discussion had reference to arrangements in connection with the forthcoming Irving Memorial meeting, which will be held at the Garrick Theatre next Tuesday (the 18th), at 3 p.m.

THE Irving Memorial Committee, represented by Messrs. Cyril Maude, Laurence Grant, Acton Bond, Lewis Casson, and the secretary (Chas. Cruikshanks), met some of those who were invited to co-operate with them in certain matters in connection with the forthcoming Garrick Theatre meeting, the convention taking place on the stage of the Comedy Theatre on the 6th inst.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER has acquired the rights of Le Voleur, the new play by Henri Bernstein, which was produced with pronounced success at the Paris Renaissance last week. It is to be adapted by Mr. Cosmo Gordon Lennox, and is designed for future representation at the St. James's. A detailed account of the French production is given by our Paris correspondent in another column.

"PETER'S MOTHER" was performed by Royal command at Sandringham on the 7th inst., when the company then playing the piece at Wyndham's appeared before their Majesties the King and Queen and the King and Queen of Norway, their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Princess Victoria, and other distinguished guests. Miss Marion Terry repeated her artistic performance of the title-rôle, and the cast also contained Mr. Norman McKinnel, Mr. A. E. Matthews, Miss D. Drummond, Miss Alice Beet, Mr. Frederick Kerr, Mr. E. J. Garden, Mr. Alfred Bucklaw, Mrs. Edward Saker, Miss Hilda Trevelyan, Mr. Reginald Eyre, and Mr. M. Elphinstone. Before the play began the Queen payed a surprise visit to Miss Terry in her dressing-room, and after the performance the King received and thanked all the principal members of the company.

MONDAY evening marked the 101st performance of Peter's Mother, when Mrs. Henry de la Pasture's comedy was transferred from Wyndham's to the Apollo, the event being celebrated by the presentation of a souvenir copy of the book on which the piece was founded. The members of the company, with their Royal honours fresh upon them, played in finished style, and the piece went remarkably well. A change was made in the representative of Sarah, that character, hitherto sustained by Miss Hilda Trevelyan, being taken up with the most successful results by Miss Nina Boucicault.

MR. MARTIN HARVEY'S announcement of his intention shortly to revive Richard III. has been received with quite a remarkable show of satisfaction. The central figure is much in the public eye at the moment—what he was, and what he was not—and it will be exceedingly interesting to find out by how much Mr. Harvey in his reading allows hoary tradition to be tempered by modern research. To-night Mr. Harvey, at the Coronet Theatre, concludes one of the most successful tours, both artistically and financially, he has ever undertaken.

THE Garrick Theatre has been thrice patronised by Royalty this week. On Monday evening the Prince and Princess of Wales were present at the performance of The Morals of Marcus; on the following afternoon Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, accompanied by Princess Victoria and Princess Louise Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein, witnessed Mr. Bourchier's production of Macbeth; and the same piece was honoured on Wednesday by the presence of Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll.

MR. CHARLES MANNERS, whose able opera company played at the Shakespeare Theatre, Liverpool, last week, responded to a strong demand for a speech on Saturday evening after the fall of the curtain. He thanked Liverpool for the support that had been accorded to them, but regretted that operatic novelties were not more appreciated. It was strange that Romeo and Juliet, by the same composer as Faust, should have attracted only half the audience drawn by the latter opera. Then he was sorry that people had not come to see The Merry Wives of Windsor, which had been the greatest success elsewhere, and had been liked by all who had seen it. The next time, however, he visited Liverpool he would try it again, and also produce Verdi's Aida.

TERRY'S THEATRE is to have a pantomime at Christmas, Mr. Samuel James, the well-known suburban theatrical manager, having arranged with the management to produce there on Boxing Day his grand children's pantomime, Red Riding Hood. Miss Lily Harold will be principal boy. Mr. James is responsible for no fewer than eight other pantomimes this season, so that his hands are fully occupied.

THE Princess of Wales, accompanied by Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck, was present at the Court Theatre on Wednesday, and witnessed the performance of Man and Superman; and on the same evening the Duke and Duchess of Connaught saw Raffles at the Comedy Theatre.

MISS CONSTANCE CRAWLEY, the English actress, who is making such a great sensation in California by her productions of literary plays by modern authors (Ibsen, D'Annunzio, Maeterlinck, &c.), played The Midsummer Night's Dream last month in the Greek Theatre, Berkeley, to the largest audience ever played to in America. It numbered nine thousand, which was two thousand more than Sarah Bernhardt's record at the same place. Their enthusiasm was as inspiring as their numbers, and they called Miss Crawley again and again. Miss Crawley is preparing a gigantic production of D'Annunzio's Francesca da Rimini, and after Christmas will start for the East, probably appearing in New York and London next year. Mr. Arthur Maude, who was with Mr. Martin Harvey some years, is Miss Crawley's leading man and stage-director.

IN the competition for the prize of five pounds, given by Mr. Norman Forbes for Shakespearean dramatic recitation in both comedy and tragedy, at the Academy of Dramatic Art, 62, Gower-street, Mr. John Hare, as judge, awarded the prize to Miss Beatrice Smith.

PATRONS of the drama in Aston-under-Lyne deeply regret the retirement of Mr. Armstrong Fairbairn, formerly acting-manager of the Theatre Royal, who has obtained an appointment under Government, and consequently leaves the dramatic profession. During his management of the Theatre Royal, under the proprietor Mr. Charles Revill, he made many friends, and he has received on leaving many valuable tokens of regard in the shape of presents from personal and business acquaintances, as well as from the permanent staffs at the Theatre Royal and the Empire Hippodrome. He is succeeded as acting-manager by Mr. William Revill, from the Stockport Theatre Royal, the proprietor's eldest son.

MR. WILLIAM MOLLISON can claim a rare distinction among living actors, viz., that of having performed the trying part of Macbeth for twelve consecutive weeks in one provincial city (Manchester). It is not surprising, therefore, to find that Shakespeare's great tragedy will be included in Mr. Mollison's répertoire during his forthcoming tour.

MR. PHILIP LESLIE'S friends will learn with regret that, in consequence of his mother's ill-health, he has been obliged to beg Mr. J. C. Williamson to release him from the long engagement on which he was about to enter with him at the termination of his contract with the Brough-Flemming company, and return to England. He brings with him from Australia the good wishes of a host of friends, and of many more who knew him only as "Absolutely" Duff Wynterden.

AN encouraging début was made at the Theatre Royal, Portsmouth, on Monday, by a young Australian artist named Miss Wanda Radford, who appeared as Oliver with Mr. Beerbohm Tree's company of Oliver Twist. The little lady had only a week to learn the part, but played it in a manner which secured high praise. She is but ten years of age, and her initial performance, which demonstrated the possession of more than ordinary talent, gives promise of a bright future.

MISS GRACE LESTER concludes to-night her third engagement with Mr. Willard, and commences on the 17th a special re-engagement with M. Auguste Van Biene, in The Broken Melody.—Mr .Charles Boult will terminate to-day twenty-two weeks' successful engagement as Ra Goonga, in The Indian Mutiny, with Mr. Frank E. Burdett, he having been kindly released by that gentleman to undertake the general-management of Messrs. Little and D'Arcy's Sinbad the Sailor pantomime.

RAPID strides are being made with the New Theatre and Opera House, at the Spa and Gardens, Bridlington, and Mr. Henry Hague and his directors have lost no time in getting the work in hand. We understand the house will seat 1,200 persons, and, at ordinary prices, £100. The stage will be 36ft. deep, with an opening of 30ft. wide, and 26ft. high. The theatre is to be ready for opening on July 22 next.

THE British Empire Shakespeare Society will continue their series of dramatic readings at the Kensington Town Hall on Monday afternoon, when Henry VIII. will be given. Miss E. Wynne Matthison, Mr. Walter Hampden, and Mr. Acton Bond will take the parts of Katherine, Buckingham, and Wolsey respectively; and also included in the cast will be Messrs. Kenyon Musgrave, Lewis Willoughby, William Burchill, A. Bristowe, J. Fritz Russell, Charles R. Hann, and F. Stuart Willson, and Miss Mary Barton and Miss Enid Rose.

THE veteran comedian and burlesque actor Mr. Edwin Danvers (late of the Strand and Royalty Theatres) died at Haywards Heath Asylum on Wednesday last. Mr. George Danvers, comedian, is a son of the deceased actor.

MR. ARTHUR ROBERTS told a lively tale of misadventures with a motor-car at Westminster on Thursday, when he was sued by his former chauffeur, for £6 wages and £1 17s. 6d. for petrol, &c., purchased for his master's machines. The defence was that plaintiff had smashed up two of defendant's cars, and had been dismissed in consequence, but had been taken on again after the lapse of a month, when he met with another accident at Margate. After the comedian had given evidence, the Judge said that Mr. Roberts seemed to have acted with very great consideration, and he could not understand how the plaintiff had been so ill-advised as to bring this action. Defendant had fairly agreed not to dispute the £1 17s. 6d. which plaintiff said he had expended, but no wages were due, and plaintiff would therefore have judgment for the £1 17s. 6d.

AT the Royal Academy of Music the Sainton Dolby prize for contraltos has been awarded to Edith Kirk (a native of Leicester), Marie I. Wadia being very highly commended and Mary A. Davies highly commended. The examiners were Mrs. Julia Franks, Mme. Edith Hands, and Mr. S. Ambler Brereton (in the chair). The Bonamy Dobree prize for violoncello playing was secured by Edith J. Evans (of London), Edgar Fawcett being very highly commended. The examiners were Messrs Prosper Burnett, F. Edward Hambleton, and B. Patterson Parker (chairman).

THE R.A.M. Club prize for organ playing was awarded to Montague F. Phillips (of London), the examiners being Messrs. G. F. Huntley, Charlton T. Speer, and F. A. W. Docker (chairman). The Rutson Memorial prize for sopranos was won by Ida Kahn (of London), Selina Pitt Soper being highly commended; and that for tenors was taken by Hubert Baker (of Kirby Misperton). The examiners were Mme. Kate Cove, Miss Beatrice Stanley Lucas, and Mr. Gwilym Richards (in the chair). The Westmorland Scholarship for vocalists fell to F. Percival Driver (of Leicester). The examiners were Messrs. F. Corder and Fred Walker, and Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie (chairman).

MR. ALFRED MARTIN has been again engaged by Mr. Milton Bode as advertising manager for his pantomime at the New Theatre, Cardiff. This will be his third pantomime season at Cardiff, and his seventh pantomime engagement with Mr. Milton Bode.

THE Metropole Theatre, Gateshead, on Saturday afternoon rang with the merry laughter of 3,000 poor children, who were given their annual treat by Councillor Sidney Bacon. The delight taken by the youngsters in the juvenile pantomime, The Babes in the Wood, was evident throughout.

"THE SILVER STICK," an entirely new Cornish musical play, in two acts, written by Alfred England, the music being by Carl St. Amory, was produced at the Opera House, Northampton, on the 8th inst., for copyright purposes.

MESSRS. MURRAY KING AND CLARK will reopen the Devonshire Park Theatre, Eastbourne, on Christmas Eve, with The Gay Parisienne. The theatre has been lavishly redecorated, the dressing-rooms made more comfortable, the stage improved, and extra electric lighting installed.

AT the Theatre Royal, Jarrow, on the 6th inst., Mr. J. E. Reed, the popular acting-manager for Mr. Hugh Robertson, entertained the inmates of Harton Workhouse to an excellent evening's entertainment. Musical numbers were submitted by the members of the local operatic society, and a one-act play was given, with Mr. Reed in the leading part, supported by the local dramatic club.

MR. JOHN CHILD, the popular member of the Moody-Manners opera company, sang "Sound an alarm" and "Native Worth," at St. James's Church, Burnley, on Sunday. Mr. W. M. Chapman Huston, the general-manager of the company, read the lessons, and an appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. B. Winfield. A collection for the Actors' Benevolent Fund realised over £10. Among the congregation were Mme. Fanny Moody, and other members of the company, along with Mrs. Child.

MR. FRANK BERTRAM'S company will play The Breed of the Treshams for the three-hundredth time to-day at the Theatre Royal, Worthing, in which town, it may be remembered, Mr. Bertram opened with the play. Of the company numbering twenty, seven have not missed a single performance, namely, Messrs. George Traill, Oswald Lingard, Cecil Klein, Gerald Clarke, Wilfred Compton, and Fred Stone, and Miss Celestine Bertram. The company will rest next week, opening at Torquay on Boxing Day.

MISS OLIVE WADE, who made a successful first appearance only last February in the exigent part of Hermia, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, at the Midland Theatre, Manchester, and afterwards appeared in The Dairymaids throughout its long and successful run at the Apollo Theatre, has been engaged by Mr. Robert Courtneidge to play second girl in his forthcoming pantomime, Aladdin, at the Theatre Royal, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. F. R. Benson was desirous of securing her services for his production of The Dream at Leeds in January but the contract with Mr. Courtneidge had already been entered into. As Miss Wade will not reach her eighteenth birthday until March next, her progress must be accounted wonderfully rapid.

THE New Prince's Theatre, Poplar, now nearly a year old, will close its doors for the first time next week, but only in order to give the final touches and rehearsals to Mr. Sounes' second annual pantomime. This year he produces The Forty Thieves with a capital cast. Two lines of motor-'buses now serve this district, and to-day the L.C.C. electric trams start running from Aldgate to Poplar and the "Prince's."

MR. STANLEY ROGERS, who has resigned the managership of Her Majesty's Theatre, Carlisle, is an extremely busy man, and in addition to being lessee of the Opera House, Workington, and the Athenæum, Lancaster, is also managing-director of the London and Provincial Pantomimes Co., Ltd., and is the author of, and producing for them this season, no fewer than five pantomimes. He will, however, continue to reside in Carlisle. Mr. Rogers has engaged Mr. Frank Stanley, late acting-manager of Her Majesty's Theatre, Carlisle, to act in a similar capacity for the London and Provincial Pantomimes Co., Ltd.'s panto. Jack the Giant-killer.

MR. WILLIE CLARKSON has just returned from Paris, where he has been bewigging and beautifying the heads of Mme. Rejane's production at her own theatre of Sardou's new play, La Saville, due this evening. The piece, which deals with the early part of Napoleon the Third's reign, is being done on a magnificent scale. Mr. Clarkson has also been presiding over the coiffeurs of Les Bouffons, the new play in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt is to be seen in the comedy part of a boy.

THAT striking play, The Shulamite, which was adapted by Claude Askew and Edward Knoblauch from Alice and Claude Askew's novel of the same name, and successfully produced at the Savoy Theatre with Miss Lena Ashwell in the leading rôle, has been winning golden opinions in the principal cities of the United States this autumn. It has been recently produced in Italy, and before the end of the year it is to be presented in Russian at the Théâtre Litteraire et Artestique in St. Petersburg, where a great success is anticipated.

THE Scala Theatre has been the scene on several occasions this week of the representation of two plays given by Society amateurs, under distinguished patronage, in behalf of the Kensington General Hospital. The first was a little children's opera entitled Under the Greenwood Tree, by Major Philips Trevor, brother to Mr. Leo Trevor, and music by Howard Carr, in which no fewer than seven of the first-named gentleman's own little girls and boys appeared. The second piece, Humpty Dumpty, a fairy comedietta, in three acts, by A. C. G. Grylls, with music by Hubert Colegrave, was sustained by a goodly company of ladies and gentlemen, numbering upwards of 200.

MR. LOUIS CALVERT, who is busy with his elaborate production of pantomime at the Broadway, particulars of which appeared in a recent issue, is in negotiation for another theatre to which to transfer the successful comic opera Amasis when Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry return to the New Theatre, on Dec. 31. Miss Neilson and Mr. Terry's opening production will be Dorothy o' the Hall, and their new play, Matt of Merrymount, produced at Newcastle on Oct. 11 last, will follow in due course.

MR. OSWALD BRAND, who, we regret to learn, is still in indifferent health, encouraged by the ready sale which awaited his souvenir programme at his recent benefit at the King's, Hammersmith, has issued a new and improved edition, which he calls "The Oswald Brand Souvenir Reciter." It contains a large number of recitations from Mr. Brand's pen, together with pictures and scenes from his plays. It is an admirably got-up booklet, the elegant covers of which are decorated in a gold design, printed in purple ink, and tied with ribbons of the same colour. Members of Royalty and the aristocracy and other distinguished persons are already subscribers to the work, a copy of which has been graciously accepted by the Queen. The "Reciter" can be obtained through the Army and Navy Stores, Victoria Street, W.

MR. JOSEPH SAINTON (musical director of the Crystal Palace Theatre) has been appointed, by unanimous vote, musical director to the Bridlington Corporation at a salary of £300 for the season—March 25 to Oct. 13. Mr. Sainton has held a similar position this year for the Clacton-on-Sea Council

OWING to the great success of the previous performances, the English Drama Society will repeat their representations of the Chester Mystery Plays at the Bloomsbury Hall, Hart-street, on the 21st, 22nd, and 24th inst., at 3.30 and 9 o'clock. The plays will be produced as heretofore under the direction of Mr. Nugent Monck.

CLEVER little Gladys Rose-Jones, the well-known child reciter, has been engaged by Mr. Robert Arthur to play the part of Leslie Tremaine in his forthcoming pantomime at the Kennington Theatre.

MR. WALTER EVERARD has just arrived home after an interesting trip to the West Indies, Jamaica, and America. Mr. Everard made good use of his time while in the United States, having witnessed the initial representation of Haddon Chambers's Sir Anthony in Boston, as well as Mr. Willard's fine impersonation of Colonel Newcome, Miss Lena Ashwell in The Shulamite, and Mr. H. A. Jones's new play, The Hypocrites. He arrived in London in time to find his old chief, Sir Charles Wyndham, playing Garrick. America, according to Mr. Everard, is teeming with English actors, but his own reputation in the States was sufficient to secure him the offer of a good part, which, however, he deemed unsuitable to his personality.

MISS TOPSY SINDEN has terminated her engagement in The Beauty of Bath, and began a new contract immediately with Mr. George Edwardes. She now goes on a short tour with See-See, opening in Glasgow on Christmas Eve.

MR. LEWIS WALLER sustained a grievous loss in a fire which occurred on Wednesday at the timber store of Messrs. L. Whitehead, builders, in Dorset-road, Clapham, by which the scenery for Othello, Henry V., Brigadier Gerard, and Monsieur Beaucaire was totally destroyed. Happily, the damage is covered by insurance, but the loss of so many artistic sets is greatly to be deplored.

TO-NIGHT sees the termination of T. Edward Ward's very successful autumn tour of Nita Rae's play Her Fatal Past. From Christmas onwards Mr. Ward is running a revival of Walter Howard's Man and Wife, for which a powerful company has been engaged, including Miss Ward as Marcelle.

MR. DUDLEY CLINTON, who left England two years ago for the antipodes, under contract to Mr. George Musgrove, has been specially engaged by Mrs. Fiske, the famous American actress, for her New York season, to play the Rev. Matthew Phillimore in Langdon Mitchell's comedy The New York Idea, which has obtained a phenomenal success. Mr. Clinton writes that he had a glorious time with Mr. Musgrove in Australia and New Zealand, and played in every theatrical city of note. He found the audiences, down under, most enthusiastic, and socially the most hospitable people in the world. At the conclusion of the season in Sydney last Christmas he accompanied Miss Nellie Stewart, as principal comedian, to America, opening at San Francisco with Sweet Nell at the Majestic Theatre, and escaping the earthquake by only four days.

DISTINGUISHED artists contributed to a matinée given at the St. James's Theatre on the 7th inst. in aid of the Western Skin Hospital. Mr. Alexander appeared in his finished study of the poet in Mr. W. Courtney's one-act play Kit Marlowe, and had an enthusiastic reception. Miss Lilian Braithwaite was a sympathetic and graceful Nan, Mr. Fulton, Mr. Brydone, and Mr. Reynolds supplied picturesque sketches of Marlowe's boon companions, and Mr. Lyall Swete played the brutal innkeeper Archer with the utmost effect. A feature of the afternoon was the appearance of the famous tragedienne, Miss Genevieve Ward, as a humorist. She recited a little piece called "Corncha's Comforter," and delighted the audience. Mlle. Otta Brony sang Arditi's valse, "Se Saran Rose," artistically, and the programme was also contributed to by Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Mr. Philip Lewis, and Miss Gwladys Roberts.

OPERATIC amateurs will figure prominently at the Crystal Palace Theatre next week. On Tuesday evening the Norwood Operatic Society will give a performance of Auber's grand opera Fra Diavola. The entertainment will be under the direction of the veteran Mr. Valentine Smith, and there will be a full orchestra and chorus conducted by Mr. Stephen R. Philpot. On Thursday and Saturday evenings the Catford Operatic Society, by arrangement with Mr. Bannister Howard and by permission of Mrs, D'Oyly Carte, will give performances of Gilbert and Sullivan's opera The Gondoliers.

A NEW one-act play, entitled That Impious Piano, by Lyddell Sawyer, will precede the performance of The Red Lamp, given at the Scala Theatre on Monday by the Wyndham Dramatic Club. Mr. Sawyer has been awarded upwards of fifty medals and diplomas for grouping and genre work generally in photography, and the opportunity thus afforded of observing how far he has been able to adopt these principles to the moving groups and situations of the stage will be interesting.

A DEPUTATION from the Special Committee attended the Touring Managers' Association at their meeting on the 7th inst., and were cordially received. Questions in connection with payment for rehearsals were discussed, and favourably considered, the precise terms and conditions under which the proposed scheme should operate were not definitely fixed, it being agreed they should be dealt with on some future occasion.

THE "Commissioners'" Committee held a meeting on Monday last, when there were present Mr. Cecil Barth (in the chair), Mesdames Georgina Hamilton, Rose Mathews, Blanche Stanley, and Lucy Sibley, Messrs. F. J. Arlton and Leslie Carter, and Charles Cruikshanks (secretary). Mr. Frank G. Dunn and Mr. Clive Currie were elected members of the Committee. A question as to the holding of "social" meetings on the Fridays in January next, between four and six, was under discussion, and ultimately referred to the Council. The establishment of a reference library of dramatic works, dealing with costume, elocution, history of the drama, &c., &c., was suggested, gifts of books having been promised. It was suggested that a Social and Library Committee be formed, and the following names were proposed:—Mesdames Georgina Hamilton, Rose Mathews, Margaret Parker, Kathleen Russell, Hylda Franklin, and Lucy Sibley, Messrs. Cecil Barth, A. E. Drinkwater (or C. Aubrey Smith), Clive Currie, F. H. De Quincey, Frank G. Dunn, and Arthur Morris.

THE usual weekly meeting of the Council of the Actors' Association was held on Tuesday last, when there were present Mr. A. E. Drinkwater (deputy chairman), Mr. Henry W. Mote (hon. solicitor), Miss Kate Phillips, and Messrs. Cecil Barth, J. Cooke Beresford, Clarence Blakiston, Burton Cooke, F. Cremlin, William Devereux, Lawrence Grant, Spencer Trevor, Fredk. Volpe, and Charles Cruikshanks (secretary).

THE hon. solicitors reported they had advised several members, and they were requested to take proceedings against a manager in the event of non-payment of an artist's claim. The present scheme of insurance was discussed, and ultimately it was agreed that in 1907 the Association should not only arrange for the insurance of members against death by accident, disablement, &c., but also against loss of luggage and loss of salary (due to such loss of luggage), and the secretary was instructed to carry out the necessary negotiations with the insurance company who covered the risk. Hamilton Deane, Fred Lewis, and Evelyn Maxwell were nominated for election, and three former members were reinstated. Cases of alleged insanitation against five provincial theatres were under consideration, and the secretary received instructions. Mr. Lawrence Grant was elected a member of the "Selection of Plays" Committee. The Commissioners' Committee's report was taken. It was agreed that "social" meetings might be held on two Fridays in January, between four and six, of which due notice would be given.

THE secretary reported the following, as received from a member:—"Many thanks for forwarding letters with so much care and promptness." Reports of the Finance and General Purposes Committee were given. The suggestion-book was considered, and entries made. The following gentlemen were elected as hon. medical officers to the A.A.:—Dr. E. Arthur Dando, Dixon's Green, Dudley; Dr. R. Craig Rodgers, Stoneclough, Burnley; Dr. Carter, 155, Uxbridge-road, W.; Dr. W. B. Secretan, Reading; Dr. Phillips, Eastbourne; Dr. R. Marshall, Douglas, Isle of Man.

THE pinions of the Pelican have this year spread over a vast surface, the ever-welcome Christmas annual, issued at 6d., including contributions from leading managers, actor-managers, variety magnates, and stars of the stage. Sir Edward Moss, the Empires' knight, starts off with a droll anecdote of a Scotch servant; Mr. George Edwardes follows with "What the Butler Did"; Mr. Frank Curzon has resource to rhyme fitly to describe "The Critic"; and Mr. Arthur Bourchier has a little comedietta called "Reserve Force," in which he uses a satirical pen with force not reserved. Mr. Arthur Collins gives reminiscences of his recent visit with Mr. Hall Caine to Sicily, Mr. George Alexander warmly advocates the claims of the Academy of Dramatic Art, and Mr. Seymour Hicks writes in his merriest vein. A pretty romance of "Cupid and the Celibate" is furnished by Miss Edna May; Miss Mabel Love neatly describes a mysterious admirer; and contributions are to be found also from Miss Violet Vanbrugh, Miss Ellaline Terriss, Miss Millie Legarde, Miss Marie Dainton, Mr. Frederick Harrison, Mr. Geo. Grossmith, Mr. G. P. Huntley, and many others, accompanied in each case by the latest photograph of the writer.

MR. SERVAIS LE ROY, having been unable to cancel several long-standing foreign contracts, has been obliged to postpone the reproduction of Lady Kinton's Necklace until July 27, 1907, when the play will visit No. 1 theatres only.

MR. W. PEACOCK takes a complimentary benefit next Wednesday at the Harrogate Opera House, on which occasion he will have the services of a large company of stage favourites, Mr. John Hart and Mr. Robert Courtneidge having given all their available artists liberty to assist Mr. Peacock. Among these are Miss Ada Blanche, Miss Violet Lloyd, Miss Florence Smithson, Miss Edith Blanche, Miss Carrie Moore, Mr. Neil Kenyon, Mr. Albert Le Fre, Mr. Fred Allandale, Mr. Edward Staples, The Burnells, and Mr. Witty Watty Walton. Mr. C. L. Naylor will conduct the augmented orchestra. Assistance in the special entertainment will be given by a number of local artists, including Miss Lilian Payne and Mrs. Peacock, whom we remember as Miss Addie Blanche—a very juvenile Dick Whittington—at the Avenue Theatre in 1882. The third act of The Second in Command will also be performed by amateurs.

THE Elephant and Castle pantomime will be Cinderella, by Brian Daly and J. M. East. Miss Gracie Taylor will be principal boy, Miss Alice Digby principal girl, Messrs. Willie Scott and Arthur Watts the two ugly sisters, and Herbert Rule as Dandini. Mr. J. Nurnberger is responsible for the music, and the staging and effects are to be on an elaborate scale.

THOSE two favourite artists, Mr. Bert Sinden and Miss Topsy Sinden, will have the deepest sympathy of all in the loss which they have recently sustained by the death of their father, Mr. Augustus Sinden. The deceased gentleman was suffering from an acute attack of influenza, and passed away suddenly of heart failure.

THE Victoria Club for lady members of the theatrical profession has been opened in the Regent Rooms, 234, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow. The object of the club (which is the first of the kind in Scotland) is to provide a centre of social life and friendly intercourse among lady members of the theatrical profession. The club is under the auspices of the Scottish Christian Social Union, of which the Hon. the Lord Provost of Glasgow is president, and has the cordial approval of the managers of the various theatres. Lady members of the profession have adequate representation on the committee of administration. The club is open every week-day from twelve noon to five p.m. Papers, magazines, and writing materials are provided, and afternoon tea, &c., is served. All lady members of the profession are cordially invited to join the club, even though they may be resident in the city for only a few days.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

MR. LAURENCE HOUSMAN, the author of "An Englishwoman's Love Letters," has been having his "baptism of fire" as a librettist. Resenting the "cuts" and alterations in his book of The Vicar of Wakefield, which was produced at the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Wednesday, he withdrew his name from the programmes, as far as the libretto was concerned. Mme. Liza Lehmann, the composer, has given the Daily Chronicle the following description of her troubles with Mr. Housman:—"When I received the libretto, I wrote to Mr. Housman, asking him for extra numbers for certain characters. This request, usual enough between collaborators, did not apparently meet with Mr. Housman's approval, for he wrote back and said that he did not approve of the 'star' system. He also said that he removed his veto from alterations and cuts, and did not wish to attend rehearsals. At the eleventh hour, however, when we were practically ready for production, he turned up at the rehearsal, and expressed himself as being very dissatisfied with the way his play had been altered. He wanted things set back according to his wish, but, of course, it was impossible to begin rehearsing the opera afresh in a new way."

MR. DAVID BISPHAM, also interviewed, told his story thus:—"The libretto, as I first received it, was, frankly, impossible, owing to its length. There were 16,000 words in the MS., about double the length which I required. It would have played from eight until two, instead of for three hours. Also, certain parts were not, in my opinion, large enough. When there are songs occupying a considerable time, one can understand the author of an opera losing a little his sense of proportion, so I asked Mr. Housman to cut and alter as I thought best for the good of the play. He gave me permission to do as I wished, and now we have brought it down to about 8,000 words." What Mr. Housman evidently wants is a course of training under Mr. George Edwardes.

IBSEN'S manuscript remains contain some amusing maxims and reflections, among which is the following:—"'Free-born men' is a phrase of rhetoric. They do not exist. Marriage, the relation between man and wife, has corrupted the race, and impressed the mark of slavery upon all." This was very hard upon Mrs. Ibsen, who "humoured" the "master" to the extent of letting him sew on his own shirt-buttons—after a fashion—the considerate spouse then taking them off again in private and putting them on properly.

MR. W. S. GILBERT has written denying that he looks upon artists as "so much material to be moulded to the purposes of the playwright." This, he says, is "very far from being the case." He would, he says, gladly welcome suggestions and counsel from consummate artists with established reputations—he gives a list of examples—but he objects to do so from "people who began in the chorus, or with £3-a-week parts at the Savoy, and are now commanding salaries of from £20 to £80 a week." There is one thing, at any rate, for which both players and public ought to be very grateful to Mr. Gilbert—he insists on clear, distinct, and everywhere-audible delivery. His patient persistence, and his determination to have his own way at rehearsal, are so well known that it is generally assumed by artists that "resistance is hopeless."

THERE is a legend—probably with the usual insufficient foundation—of an actor who once opposed his opinion, at rehearsal, to that of Mr. Gilbert, who is said to have made the following remarks:—"Mr. Blank, you are a very irritable man; so am I. You are a very obstinate man; so am I. But I am a very clever man—and you are not!"

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM, at any rate, places great store upon stage-management. "My school," he told a Daily Chronicle representative the other day, "has always been the simple one of experience in front of the public. I learnt a good deal from the French stage, and not a little, too, from Lester Wallack, the American; but I should say that there are just three things that can help to teach a young actor his art. They are, nature, the audience, and the tyranny of the stage-manager. Any other kind of school seems to me very little use—though, of course, I am friendly with existing 'schools of acting,' and anything serves when one is young."

MR. E. EDMONDS sends us the following anecdote apropos of Mr. Arthur Bourchier's fine production of Macbeth. Mr. Charles Calvert had a capital stage-carpenter at Manchester, but the man had one failing; like our army in Flanders, he "swore terribly." This Mr. Calvert was determined to put an end to, and he said—"The next time, Drummond, you use a bad word on the stage we part!" This was during a performance of Macbeth. "Orl right, guv'nor," replied the god of the machinery; "orl right!" Then, with a voice as gentle as any sucking dove, he addressed his flyman, Bill, thus:—"My own sweet William, will you lower out that blasted heath!"

THE same correspondent forwards the two anecdotes which follow:—When the Voyage en Suisse was put in rehearsal at the Gaiety Theatre, the explosion was not loud enough to please John Hollingshead, the then manager, who, seated in the dress circle, said to the property man satirically:—"Well! Go on with the explosion; we're all waiting!" "It's gone, sir!" replied Props. "I never heard it," said John, chaffingly. "All right," answered the nettled property man, adding sotto voce, "You shall hear it next time!" So he sent to the Lyceum, the Lane, the Adelphi, and elsewhere, and borrowed a dozen batteries; and, when they were charged, asked from the stage "if the guv'nor was ready?" To which practical John, seated negligently with one leg over the dress circle pad, replied, "Yes, and waiting; go ahead!" It "went." The noise was deafening; the orchestra and company fled; dust arose and came down in clouds; Hollingshead fell over backward on to the floor of the circle, from whence he arose with "swear words" on the tip of his tongue. Then were heard the dulcet tones of the property man, who enquired innocently and sweetly, "Did you hear it that time, sir?"

ON one occasion the late "Johnny" Toole opened at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, immediately after the walls of the pit and circles of that theatre had been covered with looking-glass. He did not arrive in the city until the evening of the performance, so was ignorant of these mural innovations. In the farce of The Steeplechase Toole had to don a jockey's red jacket; and, to his intense surprise, saw his reflection moving about at the back of the pit. So he sent round to the front of the house for George Loveday, his manager, and said:—"George, go to the back of the pit; there's a soldier in a red jacket walking about there; every time I move, he moves; go and stop him; he's worrying me frightfully!"

MRS. D'OYLY CARTE writes:—"The recent statement by the Press to the effect that I had given permission for messenger boys to reserve places in the queue at the Savoy Theatre is incorrect. No such permission has been given, and so long as I believe the practice to be distasteful to the public I will do my best to discourage it." The system of substitutes has often given offence to the public. A disgusted playgoer, writing to the papers in 1776, protested against the custom of "permitting a footman to sit for an act or two of a play next to a woman of the first quality by way of securing a place for his absent master."

There could be "no possible doubt whatever" about the success of the revival of The Yeomen of the Guard at the Savoy Theatre on Saturday evening last. The audience, many of whom had gathered outside the doors for hours before their opening, was in a wildly enthusiastic mood. They encored the well-known "numbers" again and again; they applauded whenever there was the least excuse for applause; and at the conclusion they called for Mrs. D'Oyly Carte and Mr. W. S. Gilbert with uproarious enthusiasm, insisting on a second appearance of the genial librettist, who, with his ruddy complexion and military bearing, looked remarkably "fit" and hale. A good deal of this enthusiasm, it may be imagined, was a revival of old admiration and enjoyment; but, besides this, there was a genuine satisfaction with this revival of a unique and intelligent form of amusement. When The Yeomen of the Guard was produced in 1888, some of the patrons of the Savoy were surprised, if not disappointed, with Mr. Gilbert's new departure. After a long string of successes with purely ironical and satiric themes, Mr. Gilbert turned his attention to dramatic construction and interesting incident, and built around a good old melodramatic motive a most effective and agreeable little plot, admirably fitted for musical purposes. A composer is necessarily limited or inspired by the nature of his libretto, and Sir Arthur Sullivan's music for The Yeomen of the Guard is undoubtedly of a higher class than any other of his Savoy scores. The opera is, consequently, better suited for revival than many of the series. It never became as hackneyed as Pinafore, and its success depends less than usual on the form of pleasantry known as "Gilbertian humour," which had such an amazing "vogue" in the eighties. The libretto is a genuinely clever and ingenious piece of work, and the dialogue and lyrics are "replete" with Mr. Gilbert's peculiar literary and humorous qualities. The revival, therefore, does not "date" unpleasantly, and The Yeomen of the Guard will not suffer, as some of the other Gilbert-and-Sullivan operas might, from the extraordinary success of their original productions.

It is inevitable, perhaps, that those who bear indelibly imprinted on their memories the original performances of the principals in the cast of 1888 should make those comparisons which are proverbially odious, and never more so than in connection with acting and singing. But there are many of the rising generation whose estimates of the present cast will not be influenced by any such recollections, and they will find, in the company now at the Savoy, a party of players, "sober, clean, and perfect," and not so much exercised by unconquerable individuality as to refuse to be moulded into the appointed shape by Mr. Gilbert's experienced hand. The only part in The Yeomen of the Guard which demands distinctiveness in its exponent is that of Jack Point; and for this Mrs. Carte was fortunate in having at hand such a clever comedian as Mr. C. H. Workman, who made a decided hit at the Savoy on Saturday. A better reading of the rôle could not have been desired. Its mixture of humour and sentiment was most effective. Mr. John Clulow as Wilfred Shadbolt was in every way excellent, and his performance was thoroughly sound, able, and characteristic. Mr. Alec Johnstone as Sir Richard Cholmondeley was thoroughly satisfying, and his rendering of the part was worthy of warm praise. Mr. Pacie Ripple as Colonel Fairfax acted and sang in a manner which won for him general commendation; Mr. Overton Moyle contributed a most satisfactory embodiment of Sergeant Meryll; and Mr. Henry Burnand's depiction of Leonard Meryll was all that could be desired. Mr. H. M. White made a duly stern and solemn Headsman; and Mr. Frank Beckett, Mr. Leo Sheffield, Mr. Richard Andean, and Mr. Rowland Williams were seen to advantage in minor rôles. Miss Lilian Coomber as Elsie used a sweet and strong soprano with skill, and acted agreeably. Miss Jessie Rose, the Phœbe of the revival, was full of piquancy, vivacity, and spontaneous archness, and sang prettily. Miss Louie Réné as Dame Carruthers did her work remarkably well; and Miss Marie Wilson showed decided promise in the little part of Kate.

The whole production bore the impress of the artistic feeling and painstaking thoroughness which we always expect in a Savoy production; the mounting, the dressing, and the stage-management being almost flawless. This result was obviously due to the liberality and enterprise of Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, to the supervising solicitude of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, and to the thorough knowledge and ripe experience of Mr. François Cellier, who conducted the performance quite unimpeachably, and who is so steeped in Savoy tradition, and so familiar with the score and its treatment as to be able to carry out in detail every desire of the deceased composer. The revival of The Yeomen of the Guard had, in addition to the services of a very clever and competent cast, the advantage of the very best kind of rehearsal. It was not surprising that all this labour and talent met with their due reward of wildly enthusiastic applause. Even after the fire-curtain had been lowered the audience remained clapping and cheering, until absolute physical exhaustion put an end to their demonstrations. Mrs. Carte should feel fully satisfied with her courageous and well-carried-out experiment, and we congratulate her on its triumph.

Mr. Bernard Shaw in one of his prefaces regrets that the text of Shakespeare did not come down to us accompanied by the author's stage-directions and instructions as to "business." Had this happened, it would have simplified the task of revival immensely. On the other hand, there is something attractive in the idea of each fresh producer of a Shakespearean play having a "clean sheet," and full scope for the exercise of his imagination and ingenuity. Each successive reproduction of a famous play is adorned with a multitude of happy inventions, embellishing and illustrating the original idea in a wonderful way. Mr. Arthur Bourchier's revival of Macbeth at the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday afternoon is full of suggestive additions; indeed, there are so many of them, that some may easily escape notice and enumeration. When Lady Macbeth, solus, is meditating on her husband's future greatness, she sits by the fire in her hall, making a most picturesque figure, with her long hair and flowing robes. Macbeth writes the letter to his wife on the stage, in the midst of the soliloquy about the witch's prophesy; and between the two lines,

"Away, and mock the time with fairest show,
False face must hide what the false heart must know,"

Mr. Bourchier goes off the stage, and Duncan and some of his attendants enter, and are led by Lady Macbeth to the banqueting hall. On the line, "We are yet but young in deed," she starts back as if she had seen a ghost, and falls in a faint, while he leans over her affrighted. After the murder of Banquo and the flight of Fleance, the murderers leave the stage, and the lad creeps out from his hiding-place in a bush to weep over his father's corpse. Glamis is pronounced "Glarms." And there are other fertile contrivances, too numerous to mention in detail.

And now as to the general complexion of the revival. Macbeth is a play about which much has been written; and there will always be argument about the characters of the two leading personages. The practical dramatist, however, will at once perceive Shakespeare's difficulty. He wanted to write a play with a "murder motive," and to make it a Soul Drama, not merely one of action and incident. His only chance, therefore, was to endow his homicide with more feeling and imagination than is possessed by the ordinary criminal. The average man-slayer, if we may judge from the accounts in the "Newgate Calendar," is not troubled with "brain-sick" thoughts. Indeed, nothing is more remarkable than the clumsiness with which most murders are committed, the careless way in which detection is almost courted, and the callous contentment of the murderer until detected and punished. To supply a Soul Drama, then, Shakespeare had to make his murderer a man of brains and imagination. The chief difference between Macbeth and Lady Macbeth is that of intelligence. When Lady Macbeth says her husband has too much of the milk of "human-kind-ness"—i.e., what is called "common-sense," the inherited experience of the race—she unconsciously pronounces a criticism on herself. Macbeth is clear-sighted, considerate, rational. He does not believe in a next world; but he is quite awake to the uncomfortable consequences of crime in a society, at any rate, semi-civilised. He is ardently desirous of being King; he is as confirmed a regalo-maniac as his wife. But the difference between them is that he has brain as well as will-power, while she is will-power untrammelled by foresight. The only weak point about Lady Macbeth is her nervous system; that of Macbeth is his imagination. She does not share with her husband the hallucination which leads him to see Banquo's ghost; but when the troubles which he foresaw—but she did not—have worn her out—and to live with an anxious, remorseful, and morbidly-moralising criminal is enough to wear out the strongest woman—then, and only then, she succumbs to nervous breakdown, and commits suicide in a fit of melancholia.

Lady Macbeth is, in short, intensely and essentially feminine. Under the dominion of a passionate, but not personal, ambition, she can quell the tender feelings natural to woman; but it should be noted that her share in the crime has to be committed under the influence of drink. Her limited intellect sees only the immediate results of Duncan's murder, i.e., the pomp and pleasures of sovereignty. She thinks no more of a murder than Nora Helmer does of forging a cheque.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh give readings of the two rôles quite in accordance with these theories. Mr. Bourchier's Macbeth carries out with admirable care and consideration the view of the Thane as a bold and courageous man, whose intelligence, after a poisonous idea has once taken root in his mind, is ever at war with his overmastering desire. Miss Vanbrugh does not make Lady Macbeth a stately, "stand-offish," dignified dame, but a passionate, affectionate woman, engrossed by the one idea of her husband's coming greatness, intense, earnest, and sensitively expressive. The part of Lady Macbeth has been so often stalked through in the "tragedy queen" spirit, that we need to be reminded that the greatest exponent of the personage on record, Mrs. Siddons, was a handsome and pliant performer, whose reading was "full of subtle and delicate touches, and of exquisite passages of tenderness." The tendency of Miss Vanbrugh's treatment of the character is quite in this direction, and her performance is replete with details significant of her view. At certain points she lowers her voice a little too much, and her delivery of the verse has a suspicion of monotony; but these are things which can easily be altered, and we only allude to them in the actress's interest. Mr. Leveson Lane's Duncan is a thoroughly sound and artistic piece of work, full of dignity, benevolence, and kingly ease. Mr. Sydney Valentine's Banquo deserves very warm praise, not only for its excellent technical qualities, but for the subtlety with which Mr. Valentine suggests the gradual growth of suspicion in Banquo's simple and honest nature. Mr. Matheson Lang's fine delivery and manly vigour well fit him for the part of Macduff, and he sustains it with marked success. Malcolm and Donalbain have competent and careful representatives in Mr. Walter Pearce and Mr. Douglas Imbert; and Miss Pamela Gaythorne is an innocent and expressive Fleance. Mr. William Burchill is very commendable as Lennox; and Mr. Acton Bond's Ross is a performance worthy of very warm praise—well-considered, and carried out with all this well-trained artist's genuine ability. Mr. Alfred Bristowe plays Angus effectively; and Mr. Reed does good work as Siward, Mr. Douglas being efficient as Seyton. Mr. Charles V. France plays the Doctor neatly; and Mr. Charles Goodhart does what can be done with the quaint character of the Porter. Mr. Lawson Butt and Mr. Frank Lacy make the murderers a pair of picturesque and resolute ruffians; and Mr. H. Nye Chart, Mr. Arthur Whitby, and Mrs. H. Nye Chart are very weird and awful Witches, Miss Olive Terry and Miss Evelyn Bateman doing well as the Apparitions, and Miss Nora Greenlaw speaking her lines creditably as the Gentlewoman. Mr. R. C. McCleery's scenery is very artistic, and in this connection there are some pretty and poetical lighting effects. Mr. Percy Anderson's designs for the costumes are worthy of his practised pencil. The smoothness and completeness of Mr. Alan Mackinnon's production is partly due to the assistance rendered by Mr. Arthur Whitby. All lovers of Shakespeare must feel grateful to Mr. Bourchier for giving them an opportunity of again seeing a play so seldom acted as Macbeth.

The favourable verdict of Manchester has been thoroughly endorsed by London playgoers. The Vicar of Wakefield was first performed in the Midland town just a month ago; and the enthusiasm then displayed by the audience at the Prince's Theatre was, if anything, exceeded by that shown by those who witnessed the new romantic opera at the London house on Wednesday evening. Mme. Lehmann's music was found to be exceedingly bright and harmonious, and all the principal numbers were so persistently encored that the performance did not conclude until an inconveniently late hour. Perhaps the gem of the new opera was a quartet, which came at the close of the first act, "All day at ebb and flow," which had to be repeated no fewer than three times, and was a perfect vocal triumph for all concerned. The choruses were, without exception, tuneful and pleasing. Mr. Laurence Housman contributed many of the lyrics, but there were also additional lyrics by Oliver Goldsmith, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and others. The story of The Vicar of Wakefield is too well known to require repetition. It is sufficient to say that the leading incidents are included in the present version.

With the important exception of Miss Isabel Jay, who succeeds Miss Violette Londa as Olivia, the cast is the same as at the original production of the piece at Manchester. Miss Jay is as dainty and charming a representative of the Vicar's pretty daughter as could be wished for. She fully realised the innocent country maiden with no knowledge or experience of the wiles of the town-bred young man of fashion, of which Squire Thornhill is the type. Olivia's trustful innocence, her girlish coquetry with her handsome lover, and finally her keen sense of shame when she returns with her father to the home of her childhood were each in turn delightfully expressed. Miss Jay also had a large share in the musical honours of the evening, giving with much brightness and spirit the song in which she foretells by means of a blade of grass whom she is going to marry. Another well-rendered ditty in the second act was "My heart was at rest," and she also scored in the love duet with the deceptive young squire. Mr. David Bispham repeated his admirable embodiment of Dr. Primrose, a touching and delicate performance that greatly impressed the audience. As the kindly, God-fearing country vicar, blessed with a good wife and a healthy, happy family, he was excellently suited, and as the father suddenly bereaved of his favourite child the old man's grief and despair were most naturally and vividly depicted. Fortunately, Mr. Bispham can not only act well, but is an accomplished vocalist, and his services proved of the utmost value throughout. Early in the first act he has a capital song, "Go Fortune, Fortune turn thy wheel," in the refrain of which he is joined by the youthful Dick. Mr. Bispham made one of the most palpable hits of the evening with a neat musical setting of Goldsmith's well-known verses concerning the man of Islington who was bitten by a mad dog. The words were cleverly accompanied by appropriate action in amusing illustration of the incident; and as the Vicar approaches the comic climax of the story the country lads and lassies and the harvesters gather around. It was indeed remarkable what Mr. Bispham made of Goldsmith's lines, so that every point told. Mr. Walter Hyde was a handsome and gallant Squire Thornhill, passionate in his courtship of Olivia and duly repentant in the last act, when he returns to ask pardon of his bride and her father and mother, whose hospitality he has so basely abused. Mr. Hyde's tenor voice was heard to great advantage in the music which fell to his share. A chorus song, "Oh, life is made of ups and downs," was well received, and he was even more successful with the love ballad, "There are birds in the valley." He also contributed to the success of the duet between the lovers, already mentioned, and of the part-songs. Mr. Richard Temple played the part of "Mr. Burchell" in a manner that was thoroughly in keeping with the character, and very successful was he in his rendering of "With my pack on my back I go" and other numbers. Miss Edith Clegg did all that was possible with the part of Sophia, and both as actress and vocalist deserves warm praise. Mrs. Theodore Wright's ripe experience as a player was of great value in the part of the Vicar's wife, whom she presented as a cheerful, motherly dame with some amiable weaknesses. Mr. Arthur Eldred was well placed as Moses, and Master Gordon Travis as the lad Dick proved he was the possessor of a delightful tenor voice by his artistic rendering of Shakespeare's verses, "It was a lover and his lass." Mr. Charles Lander gave a convincing character-sketch of Mr. Jenkinson, and Mr. Powis Pinder was sufficiently bucolic and uncouth in the part of Farmer Williams as to render Olivia's objection to marrying him quite reasonable. The so-called Lady Blarney and Miss Skeggs had excellent exponents in Mme. Amy Martin and Miss Valerie de Lacy. Little Miss Elfin Arthur was pleasing and natural as the boy Bill, and Miss Bella Wallis appeared as a gipsy. Mr. Hamish MacCunn, the musical conductor, performed his duties efficiently, and Mr. Richard Temple was stage-manager, assisted by Mr. Arthur Willerby. The pretty scenery was from the brushes of Messrs. Joseph Harker, W. T. Hemsley, and Harry Potts.

It is a curious feature of modern "realistic" art that most of it is an indictment of the existing order of things. Without exactly advocating Socialism, it is bitterly dissatisfied with the system of capitalistic production, and it devotes much of its strength to an exposition of the evils of present arrangements. The process of "rubbing it in" to the middle and upper classes, who are the chief supporters of the theatre, still goes on in foreign lands; and, though many things have happened since Die Weber—or De Waber, as it is called in Silesian patois—was first performed at the Deutsches Theatre, Berlin, in the February of 1893, there is such a strong appeal in the piece to the elementary instincts—pity for the starving and sympathy with the oppressed—that we can quite believe that a first-rate revival by German actors would affect an audience in the same way as did the original performance.

Vivid as it is in the remorseless actuality of its details, The Weavers, as a work of art, is unsatisfactory. It is a historical sketch, dealing with a phase of industrial life. Hauptmann took for his subject a period of sore distress in a certain trade; distress such as was felt in England in the Napoleonic times, when the Orders in Council brought many manufacturers to ruin, and hundreds of factory workers to the verge of starvation. But the distress came to an end; it was only a phase, after all. There is no glimmer of hope, however, in Hauptmann's piece. On the contrary, such is the "inspissated gloom" of his view that he does not even give his indignant audience the satisfaction of shooting the manufacturer. The person whom the audience see slain is a harmless old man, who sticks to his work and does not join the rioters. Previous to this, our feelings have been deeply harrowed by the spectacle of the privations of the helpless mechanics. Their work is found fault with by a malicious manager; their pay is cut down to starvation point; and they consider roast dog as a rare and dainty luxury. At last they rise in crazy despair, storm the manufacturer's house, and smash his furniture. But nothing comes of it except the accident to the old man who stops at home and sticks to his loom. In a work which depends on its effect upon realism, an impression of reality is the first requisite; and that the Stage Society's revival of the piece at the Scala Theatre on Monday afternoon certainly did not create. Careful and conscientious as the acting all round was, it had not that quality of engrossing conviction, which alone could have made The Weavers interesting and enthralling. Amongst the performances which stood out from the background in excellence was that of Mrs. Calhaem, whose Mother Baumert was a graphic and pathetic picture of miserable and garrulous old age, full of truth and character. Mr. Kenyon Musgrave was capital as the hard, polished, and self-satisfied manufacturer; and Mr. G. Kay Souper gave a striking embodiment of the harsh and cruel manager Pfeifer, Mr. Cecil Rose being quite satisfactory as a cashier and a clergyman. Mr. Fred Grove put plenty of senile shakiness into his performance as Old Baumert; and Mr. H. R. Hignett did good work as Old Ansorge, Mr. Arthur Wontner giving a spirited reading of the rôle of Moritz Jaeger, and Mr. Philip Knox making a bold, defiant, and demonstrative Becker. Mr. Henry Kitts supplied a neat rendering of Welzel; and Mr. Athol Forde was highly commendable as Hornig, Mr. Robert Farquharson and Miss Isabel Grey, as the Hilse couple, also deserving praise. The production of the piece, by Hans Andersen, was creditable.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

An orchestral concert was given at the Royal College on Tuesday evening. The concert commenced with Mendelssohn's fine overture "Hebrides," in which the young students, led by their accomplished conductor, Sir Charles V. Stanford, did themselves no little credit. In the Three Elizabethan Pastorals, "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance," by A. Herbert Brewer, the most effective was "Amongst the Willows," which, however, suffered in some degree by the clever, but over-elaborate, orchestral accompaniment. The Pastorals were admirably sung by Mr. Denis Byndon-Ayres. Dvorák's Concerto for Violoncello in B minor was played by Miss Beatrice Jones, who in the opening movement was slightly rough in tone, but in the beautiful Adagio, with its plaintive melody, both soloist and orchestra were in more perfect harmony, and at the close Miss Jones received a most hearty recall. Max Bruch's scene, "The Battle" (Die Schlacht), was sung with real dramatic feeling and power by Miss Dilys Jones, who possesses a fine mezzo-soprano voice; and the concert concluded with a clever performance of Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D. A large audience were present.

A GRAND orchestral concert will be given by the Crystal Palace Orchestral Society, assisted by the Palace choir of 300 performers, this afternoon at the Crystal Palace. The programme will include selections from Weber, Beethoven, Liszt, Cowen, and Massenet. Herr Vigge Kihl will give pianoforte solos, and Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock (musical director of the Palace) will conduct.

MR. FORBES-ROBERTSON, being unable, owing to a temporary affection of the throat, to play his part of Cæsar in Cæsar and Cleopatra, at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, on Wednesday, Nov. 28, his understudy, Mr. Halliwell Hobbes, took up the rôle for three performances.

Mr. Ballard, late master carpenter at the Colliseum, has been appointed master carpenter at the Aldwych Theatre, and will accompany Mr. Hicks to his new theatre in Shaftesbury-avenue. Mr. G. H. Darer, who was recently wtih Mr. Hicks at the Aldwych, is now master carpenter at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, and Mr. Fred Lersh has been appointed property master at that house. Both were former members of Sir Henry Irving's staff.

On Sunday evening last the first of a series of concerts for members, their wives, and friends of the Musicians' Club was given in the club's new premises in Trafalgar House, Newport-street. There was a good attendance, and an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music was rendered. Mr. James O'Grady, M.P., was to have presided, but was unable to be present. Mr. J. B. Williams, the general secretary, from Manchester, was present. The club committee have issued an invitation to the heads of the various stage departments to become members of the club. The secretary, Mr. C. Jesson, L.C.C., will be glad to show visitors over the rooms.

At a meeting of the provisional committee of the Daymen branch of the National Association Theatrical Employees, held during the week, a draft of the by-laws for the branch was considered and copies issued to members. It was decided, owing to pressure of work in connection with the Christmas productions, to adjourn the meetings of the committee to the first Friday in January. The general meeting of members will be held on the second Sunday in January.

The action of the Variety Artists' Federation in connection with the Brixton Empress and Hippodrome has aroused great interest among the members of the Stage Employees' Association and the Musicians' Union. This feeling has been increased by the proceedings at the meeting of the "V.A.F.," held in The Horns Hotel, Kennington, on Sunday last, at which Mr. J. B. Williams, general secretary, Mr. C. Jesson, London secretary of the Musicians' Union, and Mr. William Johnson, secretary of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, spoke, and were warmly welcomed by the large and enthusiastic meeting. Since that day an informal conference of representatives of the three societies has been held, at which a recommendation was agreed to for submission to the Executive Committee of each Society, which has been ratified by the committees concerned, and will pledge these societies to joint action in the present dispute.

A general meeting of the Carpenters' Branch of the "N.A.T.E." will be held on Sunday evening in the Salisbury Hotel, St. Martin's-lane, at eight o'clock. All members are urged to attend. Among other matters to be considered is the question of federation with the Musicians and Variety Artists' Societies.

A meeting of stage employees will be held in the Hare and Hounds Hotel, Upper-street, Islington, at eight o'clock on Sunday evening, The action of the variety artists and the candidates for the L.C.C. election are among the subjects for consideration.

SALE OF THE LYCEUM.

Mr. Brougham Glasier, of the firm of Glasier and Sons, of St. James's-street, S.W., offered the Lyceum Theatre for sale at the Auction Mart, Tokenhouse-yard, on Thursday afternoon. On a previous occasion, it will be remembered, no sale was effected, the property being withdrawn at a bid under reserve price. The auctioneer, after an eloquent description of the property, stated that the sale was made under order of Mr. Justice Kekewich. In addition to the theatre, with its seating capacity of 2,750 people, there was included in the property shop and business premises at Nos. 33 to 37, Exeter-street, and No. 21, Wellington-street, Strand. The purchase had to be completed by March next. The rebuilt theatre had been passed by the County Council, and was ready to be re-opened. The reserve price was fixed by order of the Court. The land on which the property stood was undoubtedly of high value, and in the Strand it realised 15s. to £1 per foot. Mr. Glasier suggested that the site value was worth £6 per foot for the freehold. There was a total of footage equal at that value to not less than £141,000. They ought to add to that at least £50,000 as the cost of the theatre, while the contents were "thrown in," and were worth £4,000 to £5,000; so that they got near to a total of £200,000. The first bid was £100,000, followed by one of £105,000, then by one of £110,000, it being decided to take rises of £5,000; then £115,000 was bid, next £116,000, £117,000, and £118,000, and the auctioneer objected to £1,000 rises. Then came £119,000 and £119,500, at which the property was sold. The name of the purchaser was not made public.

THE NEW TIVOLI, LIVERPOOL.

Miss Vesta Tilley has had a wide, but none the less pleasant, experience in connection with the ceremonial of launching new enterprises, and the pleasant little function of Saturday afternoon, when the popular artist laid the commemoration stone of the New Tivoli Theatre of Varieties, Liverpool, will be sure to be numbered among the happy events of her life. "I declare this stone well and truly laid, and I wish the Tivoli every success," were the words uttered by Miss Tilley as she gracefully performed her pleasant duty in the charming vestibule of the new house. The company then adjourned to the auditorium, where a little speechmaking was indulged in. Mr. J. Kiernan, on behalf of the promoters, thanked Miss Tilley for her kindness in gracing the proceedings that afternoon, and referred to the fact that theatres of that description, with their two houses a night, had done much to provide entertainment for a class of people who previously were unable to afford to pay a big price for their amusement.

Mr. Walter De Frece remarked that they had every hope that the new theatre would be successful. To-day there was fierce competition in the music halls, but the Tivoli was not intended to compete against any existing theatre of its kind in the city. Its object was rather to satisfy a long-felt want in this part of Liverpool. He had pleasure in announcing that when Miss Vesta Tilley had fulfilled her present engagements, she would appear on the boards of that theatre. He assured them that nothing would occupy that stage that they would be ashamed to bring their wives and sisters to witness, and he hoped that twelve months hence the directors would be able to say that they had kept their promise to provide a bright and refined entertainment.

The Tivoli Palace of Varieties will accommodate 1,500 people, viz., stalls 150, circle 300, pit 500, and gallery about 600. No attempt has been made in the exterior appearance of the theatre in the way of elaborate ornamentation, but inside nothing has been left undone which would tend to appeal to the artistic eye as well as the comfort and convenience of the audience. In fact, it has been aptly described as the most luxurious and the cosiest house of varieties in Liverpool. The decorator has shown his skill to the best advantage in a scheme of blue, pink, and gold, while the upholstering throughout is of a rich and attractive character. The proscenium, which is 20ft. wide and 24ft. deep, is adorned by large heavy plush and old gold tableaux curtains, which enhance the general beauty of the internal fittings.

It is interesting to note that, with the exception of the doors, windows, barriers, and seats, there is no wood in the building, everything practically being of concrete, this safeguarding the theatre against risk of fire. The main entrance to the stalls and circle is from Lime-street, that of the pit and gallery being gained from Back Lime-street. Ample provision has been made in regard to exits, and the whole building is liberally lighted by an electric installation. The theatre is a two-tier house. On the ground-floor are the stalls and pit; the first tier is devoted to the dress circle, above which is the gallery. The stage "gives on" to seven dressing-rooms, with excellent accommodation for the artists. The fact that the Tivoli has been erected on the site of the long-popular St. James's Hall, where Sam Hague's Minstrels performed so excellently in days gone by, is looked upon, at any rate, as a happy augury of the success of the new hall, which was opened to the public on Monday. The old site has been retained, but nothing whatever remains of the old structure, and Mr. Bertie Crewe, the architect, who designed the new Lyceum, the Standard, and planned the Bedford, may be congratulated upon having realised so many possibilities in the new building.

TOURING MANAGERS' ASSOCIATION.

A general meeting of the Touring Managers' Association was held at the premises of the Managers' Club, Savoy-mansions, on Friday afternoon, Mr. E. Lockwood (the president) occupied the chair, and the following gentlemen were present: Messrs. J. Bannister Howard, G. M. Polini, Wentworth Croke, Cecil Barth, Luscombe Searelle, Rollo Balmain, Michael Dempsey, Muskerry Tilson (hon. solicitor), and G. B. Lambert (hon. secretary).

IRVING MEMORIAL.

It was decided that the Touring Managers' Association should be represented at the meeting to be held at the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday next by eight members of the Association.

The question of payment for rehearsals, which has been put forward by the Actors' Association, was discussed, and the secretary was instructed to forward to the secretary of the Association the conditions agreed upon for the consideration of the Council, and, if approved of, they are to be included in the form of joint contract now existing between the two Associations.

The subscription of members of the Touring Managers' Association to the Club was considered, and it was decided that no advance should be made in the subscription, notwithstanding the success that has attended the establishment of the club. A vote of thanks to the chairman, hon. solicitor, and hon. secretary terminated the meeting.

A meeting of the committee of the Managers' Club was afterwards held, and a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. J. Bannister Howard for having on Sunday last so successfully inaugurated the social evenings. It was decided that the second social evening should be given on Sunday, Jan. 20, Mr. E. Lockwood will preside, and has undertaken all the necessary arrangements for the programme. All members of the club are cordially invited, and each member has the privilege of introducing two friends, provided the secretary is duly notified.

"EAST LYNNE" IN MINIATURE.

On Monday, Dec. 10,
a Sketch, in Three Scenes, arranged by Mrs. Bennett from Mrs. Henry Wood's story, entitled
"EAST LYNNE."

Archibald Carlyle .....Mr. E. E. Norris
Francis Levison .....Mr. Walner Gregory
Detective Brown .....Mr. Jack Scott
Barbara Hare .....Miss Florence Harcourt
Little Willie .....Miss May Madeson
Lady Isabel .....Mrs. Bennett

A speciality is being made by Mr. Jack Woolf at the Queen's, Poplar, of the production of dramatic sketches on an elaborate scale, and this week has witnessed the staging of East Lynne in a manner which would reflect credit on a West End hall. The playlet is confined to three scenes, and portrays the flight of Lady Isabel in response to the persuasions of the unscrupulous Francis Levison. The story of her degradation is alluded to in the third episode, which depicts the arrest of Levison for the murder of John Hallijohn, and the final scenes are those of the death of Little Willie and his devoted mother. Mr. Woolf, under whose supervision the piece was produced, has mounted the sketch with a liberal hand, taking full advantage of the facilities for effective display presented by the enormous stage, and studying every detail, however minute. The drawing-room set is lavishly decorated, a handsome tapestry carpet combining well with the massive furniture and elegant appointments. The lighting effects are also skilfully utilised, brilliant electric light chandeliers setting off to advantage the handsome interior. Effective music has been supplied by Mr. Fred Venton, the conductor of the hall.

In the selection of the cast Mr. Woolf once more shows the possession of an experienced eye, and by the engagement of artists of ripe experience and practised methods has secured a performance which is wholly admirable. Mr. Ernest E. Norris, who rendered invaluable aid in the supervision of rehearsals, gives distinction to the part of Archibald Carlyle, suggesting with perfect conviction the nobility of nature of the injured man. Every scene in which he takes part is acted with rare finish, and to this effect Mrs. Bennett as the woful Lady Isabel contributes in no less degree. Mrs. Bennett and Mr. Nelson have been long associated in triumphs in melodrama in the past, and their performance of the telling scenes in the present production fully maintain their reputation. The pathos of the parting with the dying child is delineated with deep poignancy, and the subsequent reconciliation between husband and wife is made equally acute. Miss May Madeson is a pretty and talented representative of Little Willie, speaking with natural emphasis and acting realistically, and Miss Florence Harcourt cleverly allies the deceit and malevolence of Barbara Hare with an attractive appearance. Mr. Walner Gregory draws a vivid picture of the evil-natured Levison, playing with suppressed passion that is very artistic. Humour also enters into his impersonation, that quality being prominent in his encounter with the police officer who comes to arrest him. The officer in question is no longer a constable, but a detective, and he was smartly presented at the hands of Mr. Jack Scott, who serves to modernise the piece, by an ingenious little witticism in which the names of various motor-'buses figure. The audience received the piece in appreciative silence, with frequent outbursts of cheers.

Mr. Woolf, it may be added, is constantly studying the comfort of the patrons of Messrs. F. and M. Abrahams' hall, which is admirably lit, and presents a bright interior. Heavy draperies at the entrance to the vestibule now preclude all chance of draughts, and a system of heating recently introduced keeps the auditorium warm and cosy—a similar provision for the comfort of the artists being extended to the stage and dressing-rooms.

MUSIC-HALL CRISIS AND LICENSING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—In the general comments in the Press on the music-hall strike and licensing I have not noticed that attention has been called to the origin of the mischief, and that is the refusal of the L.C.C. to grant the same liberty to the management at Brixton with their place of entertainment on obtaining their licence as is given to their competitors elsewhere.

Undoubtedly the Council can make any condition they like. They can say—and they "have" said—"you either take your licence as we give it you, or you do not take it at all"; but surely what is fair for other parts of the Metropolis is good enough for Brixton. That the prices of admission are small is not an argument against these places of entertainment.

Many councillors do not care about exercising their functions as licensing justices, while, to go a little deeper into the matter, it is only fair to say that the result has been brought about by deputations waiting on Labour members within the Council, who are endeavouring to create a trade union amongst variety artists, who, until this warfare, have lived in amity and on terms of good feeling with the various proprietors and directors who engage their services.

The licensing of places of entertainment in this huge Metropolis is a matter of public importance. It not only affects those who are heavily rated, and employ large numbers, but it affects the people, who require proper entertainment at prices comfortably within their means; and it seems that the time is now ripe for the revival of the resolutions recommended some time in 1901 by the Theatres Committee—"that it be referred to the General Purposes Committee" to consider and report upon the question of the present procedure of the Council in regard to the licensing of theatres and music-halls, on which an amendment was proposed by Sir Melvill Beachcroft that the words be added "and whether any alteration of the law is desirable." No less than thirty-five members of the Council voted for the said amendment.—Yours faithfully, HENRI GROS.

IN MEMORIAM.

George Le Brunn. Died Dec. 18, 1905.

George, dear old chum, a year has well-nigh fled
Since you from earthly ties were called away;
And yet your mem'ry lives, green as the bay,
In hearts to which you never can be dead.
We miss the cheery laugh—the gay words said
In blithe good-fellowship, and turn away,
Lest others see within our eyes the spray
That at the fount of Memory is shed.

Light lay the sod above thy head, dear George!
The hand that touched the harp, alas! is mute:
Death stilled the melody that thou didst forge—
Death made the "little rift within the lute."
But when the travail of this life is o'er,
Perchance we'll hear thy melody once more.

JOHN P. HARRINGTON.

Mr. Dorrindge will produce the pantomime, Robinson Crusoe, at the Empire, Oldham, on Saturday next. A strong company includes Miss Marguerite Ruby, Miss Venie Clements, the Sisters Cora, Miss Jeannie Ruby, and Miss Lillian Calden, and Messrs. Harry Ray, Flocton Foster, Arnold Richardson, Tom Fancourt, Earnest Laws, Alfred Selby, Elton and Elma, and the Monte Carlo troupe.

Mr. Herbert Barrs will present his pantomime Aladdin at the Grand Theatre, Mansfield, on Boxing night.

AMUSEMENTS IN BIRMINGHAM.

Theatre Royal.—Managing Director, Mr. Tom B. Davis; Acting-Manager, Mr. Philip Rodway.—Miss Camille Clifford made her first and only appearance in Birmingham prior to her retirement from the stage, at a flying matinée here on Monday, when she had a cordial reception from a crowded and interested audience. Miss Clifford vouchsafed her now famous ditty, "Why do they call me a Gibson girl?" from The Belle of Mayfair, which she supplemented with her equally famous Gibson Walk, evoking the most enthusiastic plaudits thereby. The fair artist was accompanied and assisted by Miss Margaret Cooper, Mr. Josef Holbrooke, Mr. George Grossmith, jun., Miss Clara Evelyn Smith, Mr. J. F. McCormack, Miss Ivy Angore, Miss Violet Elliott, Mr. Allen Turner, and Miss Clara Alexander. Miss Louie Risbey acted as accompanist. Mlle. Janotha, the famous Polish pianist, also appeared; and Miss Margaret Cooper's contributions were much appreciated.

Prince of Wales's Theatre.—Lessees, Messrs. Rodgers, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. J. F. Graham; Acting Manager, Mr. Henry Johnston.—Mr. James Welch and company remain here from last week in the highly-successful farce, When Knights Were Bold, which continues to attract large houses.

Grand Theatre.—Proprietor, Mr. J. W. Turner; Manager, Mr. Victor Turner.—Messrs. H. Armitage and Arthur Leigh are doing good business here with Leah Kleschna. Miss Bessie Rignold graces the title-rôle in an admirable manner; Mr. Paul Belmore invests the character of Kleschna with an indomitable will and admirable fire; Mr. William F. Grant creates an excellent impression as Paul Sylvaine; Mr. Hamilton Deane gives a most effective portrayal of Raoul Berton; Mr. Campbell Goldsmid does capable work as Schram; Mr. Roland Daniel is successful in the fullest degree, both as General Berton and Valentine Favre; the Misses Ethel Russell and Helene Belgrave act admirably as Madame and Claire Berton respectively; and Miss Violet Thorold is very satisfactory as Sophie.

Alexandra Theatre.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Lester Collingwood.—Mr. George Kirk and Miss Mary Neil present that new and excellent drama, Her Luck in London. Miss Neil as the heroine, Nelly Harborne, declaims her stirring lines with thrilling effect, while her pathos melts all hearts; Mr. G. Langdon as her tempter, Richard Lenowen, plays on the audience's feelings in a clever manner; Mr. Charles A. Leicester displays all the virtues and courage of the stalwart young Irishman, O'Connor; Mr. Douglas Treymayne is successful, and highly popular as the Rev. Lionel Strong; Mr. Tyrone Power simulates the stern attributes of Stephen Harborne most successfully; Miss Frances Bruce acts gracefully as the dutiful Lilian Harborne; Miss Ada Rosco plays the vengeful rôle of Mme. Gabrielle with admirable zest; while her remorse in the latter stages is well depicted; Miss Florrie Groves acts with sparkling animation as Maud Gladys Shovepenny, and her bright looks are a considerable asset in the play; and Mr. J. Tilly Dillsen, Mr. Bruce Chapman, Miss Pamela Hodson, and others prove exceptionally successful in their parts.

Metropole Theatre.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Andrew Melville; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Hindle Taylor. — Siberia is the attraction here, played by Mr. Andrew Melville's own company. Mr. Melville appears as one, Michael Trolsky, described as a "general nuisance," albeit, Mr. Melville's excellent powers of comedy make him a general favourite. Miss Rose Ralph as the tiger lily, Sara, acts with fine spirit, and frequently moves the audience to tears and applause; Mr. Percy Dawsone adds to his popularity with his vigorous action as Nicholai; Mr. F. A. Mackensie represents the character of the libertine and oppressor, Jaracoff, with his usual robustness; Mr. Edward Finlay bears himself as Sparta in an appropriate spy-like manner; Miss Jessie Yatman wins much sympathy with her wistful air and pretty acting as the demented girl and victim, Marie; Miss Amy Corelli is vivacious as Vera; and Miss Alice May, Miss Maud Sanders, Miss Grace Ingles, Mr. William Leyton, Mr. Herbert Young, Mr. Francis Everard, and Mr. Chas. Harker, with several others, take prominent parts.

Carlton Theatre, Saltley.—Licensee and Manager, Mr. James Alexander.—Miss Grace Warner and company keep up the attendance here with their well-staged performance of The Scarlet Clue. Miss Warner's histrionic powers are well proved in the rôle of Sal Scarlet; Mr. George Gordon makes many admirers as Michael Stanton; Mr. Reginald Brown makes a clever distinction in his acting of the twin-brothers, Jack and Harry Esmond; Miss Hilda Herne acts with admirable effect as Elsie Dane; Miss Kathleen Cranston sustains her part as Mother Scrooge with apt realism; and Miss Anna Corrie as Tabitha is well suited. Mr. Arthur Page portrays the rôle of Crazy Jim with the utmost success; Mr. J. L. Leigh appears in a highly-diverting style as Billy the Rotter, and contributes several successful songs; the Misses Phyllis Massey and Violet Palfrey are favourites by reason of their clever efforts in the juvenile rôles of Reggie and Polly respectively; and Mr. Edgar Bruce, Mr. Jack Clarence, Mr. Richards, and Miss Mobray contribute ably. The Little Widow and My Artful Valet are also in the week's programme.

Theatre Royal, Aston.—Lessee, Mr. Charles Barnard; General-Manager, Mr. E. Hewitson; Acting Manager, Mr. Frank Whittles.—The French Spy gains a flattering reception here for Mr. Fred Benton and company. Mr. Benton, in his cleverly-humorous rôle of Fritz, is a great attraction, and scores hugely; while Miss Cissie Cleveland as Julie makes a most useful ally. Miss Madge Devereux acts with splendid ability as the Countess Andre; Miss A. Harrison Tate gives a fine distinction to the rôle of Olga; Mr. Beresford Lovett impresses the audience favourably as Captain Summers; Mr. Max Coutts acts well and powerfully as Count Romanoff; and Mr. L. Chaseby as Lieut. Maxwell, and Mr. Hugh Travers as General Trepoff, contribute much to the success. The other rôles are exceedingly well rendered, including Mr. Chas. Digby as Viscount Alexis, Mr. Claude Aymond as Lord Aynsley, Mr. Seymour Perry as Knipps, and Mr. Rex Ward as Revelski.

Empire.—Resident-Manager, Mr. A. W. Matcham.—Carl, the diminutive individual, is just a copy of Little Tich. Crystal Gazing is a particularly fascinating sketch, dealing with the occult, of which art Mr. Carl Hertz is giving some amusing and puzzling exhibitions; Alf. Gibson's "immovability" is well known and appreciated; the Rio Brothers are particularly graceful gymnasts; and the Brendon Sisters are good duettists and dancers. Adeline Yohle and the Horne Brothers are also on the bill.

Gaiety.—General-Manager, Mr. Albert Bushell.—Cruikshank, "the fool of the family," heads the bill this week. He is very original and humorous. Another really good turn is Mount and Corelli, in a musical duologue; Mrs. Oscar Luck and company have a good sketch, entitled Kismet, which is greatly appreciated; an excellent musical turn is presented by the Two St. Johns; Herbert Bates, tener, has a good voice; Fred Barnes is a capable character vocalist; and Conan and Doyle are successful comedians. Alma Obrey has some catchy songs; and the Wheelers are clever and quaint cyclists.

Hippodrome.—Managing-Director, Mr. Thomas Barrasford. — As the star turn this week, Ada Reeves receives a magnificent welcome. As a comedienne she is unsurpassed. Her charming vivacity and piquancy, together with her catchy songs, secure for her a triumph. The Bensons have an exceedingly good musical act; Les Rallis give a clever acrobatic act, The Artist and His Monkey; Wilton Heriot and company appear in a sketch, entitled An Anglo-American Alliance; and other turns which go to fill up an admirable programme are Winona and Colonel King, expert rifle shots; Belrose and De Velin, operatic duettists; the Four Maisanos, eccentric musicians; Arthur Stacey, comedian and dancer; and Miss Billie Burford, vocal comedienne.

Bordesley Palace.—Resident-Manager, Mr. Edward Foster.—Fred Maxwell and company occupy the premier position on a good all-round bill, with a dramatic sketch, entitled Dick Dare, M.P. The Henry Taylor Trio of equilibrists are responsible for a brisk display; the Mezettis are clever on the triple bars; Cliff Ryland gives an amusing number; Walter Curtis, comedian, is much appreciated; Gertrude Bradshaw has a fine soprano voice; and Frank Darwin, actor-vocalist, is well received.

MUSIC HALL SICK FUND.

The monthly committee meeting of the Music Hall Sick Fund was held on Wednesday at the York Hotel, York-road. Mr. W. J. Waimatta (vice-president) occupied the chair, and there were also present Messrs. Frank Heath, G. Desmonti, Percy Don, Tom Carney, and H. E. High.

A telegram was received from the president, Mr. Pat Carey, who is on tour in the provinces, expressing his regret at being unable to be present, and wishing his fellow-members the compliments of the season. The secretary (Mr. R. T. Baines) also read a letter from Mr. Carey, thanking the committee for the framed illuminated address which was presented to him on the occasion of his recent marriage.

An interesting item in the business of the meeting was the presentation to Mr. John Harmsworth Deakin, of the York Hotel, of a handsomely-framed illuminated address, which read as follows: "Music Hall Sick Fund Provident Society.—Dear Sir,—We, the committee and officers of the above Society, desire to place on record our appreciation of your invariable kindness and courtesy to the members at all times during the many years the York Hotel has been under your management, and to ask your acceptance of this address as a small token of our esteem." The names of the committee followed.

The presentation was made by the chairman, who bore testimony to the interest which Mr. Deakin had taken in the Society and the kindly, courteous manner in which he had always treated the officers and members.

Mr. Deakin expressed his thanks for the great honour the committee and officers of the Society had done him in making him a presentation. If he had rendered the Fund any slight services it was because he felt that it was an institution well worthy of support. It was not dependent upon charity; and members of the profession were only asked to make reasonable provision for sickness and old age. He again thanked them for this recognition of his services. After the transaction of some private business the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

COVENT GARDEN BALL.

Although there is generally a dull time just before the Christmas holidays, there was again a good attendance at the Covent Garden fancy dress ball, which took place on the night of the 7th inst.; and, thanks to the opening up of the stage to promenaders, it was easier to move about than has previously been the case this season. The new background, the Lakes of Killarney, was greatly admired, and the rearrangement of the bandstand was also highly approved. Dancing began at midnight, though there were early-comers even before that hour. The many handsome prizes offered by Messrs. Rendle and Forsyth resulted in a keen competition. The approach of Christmas was denoted by a design entitled "Under the Mistletoe Bough," a dress of white satin handsomely painted, while a bower of mistletoe was arranged over the head. Another dress which was appropriate to the season was "Holly," and a third was a Christmas Tree. Mr. Dan Godfrey's excellent orchestra proved, as usual, one of the most important and pleasing factors of the entertainment.

During the singing of "Emmie's Christmas Tree" Miss Emmie Ames distributes toys to audiences, who are delighted with the presents showered upon them. So successful has this act been that Miss Ames is booked up until 1909.

Mr. Henry Herne and Miss Ida Millais will reappear in their startling water sketch, Blackmail, on Dec. 24, at Manchester, where they will have a seven weeks' run of return dates with Messrs. Broadhead.

Miss Margaret Radcliffe, one of our most charming principal boys, has been specially engaged by Mr. Clarence Sounes to play Abdallah at the New Prince's Theatre, Poplar, at Christmas.

Mr. Lawrence Derrick and Miss Marian Brereton, who have been so successful during the past summer season at the seaside piers and pavilions, have been engaged for a short tour up North with the Mannon Troupe, in the well-known sketch Uncle Yank.

Mr. Arthur Williams and Mr. Edmund Payne, the eminent comedians, have written a sketch, entitled A Private Box, which Mr. Arthur Wallis will produce on Monday at the South London Palace.

Miss Flo Hylton, the well-known male impersonator, gave evidence last week in a case where a girl named Ruth Barrington, who lives in Ardwick, was charged with using Miss Hylton's name and duping a number of people. The prisoner was sent to gaol for a month.

The Smythsons leave town for a provincial tour on Sunday next, opening at the Palace, Southampton, in their latest laughter-raiser, Love Germs.

FOLLOWING on the striking and unparalleled triumph in New York of Leslie Stuart's Belle of Mayfair—which is tersely described by a great American critic as a "landslide success," or one that carries all before it—there now comes, as a natural sequence, accounts of demands almost for incredible numbers of copies of the score and of the separate numbers. Brother Jonathan and his wife, perplexed by the number of gems in the work, and not knowing which to choose for the best, are simplifying matters by "going the entire animal" and buying them all! Messrs. Francis and Day have accordingly taken steps to cope with orders unprecedented in the history of the house.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER,
BY
ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).

Copyright confusion is, like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his text-book on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" Office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases, what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL ENCROACHMENT.

A startling evidence of the despotic view which the present County Council takes of its powers over providers of amusement was furnished by the action recently taken by the Council in the matter of the Brixton Hippodrome, formerly the Brixton Theatre. Until recently the premises had been licensed for stage-plays, and the structural arrangements had been "passed" as satisfactory. The report of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, on which the County Council recently adjudicated at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, recommended that a licence for music and dancing should be granted subject to an undertaking that no intoxicating drinks should be sold or consumed on the premises; and 2700 residents in Brixton had signed a petition in favour of the music hall licence being granted. Then a Mr. HUBBARD rose, and moved the extraordinary amendment "to add to the words of the recommendation the words and that no more than one performance a night be given." More extravagant than the proposal was the fact that, on a vote being taken, thirty-one members supported the amendment, fifteen only voting against it. The licence was then granted, hampered by the restriction that only one performance should be given each evening.

In calculating how far the powers of the County Council as a licensing body extend, we must consider the spirit of legislation in the matter. Music hall licensing commenced in 1751, when the Act 25 Geo. II., c. 36, authorised and empowered the Justices to grant such licences as they "in their discretion" should think proper. By the Local Government Act of 1888 (51 and 52 Vict., c. 41), the licensing of houses for music and dancing within the metropolitan area was transferred to the London County Council. These licences, as to the county of Middlesex, are governed by the Music and Dancing Licences (Middlesex) Act of 1894; but Brixton, of course, is on the "Surrey side." The point is that the Council, in all respects, stepped into the "Justices'" shoes.

It was evidently the intention of the Legislature that it should be "in the discretion" of the magistrates to license, or not to license, a music hall, according to "the place and position of the house, the nature of the neighbourhood, and the kind of persons who would be likely to assemble in such a house." Opposition on these grounds has hitherto been considered reasonable. It may be regretted as being bigoted or misguided; but the opponents have been looked upon as "playing the game." But this new departure of the Council—not of its Theatres and Music Halls Committee, be it understood, but of the body sitting as Licensing Authority—is tyrannically absurd. The only opposition which can reasonably be made to granting a music hall licence must be grounded on the imperfection of the actual building or on the objection of a majority of the inhabitants of the district to a new place of amusement being planted in their midst. The means which the manager may use in order to attract the public are, if they offend not against decency, morality, or safety, entirely outside the jurisdiction of the County Council. The idea of dictating to a manager as to the number of separate performances he shall give in the course of an evening is extravagantly unreasonable. What difference can it make to the local public whether one, two, or even more performances take place in the course of an evening? From the point of view of the opponents of public amusement, every hour spent by a man in a music hall is a waste of his time. Admitting this for the purpose of argument, the shorter the duration of the entertainment given, the better. The opponents of amusement ought, therefore, to warmly welcome the adoption of the two-houses-a-night system. As a matter of fact, where there is a working-class as well as a middle-class population the method is an excellent one. The first house is made up of the early-rising working men, who are enabled to get to bed at a suitable hour after their enjoyment; while the second appeals to those whose time of arrival at business is later. Just indignation, too, may be felt at the sneer of a County Councillor at the moderate price charged for the cheaper seats under the "two-houses-a-night" system. Are the comparatively poor residents in a district, then, not to be considered? Is amusement only to be provided for the well-to-do and prosperous, who need recreation so much less than the labouring classes, and have so much more lightness and brightness in their lives? The fact is, the fulness of "discretion" given to the licensing body at the present day is an anachronism. The Act which granted it was passed at a time when "places of entertainment were a great cause of thefts and robberies," and when any pleasure enjoyed by the "lower class of people" was considered unjustifiable. The County Council is not a bench of Justices of the Peace, appointed by a superior authority, but a civic parliament elected by the people to carry out the wishes of the people. It is responsible for its acts to the public, who are its masters; and public opinion is an influence which can be brought to bear upon it. The matter is purely one of principle, and affects music-hall and theatrical managers alike.

THE DRAMA IN PARIS.

"LE VOLEUR,"
Play, in Three Acts, by M. Henry Bernstein, produced at the Renaissance on Dec. 7.

Marie-Louise Voysin	MME. SIMONE LE BARGY
Isabelle Lagardes	MME. MADELEINE VERNEUIL
Richard Voysin	M. LUCIEN GUITRY
Raymond Lagardes	M. FELIX HUGUENET
Zambault	M. ARQUILLIERE
Fernand Lagardes	M. ROGER VINCENT

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, DEC. 13.—M. Bernstein's play Le Voleur has had a chequered career before it saw the footlights at the Renaissance. Originally intended for the Gymnase, it emigrated to the Renaissance, because Mme. le Bargy, too ill to play for M. Alphonse Franck, at once recovered her health to interpret her rôle at M. Lucien Guitry's house. Then came the action brought by M. Franck against Bernstein, which ended in the latter paying the Gymnase manager a sum as damages. The new piece met with a splendid reception, which, however, must not be accepted as a proof that the work is good. The public, unfortunately, is the same in every latitude. The moment they enter a playhouse they leave common sense at the door, and if the author is smart enough to keep them amused, he can make them swallow the most impossible situations. Victorien Sardou possesses that gift in a marvellous degree, and his younger colleague has apparently profited by the veteran playwright's lessons. The scene of the plot is laid in the country house of the Lagardes. Raymond Lagardes has married a second time, and lives happily with his young wife and his son Fernand, a youth of nineteen. Three guests are staying at the house. We meet there Richard Voysin and his wife Marie-Louise. They have been married only a year, and are very much in love with one another. Although Richard Voysin is not half as rich as his friend Lagardes, Marie-Louise's toilettes are as costly as those of Mme. Lagardes. But she is so clever at picking up bargains that everybody compliments her on her skill. Young Fernand Lagardes has fallen in love with her. He writes her letters, and implores her to grant him a rendezvous; but Marie-Louise is wrapped up in her husband, and only laughs at the youth. The third guest is M. Zambault. He is supposed to be one of M. Lagardes' old friends. In reality he is a former judge, and now an amateur detective. M. Lagardes has sent for him because for the last few weeks money has mysteriously been abstracted from a drawer in Mme. Lagardes' boudoir. Over eight hundred pounds have been stolen, not all at once, but in small lots at a time. M. Zambault sets to work, and after a week's investigation informs M. Lagardes that he has found out the thief, who is no other than young Fernand. The horror-stricken father sends for his son, who owns having taken the money. For some unexplained reason, the Voysins have assisted at this scene, and in the second act Voysin and his wife discuss the affair. Voysin cannot understand how it was possible for Fernand to open, as he says, the locked drawer with an ordinary pen-knife; and he experiments on a drawer in their room. The lock gives way, and seeing his wife's pocket-book, he opens it before she can stop him. Inside are a bundle of bank notes; and Marie-Louise, severely questioned by her husband, is compelled to confess that it was she who stole the notes because she was anxious to look as pretty as other women and have toilettes that would please her husband. And then it dawns upon Voysin that it is very strange that whereas it was she who took the money Fernand acknowledged himself the culprit. He tells her that she must be Fernand's mistress, and refuses to believe her when she indignantly denies this accusation. But when, at her husband's command, she admits her guilt to M. Raymond Lagardes and exonerates Fernand, Voysin has no longer any doubts; and we learn that the youth, knowing that she was the thief, had sacrificed himself. M. Lagardes cannot well prosecute his friend's wife, and it is therefore arranged that the Voysin couple shall emigrate to South America. As the excitable, perverse Marie-Louise, Mme. le Bargy had a rôle that suited her to the ground; and the other parts were also excellently played.

THE Théâtre du Chatelet has given us Pif, Paf, Pouf, a fairy play in three acts and thirty-eight tableaux, by MM. Victor de Cottens and Victor Darlay, who, seemingly, are under contract to supply this house every year with one spectacular piece. In a performance of that kind the scenery is of more importance than the story, and it is therefore but right that we should pay our first compliment to the scene-painter, who acquitted himself well of his task. The tableaux are very successful, especially that of the Barnum Circus, with Japanese, clowns, monkeys, cowboys, equestrians, &c.; and we observe here the curious feature that whilst theatrical managers introduce circuses in their performances, our circus proprietors are slowly changing their shows into a theatrical performance. The plot is not complicated. Mme. Coquiron, a rich widow, wants to re-embark into matrimony. She has two admirers: Hernandez, a South-American adventurer, and Follembuche, a Parisian, whose pockets have run dry. Mme. Coquiron admires men with an adventurous spirit, and Hernandez therefore informs her that he is starting for the North Pole. The widow is delighted with him; but when Follembuche says that he, too, intends to explore that region she is perplexed, and promises her hand to the one who returns first. They start on their dangerous trip, and we have the pleasure of accompanying them and watch the thrilling incidents on the road. It is hardly necessary to say that it is the Parisian who secures the prize. MM. Claudius, Pougaud, and Mme. Jeanne Bloch do the funny business, and keep up the laughter. The others, too, play with much entrain, and the play promises to be a success with Paris children and their parents.

"POLICHE,"
Comedy, in Four Acts, by M. Henry Bataille, produced at the Comédie-Française on Dec. 10.

Didier Meireuil	M. DE FERAUDY
Boudier	M. HENRY MAYER
Le gérant	M. HAMEL
Laub	M. RAVET
François	M. CROUE
Lecointe	M. LECOINTE
Saint-Vast	M. GRAND
Thérésette	MLLE. LECOMTE
Rosine de Rinck	MLLE. CECILE SOREL
Augustine	MME. LYNNES
Pauline Laub	MLLE. BERTHE CERNY

M. Henry Bataille's new play met with a cordial reception. It is a sad story he tells us, and he tells it well. Poliche—the abbreviation of Polichinelle—is the nickname given to Didier Meireuil, because he is the "funny man" who makes everybody laugh. No pleasure-party is complete without him. We soon perceive that Didier is not "funny" by temperament. He only plays the clown to please the flighty Rosine de Rinck, whom he loves, and who always wants to be amused. At curtain rise we see him and Rosine arrive in a motor-car at a restaurant in Saint-Cloud, where they want to have luncheon. We also meet there Laub, a vulgar man, with his wife Pauline; Thérésette, a giddy young person; and Boudier, Poliche's bosom friend. Unfortunately they find nothing ready at the restaurant; the place is not yet in order, and the waiters are busy cleaning everything. But the resourceful Poliche comes to the rescue, and goes to the kitchen to prepare the luncheon. Whilst he is downstairs another guest walks in. It is M. de Saint-Vast, an officer, a professional lady-killer. Rosine and Pauline Laub are not proof against the man's fascinations; for, while Pauline makes an appointment with him at an "afternoon tea" place, Rosine allows him to call the following day. Rosine even allows him to kiss her at once; and whilst Saint-Vast holds her in his arms Poliche walks in, a white apron tied round him and a frying-pan in his hand. The funny Poliche roars with laughter at this kissing scene, and Rosine laughs with him. She cannot help it. Poliche is so droll! But when Poliche is alone with Boudier, he falls fainting in his friend's arms. The blow has nearly killed him. Rosine has given herself to Saint-Vast; but she discovers that the fascinating man deceives her with Pauline Laub. Should she have had any doubt upon the subject Pauline soon opens her eyes, for, in an admirable scene between the two women, Pauline, proud of her conquest, is only too happy to inflict pain on her rival. And Poliche? Nearly heart-broken, he bears his grief in silence, when the faithful Boudier comes to the rescue. He tells Rosine that she is slowly killing Poliche, whose love for her she has never understood. He comes at an opportune moment. Rosine bears Saint-Vast ill-will for his treachery, and, moved to pity, she promises never to leave Poliche. The delighted Poliche presses her to his heart, and together they leave for Fontainebleau to spend the summer in the forest. But Poliche no longer plays the clown. Rosine begins to feel bored, and thinks of the beautiful Saint-Vast. As ill-luck has it, Thérésette calls on Rosine and tells her that the fellow is in the neighbourhood, and wants to meet her. Poliche has overheard the conversation. He begins by overwhelming Rosine with reproaches, but he stops suddenly. He understands that Rosine has attempted the impossible; that he is not one of those who can expect to be loved for themselves. He will drain the cup to the last drop, and takes her to the train that is to carry her back to Paris. At that supreme moment Rosine's better feelings take the upper hand, and she offers to remain with him. But Poliche shakes his head; it is too late. We hear the whistle of the engine, and she is gone. And Poliche? He will leave Paris; he will disappear; like other "funny men" whose rôle is finished have disappeared. The interpretation was superb, especially by M. de Féraudy, whose impersonation of Poliche was an artistic treat.

THE MANAGERS' CLUB.

THE first Social of the Managers' Club was given under the presidency of Mr. J. Bannister Howard, who by his charming personality and good fellowship had attracted a large number of his brother managers to this pleasant function. The conveniently arranged and tastefully decorated rooms were quite filled by managers and friends, amongst whom were Messrs. J. B. Howard, E. Lockwood, E. G. Falcon, Cecil Barth, Rollo Balmain, J. E. Watson, William Martin, Wentworth Croke, W. Muskerry Tilson, Andrew W. Spens, J. H. Pedgrift, J. Weathersby, R. F. Symons, F. Lunnon, W. C. Simpson, M. Dempsey, A. Howard, C. McLagan, &c., &c. The following excellent programme was presented and stage-managed with ideal smoothness by Mr. Cecil Barth:—Overture, Mr. W. Brightwell; the "Excel Quartette," "Comrades in Arms"; "My heart's at your feet," Miss Kate Leicester; "The Colleen Bawn," from The Lily of Killarney, Mr. Allen Morris; "Satisfied with Life," Mr. Johnny Clegg; "A Summer Night," Miss Daisy Lake; "Oh, hear the wild winds blow," Mr. H. V. Cropton; "She didn't know, she didn't care," Miss Molly Winter; "Mother of Mine," Mr. Stewart Gardiner; "Strange Adventure," Yeoman of the Guard, the "Excel" Quartette; a. "The night has a thousand eyes," b. "O Anthea," Mr. Dolphin; Ventriloquial Interlude, Mr. John Warren and Marmaduke; Il Bacio, Whistling Solo, Mr. Frank Lawton; "My heart's in the Highlands," Mr. John Doran; a. "Obstination," b. "If I built a world for you," Miss Nora Long; "Son of Mine," Mr. Fred Pedgrift; "With my Guitar," Miss Isa Bowman; "Father keeps on doing it," Mr. A. E. Passmore; Whistling Solo, Mr. Arthur Melrose; "Because," Miss Kate Leicester; Musical Sketch, Mis Amy Brooke; "I wore a rose," Miss Daisy Lake; "Algy," Mr. Walter Walters. With social converse, intermingled by the performances of clever entertainers, the first "Social" was voted a great success, and the hope was expressed that it was only the precursor of many more. Mr. J. Bannister Howard was thanked for his successful endeavours in providing so interesting an evening.

MR. J. T. GREIN, the dramatic critic of the Sunday Times, has been appointed London editor of the Paris daily, Gil Blas, and also dramatic editor of the Londoner Zeitung (Herman). Mr. Grein will make the best use of his added opportunities to further the cordial relations in matters of art between England, France, and Germany. The Gil Blas is now under the control of the well-known publisher, Mr. Paul Ollendorf and Mr. A. Perivier, late of the Figaro. The London editorial office is at Vaudeville House, Shaftesbury-avenue.

THE spirit of the season will be maintained at the Vaudeville at Christmas, when a harlequinade, elaborately mounted and dressed, will be added to The Belle of Mayfair. All the stars of the company will give brilliance to the production, Mr. Arthur Williams being the clown, Miss Billie Burke the columbine, Mr. Farren Soutar the harlequin, Mr. Sam Walsh pantaloon, Mr. Charles Angelo a swell, Miss Louie Pounds a fairy princess, and Miss Camille Clifford as Automobilia.

THE DRAMA IN BERLIN.

"LISELOTT,"
Comedy, in Four Acts, by Heinrich Stobitzer, produced at the Berliner Theatre, Dec. 7.

King Louis	HERR MERTEN
Duke of Orleans	HERR STIFT
Lenor	FRAULEIN VON HELLING
Frau Scarron	FRAULEIN TROST
Liselott	FRAU VIERNA
Grancai	HERR BENZINGER
Von Lorrain	HERR WEINSCHENK
Zofe	FRAULEIN WEGNER
Jean	HERR SCHULZ

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BERLIN, THURSDAY, Dec. 13.—Frau Vierna, of Munich, is giving a short season here. She is an actress of no small talent, but is so wealthy that she does not need to make a profession of her art, and frequently devotes the proceeds of a whole tour to charitable purposes. In Liselott Frau Vierna had a rôle which suits her down to the ground; her exquisite humour has seldom been seen to more advantage, and a large audience tendered hearty applause. Of the play itself there is not much to be said. It is in the style of Madame Sans-Gêne without the latter's wit. The piece is written round the name-part; the other characters are well-nigh superfluous. Liselott is the German Princess Elisabeth Charlotte, who left her peaceful home in Heidelberg to marry the Duke of Orleans, brother of King Louis XIV. The intrigues, the immorality, and the malice of the French people (who gave her the nickname of Princess Sauerkraut) made her soon long for her native country again. But the young Duchess is brave as she is charming. She determines to keep her husband's love—which, in consequence of the perpetual enmity directed against his wife, is already on the wane. How she succeeds must be seen to be appreciated; she discards her ugly German garments for more becoming apparel of the very latest Parisian mode; she even descends to a ruse whereby to make the Duke jealous. All she does is so womanly and fascinating that her husband is soon at her feet again, and the Duchess hears him—to her joy—call her Liselott, a German name he could or would not hitherto pronounce. The delightful acting of Frau Vierna completely carried the somewhat poor play; the remaining characters were made as much of as possible by the members of the Berliner company. Herren Merten and Stift and Fräulein von Helling giving the best renderings.

FRAU VIERNA commenced her season with a German version of La Dame aux Camélias. In the rôle of Violetta she held her audience spellbound, and it is a matter of opinion whether the clever artist is better in tragedy or comedy. From a financial point of view the "gastspiel" has proved as much a success as it has been artistically speaking, each night being "sold out," as the box-office proudly announced. The entire proceeds of this season are promised by Frau Vierna to the pension fund of the German Stage Association.

THE long-expected production of Richard Strauss's opera Salome—a year later than the production at Dresden—proved a great success. The Opera House booking was completed days before the event, and there was not a vacant seat from floor to ceiling. It will not be necessary to describe the work, which is already known—from hearsay, at least—in every part of the musical world. Oscar Wilde's plot is dramatic and realistic enough to suit any modern composer, and Dr. Strauss has done full justice to the subject. There are persons who venture to take exception to the drastic realism, and who also declare that the music does not compare favourably with the composer's earlier opera Feuersnot, but these are in the minority. Salome is the great musical work of the day, and no opera-house of any pretensions to fame will be happy till it gets it. As regards the interpretation at our Royal Opera, it was one of the most brilliant and painstaking performances I have ever witnessed here. Fräulein Destinn in the title-rôle carried off the palm, her rendering being magnificent. The characters of Herodias (Frau Plaischinger), Herodes (Herr Kraus), Jochanaan (Herr Hoffmann), and others were, too, admirably sustained, and the work was superbly staged. A decidedly weak point was the dance of Salome being executed by Fräulein dell' Era (the première danseuse of the Royal Opera), who has not the faintest resemblance to Fräulein Destinn; consequently the intended delusion was patent to all. Dr. Strauss himself conducted, and the augmented orchestra performed their stupendous task in a most praiseworthy manner. That the composer was applauded to the echo—as was also Fräulein Destinn—and that the utmost enthusiasm prevailed without a single dissenting voice, it is scarcely necessary to record.

MR. BERNARD SHAW'S Man and Superman, under the German title Mensch und Uebermensch (translation by Siegfried Trebitsch), was produced at one of the "Kammerspiel" evenings at the Deutsches last week. It met with a cordial reception, but did not make any particular impression, the general opinion prevailing that the piece was much less interesting than most of the author's works. It was adequately interpreted, Herr Wegener giving an excellent account of the part of John Tanner, and Fräulein Höflich making a very sympathetic figure of Ann.

LUDWIG AUZENGRUBER'S well-written farce, or "peasant-burlesque," to give it the author's signification, Doppelselbstmord, was produced at the Schiller last week with the most favourable results. It is full of sound humour, and every justice was done to it by the good all-round cast.

ANOTHER broad French farce by the popular collaborators, MM. Hennequin and Veber, has made its triumphant entry at the Residenz Theatre, there to hold the boards well over the Christmas holidays. The title is Florette und Patapon, the German translation and adaptation being the creditable work of Herr Benno Jacobson. Herr Alexander, of course, takes the chief rôle, creating roars of laughter nightly. In the principal female parts Fräuleins Witt, Rocco, and Dewark also make their mark.

FRAULEIN FRIDA HEMPEL, from the Court Theatre at Schwerin, sang the part of Gilda in Rigoletto at the Opera House on Tuesday. The young artist has made distinct progress since her last appearance here, both vocally and in her acting—which latter was somewhat crude. Fräulein Hempel's beautiful voice filled the large house well, and her audience waxed more and more enthusiastic as the work proceeded, frequently applauding by open stage, which is unusual at the Royal Opera.

"EINE LUST/OR DOPPELEHE," the latest production of the popular farce-writer, Herr Kurt Kraatz, is running merrily at the Thalia, filling the bill to the exclusion of all else. It is—as the title suggests—a pot-pourri of misunderstandings and laughable complications, to detail which would be an almost impossible task. Herr Lincke has supplied some very sparkling incidental music, and Herr Schoenfeld is responsible for the amusing patter-songs. That Herr Thielscher—our first-rate comedian—carried off the chief laurels is a matter of course, but he was capitally supported by other prominent members of the company.

AN adaptation of Conan Doyle's "Hound of the Baskervilles," by Herren Oswald and Philipp, was produced with scant success in the theatre of the Secession Exhibition on Monday. The piece was a failure owing to unskilful construction and unsatisfactory acting.

FRAU NIKISCH, wife of the famous conductor, has written a Christmas play, entitled Das Tausendschönchen, which has just been produced at the Hamburg Thalia Theatre with a good deal of success.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

The East Ham Palace will be opened on Monday by the syndicate of which the chiefs are Messrs. G. Adney Payne, Henry Tozer, Joseph Davis, and Henri Gros, who will run the place on the two-houses-a-night plan, a method that will surely meet with the approval of the large working population catered for. Mr. Arthur J. Barclay will be manager, and Mr. W. A. Bassett, for some years conductor of the Granville, Walham Green, orchestra, has been appointed musical director. The architects of the new house are Messrs. Wylson and Long. The whole of the scenery and the new act-drop have been specially designed and executed by Mr. Francis H. Bull.

The main result of the action of the Variety Artists' Federation, which was reported in our issue of last week, and which was confirmed by a large meeting of the profession at the Horns, Kennington, on Sunday, is the closing down to-day of the Brixton Hippodrome, and the reversion of the Empress to the original plan of one house a night. This closure will affect some six hundred contracts and throw a large staff out of work. Towards the benefit entertainment that is being got up on behalf of the unfortunate workers behind the scenes, and in front of the house, Mr. Walter Gibbons has sent a cheque for fifty guineas.

Mr. Justice Jelf, on Tuesday, consented to the original interim injunction granted last week being extended to the trial of the action, and amended the writ by including the whole of the Executive of the V.A.F. as defendants.

An important meeting of managers was convened at the offices of the Variety Theatres Consolidated on Wednesday afternoon when, we are given to understand, the situation was discussed, not only by members of London directorates, but by provincial representatives having important variety interests in the country.

The demands formulated in the charter of the Federation are briefly as follow:—(1) No matinées without payment at any twice-nightly hall; (2) no transfer of artist to be made without his or her consent; (3) no alteration of the time to be made without the artist's consent; (4) Managers not to deduct commission or agents' fees from artists; (5) the "barring" of an artist to be limited to any hall within a mile, and not to be for more than three months either side of that engagement; (6) the establishment of a board of arbitration.

The V.A.F. is receiving the support of the Brixton Trades and Labour Council, which body has issued posters proclaiming a "lock-out" at the Brixton music-halls, and issuing the following notice:—"If you do not see all the Stars advertised at the Empress and Hippodrome, it is because the management will not allow them to fulfil their contracts." This action, undoubtedly, precipitated the closing of the Hippodrome.

By kind permission of the directors, a grand matinée will be held at the Empress, Brixton, on Wednesday, on behalf of the staff and employees thrown out of employment by the closing of the Brixton Hippodrome. It was intended to have opened the Brixton Hippodrome on Oct. 22, but owing to various reasons the reopening did not take place until Dec. 1, and the majority of the employees were engaged over two months ago, and now, after being employed only two weeks, they are again out of employment, and through no fault of their own.

At the meeting of the London County Council on Tuesday, the Parliamentary Committee recommended that a clause in the General Powers Act to be presented in the next Session of Parliament providing for vocal music in connection with band performances in the parks, should be withdrawn, the explanation given being that the Bill was so laden with contentious matter that the proposal in question would provoke further and dangerous opposition. Mr. Sankey, chairman of the Parks Committee, protested against a decision of the Council, carried by a majority of two to one, being over-ridden by the Parliamentary Committee, whilst other members arguing outside the limits of the committee's recommendation, expressed fears that "vocal music" would let in opera singers and music hall artists, who would have to be paid for their services.

Mr. Jesson, one of the Labour members, argued in favour of putting the band performances in the parks on a business basis, i.e., that higher charges should be made for admittance to the seating ring, pointing out that at present a person could enjoy a chair for three hours at the small cost of one halfpenny. His suggestion, if carried, would bring revenue to the Council. One of those who supported the withdrawal of the clause was Mr. McKinnon Wood, M.P., who decried music-hall artists and Christy Minstrels appearing on the bandstands in the parks. In the result, the Council agreed to the withdrawal by 54 votes to 33.

Mr. Ernest Polden on Wednesday afternoon presided at a meeting of the Palace Theatre, Limited, which was held to consider two resolutions put forward by certain shareholders. The Chairman said he thought this meeting might put an end to the attacks that had been made upon the directors. They challenged anybody to suggest anything that needed investigation. In the year 1895 the directors of their own accord reduced their fees. That was a bad year. But when, in a following year, they were paying high dividends, they reverted to what they were entitled. The suggestion that the directors had appointed their friends to the Board was untrue. The resolutions were declared to be lost, as the result of a poll.

The sketch bogey has been laid for a time, for we learn that the members of the London Entertainments' Protection Association have been advised by their executive to sign the agreement with the Theatrical Managers' Association which allows music-hall managements to play one sketch of not more than thirty minutes' duration at each performance, the speaking parts not to exceed six, but without limitation as to supers and scenery, and at the same performance to play one other sketch of not more than fifteen minutes' duration, with not more than three speaking parts, no supers, and no change of scenery. The agreement reserves to the music halls the right to apply to Parliament for fresh legislation on the subject of stage plays in music halls.

Such legislation need not be cumbersome or complex. A simple enactment empowering a public caterer, directing a place of entertainment properly equipped and pronounced safe by the L.C.C., to apply for a double licence should be sufficient. Either permit should be in the hands of a judicial authority permanently appointed, and to smoke or not to smoke in the auditorium should be left to the option of the person running the show. There are several houses double-licensed in the provinces and with a managerial option as to smoking, and surely what is good for the provinces and suburbs is good enough for London proper.

Mr. Albert Gilmer, of the new Palace of Varieties, Stoke Newington, will receive his many friends at a private view on Thursday afternoon next. The establishment will be run on a business arrangement that has been come to with the Walter de Freece circuit, who will act, literally speaking, as "house agents."

It is announced that the opening of the new permanent Coventry Hippodrome takes place on Monday, Dec. 24.

The Halifax establishment of the Macnaghten circuit will in future be known as "The Palace and Hippodrome."

The Grand Theatre, Halifax, closes after this week, but will re-open on the 22nd as a variety house. A goodly list of "stars" has been booked to appear early in the new year.

A special matinée at the Palace, Carlisle, lent by Signor Rino Pepi, took place on Thursday, in aid of the Chief Constable's Poor Children's Clothing Fund. Several extra turns in addition to the regular company gave their services.

The success of two special matinées at the Leicester Palace Theatre has led to their regular adoption, and morning performances on Thursday have become an institution. The price of admission is most reasonable, and patrons have a most elegant theatre and an excellent entertainment.

The directors of the New Tivoli Palace of Varieties, Lime-street Liverpool, on Tuesday, gave a luncheon to a number of friends in the Adelphi Hotel, when a presentation was made to Mr. James Kiernan, of the Irving Theatre, Seacombe, who is one of the debenture holders of the new venture. From the directors, friends, and members of the company came a cabinet of cutlery, while Masonic brethren presented a silver rose-bowl. The gifts were stated to be "an appreciation of Mr. Kiernan's assistance in the promotion and opening of the New Tivoli."

The New Hippodrome, Coventry, which has been erected at a cost of £27,000, opens on Monday next. The house is lit throughout by electricity, has a stage 30ft. by 36ft., and will seat 2,000. Mr. T. M. Sylvester, the manager, we are given to understand, is now forming a company with a capital of £100,000, for the purpose of erecting similar places of entertainment in six other towns.

The Glasgow magistrates have granted a full theatrical licence till May—with the relaxation regarding smoking—to Mr. William Henry Howard, who will shortly re-open the Gaiety. For thirteen years prior to August, 1904, Mr. Howard was manager of the Glasgow Empire. The licence of the Gaiety was formerly held by Mr. Bernard Armstrong. This expired on the 10th inst., and the house had been closed since the 17th ult.

The South African football team paid a visit to the Ardwick Empire on Tuesday evening prior to their match with Lancashire on the following day. The players were met and welcomed by Mr. H. Hall, the Ardwick Empire's manager, who then conducted the team to their boxes. The orchestra played "See the conquering hero comes," and the mighty audience who had assembled to see the Colonials roared out a welcome. After thoroughly enjoying the programme, "Auld Lang Syne" was played, and the Springboks gave their deafening warwhoop as a kind of parting "Good-night."

Mr. J. L. Graydon celebrated on Wednesday evening his thirteenth anniversary at the Brighton Alhambra. As a special turn the M'Naughtons arrived from the Palace Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue, about eleven o'clock to oblige, and were enthusiastically received. Other prominent attractions were Malcolm Scott and Miss Maud Mortimer. During an interval the popular managing-director thanked the audience for rallying round him as they had done, not only on the evening in question but during the whole time he had been connected with the house. He also thanked the artists. Mr. Ernest Lepard, the courteous manager, worked with a will, and Mr. A. W. Leggett, the able chef d'orchestre, was kept busy handing up lovely bouquets to each lady performer. Several London friends came down in a special saloon to be present, and spent a happy evening.

A case of some importance to the variety profession was heard at the West Hartlepool County Court, on the 7th inst., before his Honour Judge O'Connor, K.C., when Messrs. Everton and Cragg, proprietors of the Empress Theatre, Hartlepool, brought an action against an artist named Captain Bevan, proprietor of a troupe known as the Gordon Highlanders, to recover £60 as damages for the non-fulfilment of an agreement to appear for one week ending Nov. 5. Mr. Harry Burns, manager to the plaintiffs, stated that special pictorial posters were ordered in connection with the "Gordon Highlanders' Troupe," whilst there was expense incurred in the printing of other bills, and in the employment of "sandwich" boys. His Honour gave judgment for £50.

Mr. R. Everton, of the Empress Theatre, Hartlepool, made an application on Monday for permission to open that house on Christmas Day. He declared that "neither Christmas Eve nor Christmas Day are really good days, but that every little helps."—The Chairman (Mr. Yeoman): Why is Christmas Eve no good to you, Mr. Everton?—They walk about, sir, playing musical instruments, or attempting to play them.—The Chairman: The request is not for any charitable undertaking?—No, sir; it is to pay the artists' salaries.—The Chairman: By a majority, the magistrates have decided not to accede to the request.

There was a crowded house at the Palace, Sheerness, on the 5th inst., it being the ninth anniversary of Mr. Phil Reymond, whose appearance was greeted with loud cheers. After singing several of his popular character songs, he thanked one and all for their kind patronage during the past nine years, and assured them that he and his wife would always conduct the Palace on first-class lines, and make it a credit to the town. His remarks were loudly applauded, and as he was about to retire Mr. J. Hullett came on the stage, and in the name of the artists, staff, and a few friends, presented him with a handsome illuminated testimonial as a mark of esteem. Mr. Reymond sincerely thanked the donors, and Mrs. Reymond also thanked the audience for their kindness.

After most successfully appearing at the Euston, the Canterbury, the Paragon, &c., in Tea for Two, Charles Collette, accompanied by Miss Joan Derry, leaves London for Scotland, starting to-night, for a short provincial tour with their sketch, commencing on Monday at the Palace, Aberdeen.

The friends of Miss Nellie Wilson will be pleased to know that she is improving in health after her recent operation at St. Thomas's Home. She is enjoying the sea air at Hastings, and hopes soon to resume business.

Mr. Will Murray, the popular manager of the Palace, Blackburn, has been presented by his charming wife with a little girl, the birth being on St. Andrew's Day (Nov. 30).

Lorna Doone, the child dancer, has been re-engaged by Mr. Oswald Stoll until 1910. The gifted little girl is the daughter of Mr. Austin Boyd.

On Dec. 27 there will be held, at the London Music Hall, a special matinée for artists (recognised) who, through changing their acts or other reasons, are unable to get work. Proprietors, managers, and agents will be personally invited.

Messrs. Harry Daniels and Co. have produced at the Bedford this week, with very gratifying success, a new original pantomimical sketch entitled Rent. The problem is treated in quite a humorous vein, and roars of laughter have greeted the production.

Miss Millie Hylton has before coquetted with the legitimate stage, and some years since made a famous principal boy at the old Gaiety. She is returning to her old love at Christmas, having been secured by Mr. Charles Macdona to play La Bolero, Miss Ethel Irving's original part, in Mr. Popple. Miss Hylton has just returned from a Stoll tour, in which she has scored a great success by her singing of "The Zuyder Zee," of which song she is the original singer.

Mr. George Lashwood was on his way to fulfil an engagement at the Hackney Empire on Monday in his brougham, which was being drawn by a young horse, when, without any warning, almost immediately opposite the Kennington Theatre, the animal bolted, and, despite every effort made by the driver, dashed into an electric car coming from the opposite direction. The horse was instantly killed, the driver very badly injured, and Mr. George Lashwood's head severely cut and his left ear torn. Despite the many wounds about his face and head, Mr. Lashwood has pluckily kept faith with the public, merely missing his Monday turn.

Mr. Albert Gilmer, who will open the Palace, Stoke Newington, on Monday, the 24th, has appointed Mr. Norfolk Megone musical director of the house. Mr. Megone was director of the Royal when that house re-opened under the auspices of Mr. Harry Lundy, and has distinguished himself by his musical doings at the Devonshire Park, Eastbourne.

Mr. Joe Elvin has been an attraction at the Oxford for many past Yuletide seasons, and he will again be delighting enthusiastic crowds during the festive season by his cockney comedy, which will find a new environment in Mr. Blyth-Pratt's production, The Sunny Seaside, from the accomplished pen of Mr. Wal Pink. This will be a triumph of realism even to sand, sea, boats, and bathing, and all the fun of the seashore. A matinée will be given on Boxing Day.

Mr. Ernest Shand, who is at the Hackney Empire next week, is an ardent motorist, and journeyed from town to town during his last tour of the Moss-Stoll circuit, in his 8-10 h.p. Wolseley. In nine months of that tour he travelled no less than 7,000 miles without an accident. A touching incident is told of the devotion of Mrs. Shand. When Mr. Shand was struck down with small-pox she could not bear the idea of being separated from him, and, declaring that she also had the dread disease, she was admitted to the hospital. She did not contract the scourge, but her devotion was well repaid, and she walked arm-in-arm with her husband in the grounds during the convalescent stage.

The chief Christmas attractions to be presented by Mr. Alfred Butt at the Palace will include Little Tich, Chirgwin, R. A. Roberts, in a new protean sketch, the famous mare Princess Trixie, and Les Molasso, whirlwind dancers. A specially-written playlet, entitled Christmas Eve, prettily illustrated, will also be a much appreciated feature of the entertainment, and matinées have been specially arranged for visitors from the country and young people.

At a recent meeting of the British Constitutional Association, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That in the opinion of the council and committee of the British Constitutional Association experience has proved that it is unsatisfactory for an elected body, such as a county council, to be entrusted with the responsibility of licensing, or refusing to license, places of public entertainment, and as it is understood that a measure is about to be introduced for altering the constitution of the London County Council, a memorial be presented to His Majesty's Government asking for provision to be made in the Bill for the transfer of the licensing powers from the London County Council to a judicial body."

We are promised a novelty next Monday night at the Hammersmith Palace in an entirely new "go-as-you-please" sketch, entitled A Hot Old Time, which will be produced under the direction of Tom Terriss and Robert Perris. Tom Terriss has already brought a great number of successful American pieces to Great Britain for other people, which have never failed in their mission, so that we have every confidence in his latest venture. He was responsible for the production at the Empire of Rogues and Vagabonds and Venus, 1906, and is also producing special numbers in Robert Arthur's pantomimes and the Drury Lane annual. Robert Perris has been for many years touring musical plays and dramas round Britain, where his name and reputation invariably spell good business. A Hot Old Time will play about twenty minutes, will have a cast of six people, and will be one long scream of laughter from start to finish. It will appear at Hammersmith at nine o'clock, and it would seem to be wise to advise managers in search of a novelty to witness this trifle.

Mr. Charles Gray has been engaged by Mr. Albert Gilmer as stage-manager of the Palace Theatre of Varieties, Stoke Newington. Mr. Gray was for many years in a like capacity at the Oxford, and his father, the late Harry Gray, also put in thirty years' service at the celebrated house in Oxford-street.

The powerful dramatic sketch, The Yellow Fang, recently described in our columns, will be submitted at the Hackney Empire on Monday by Mr. J. G. Grahame, the well-known actor. It deals with a phase of life quite new to the stage; realism in every particular is aimed at; and the scene is an opium den in San Francisco.

Mr. Sidney Bacon's success, The Duchess of Tooting, occupies a star position this week at the Oxford, where its mirth-compelling qualities and happily-arranged incidents are justifying the high reputation the sketch obtained during its sojourn in outer London. It will be retained by Mr. Blyth-Pratt at the popular house next week.

Every available seat at the London Hippodrome has been acquired by the public for the Boxing Day performances—of which there will, as usual, be two. The advance booking is extremely heavy, and Mr. Frank Parker's production of The Treasure Ship in Fairy Seas seems to be quite a topic of speculation—so much so, that seats for that day are changing hands at a premium. Mr. Carl Kiefert will be responsible for the much-talked-of "Swimming Waltz," and also the incidental music.

Mr. Paul Valadon, the famous illusionist and sleight-of-hand performer, desires to contradict the report of his death, and incidentally to deny that there is any truth in the statement that has been made that he has dissolved partnership with Mr. Kellar—admittedly the head of the profession in America. He joined Mr. Kellar in September, 1904, after having been Mr. Maskelyne's sleight-of-hand star for five years at the old Egyptian Hall. Mr. Kellar and he are only playing first-class theatres. Eventually Mr. Valadon will carry on the whole show himself.

The latest recruit from the legitimate to the variety stage is Horace Lane, who has just finished a long run in The Dairymaids. He opens at the Tivoli on Monday with two new numbers, "Beautiful Kate," and "What more can I do, little girlie?" Both of these are among the most recent issues of Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter, and are from the pens of A. E. Sidney Davis and Hermann E. Darewski, jun., the author and composer of the big pantomime song "Au revoir, my little Hyacinth."

The engagement of Miss Vesta Tilley at the Palace Theatre has been postponed for a month to enable that popular lady to visit Monte Carlo with her husband, Mr. Walter de Frece.

The Tivoli burlesque, Robin Waller; or, the Maid of the Mill-Ard By, to be produced on the 24th inst., bids fair to be one of the funniest skits in which the genial Arthur Roberts has appeared since his comic opera days. The last scene is Ye Village of Aldwych; or, the Council's Bloomer, and one can imagine the mercurial Arthur let loose upon such (building) material. His plaintive and pathetic appeal to the villagers to rent the waste lands immediately and reduce the rates is a screamer.

The cast is as follows:—The Maid Marian will be Miss Ruby Celeste; the Sheriff of Nottingham, Mr. Max Copland; Friar Tuck, Mr. Charles Goold; King Joseph Core de Lyons, Mr. Chris Van Bern; and Robin Waller, A.C.F., Mr. Arthur Roberts. Mr. Herbert Shelley, the author, is superintending the rehearsals.

The Lyceum, which failed as a variety theatre both with one and two performances nightly, was sold at the Mart on Thursday by Mr. Brougham Glasier, of Glasier and Sons. The price reached was £119,500. The purchaser's name was not disclosed.

Mr. W. F. Frame has again made a hit in pantomime as the Cook in Dick Whittington at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow. By mistake he was announced the other evening at a big festival as Sir W. F. Frame. There's a picture for you!

Mr. Frank Glenister, the popular manager of the London Pavilion, and Mr. William Cobbett, of the same house, will decide who is to be the winner of the Vaudeville Club billiard handicap on Tuesday next, when a close and exciting game—250 up—may be expected. Mr. Cobbett receives 130, and his chief 90, and we expect the latter will about get home.

The Oxford announces for Christmas a novel demonstration of thaumaturgy by the Fays, exponents of psychic force, who have recently astonished the most eminent scientists of America. In the holidays matinées will be given.

Mr. Harry Tate, who has departed from New York, will be with us before the publication of our next issue. The success of Mr. Tate's productions in New York proves that he is in possession of a cosmopolitan humour. When London and New York agree in laughing at a turn the rest of the globe is really quite small potatoes.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Stratton left Waterloo on Saturday for Southampton on their way to South Africa. A large assemblage of friends were on the platform to see the popular coon comedian off and to wish him success on the Rand and bon voyage. Among the crowd were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Elvin, Paul Martinetti, the McNaughtons, Flo Esdaile, Will Oliver, Sydney Hyman, Aubrey Hyman, Ernest Aplin, Alice and Rosie Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ginnett, Harry Lundy, Jack Lotto, and Wilson Hallett.

Mr. George Ripon, whose career as a variety artist has been much hindered by intermittent spells of illness, is, we regret to hear, obliged to retire from his profession on account of his indifferent health.

Many of our sweetest singers come from Ireland, and therefore the success of Mr. Charles E. Robinson, a young baritone hailing from the Sister Isle, on the variety stage is not to be wondered at. He has an excellent number in "The Ould Plaid Shawl," melody and words being racy of the soil, and recently at the Hackney Empire he was heartily applauded by Mr. Oswald Stoll, who was much impressed by the richness and fulness of his voice.

Caicedo, the king of the wire, fulfilled a most successful engagement last week at the Alhambra, and the patrons of the famous house in Leicester-square, the scene of the brilliant exploits of the greatest acrobats in the universe, were delighted with his wonderful somersaulting on the wire, and signified their pleasure by enthusiastic applause. Caicedo commences an engagement at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, on Saturday next, and will be one of the chief attractions of the World's Fair until Feb. 9.

Mr. Henri Gros and Mr. George Adney Payne were at home to a crowd of friends on Thursday evening, when was celebrated the ninth anniversary of the Metropolitan, a hall that is blessed with excellent traditions. The entertainment given was a special one, and Mr. Jack Edgar, manager, and Mr. Leon Zeitlin, acting-manager, put on a large number of turns, and though, owing to the demands of pantomime, many of the stars had left London, there was an excellent entertainment.

The turns appearing were as follows:—J. H. Kisbey, Cissie Schofield, Will Haines, Kate Trail, Mayvilles, Amber Austa, Edie Veno, Percy Hannan, George French, Chas. Adams, Tom Wootwell, Ambrose Thorne, Dorothy Drew, Tally-Ho Trio, Twin Andersons, Marie Dainton, Victoria Monks, Lew Lake and company, in "My Pal Jerry," Lily Burnand, Carlyles, Dandy George and dog, T. E. Dunville, Harry Weldon, Will Van Allen, Walter Hast, in "Dreams," Margaret Cooper, and Sinclair and Parr.

The Biograph pictures which are being shown at the Empire are creating the wildest enthusiasm among the visitors to that establishment. The principal film is the work of the Warwick Trading Co., Ltd., and the subject dealt with is fox-hunting. The pack, whose operations are depicted, are, we understand, the Peterborough Hounds, and the photographs were taken at the opening meet by the permission of the Master. The pictures are remarkably clear and vivid, and it is evident, as scene succeeds scene, in the race after the wily Reynard, that many members of the audience are devoted followers of the sport themselves, for each incident is boisterously greeted by hunting cries. There can be no question that this film is exceedingly popular, and the Warwick Company can be congratulated upon a production which must have required in its handling no small amount of forethought, care, and ingenuity. The other views, illustrative of the match South Africans v. England, at the Crystal Palace last Saturday, are also magnificent specimens of the cinematographic art.

Miss Juno May (the champion wrestler of the world) will appear on Monday, Dec. 31, at the Cambridge. This lady is English, and twenty-two years of age, height 6ft. 2in., and weight 22st. She will, prior to above date, deposit £1,000, for which she will wrestle any woman in the world.

Miss Maie Hoey, aged fourteen years, who is a pupil of Adeline Genée, Mlle. Zanfretta, and Mlle. Cormani, who is not only an accomplished dancer but a musician and an artist in oils, has been specially engaged to appear twice daily as Fairy Queen at Hengler's Circus, commencing Dec. 24.

Cadogan and Nicholls (Mr. Vernon Willox Cadogan and Miss Nicholls, sister of the well-known comedian Harry Nicholls) have by arrangement with Muir and Bartlett acquired Mr. Hubert Bartlett's extremely clever duologue A Clerical Complication. They have been carefully rehearsed by the author in his original "business," and will be shortly inviting managers and agents to forward them contracts.

Miss Annie Purcell, who will be the principal boy in the Cardiff pantomime, has arranged to specially feature Harry Castling and C. W. Murphy's dainty chorus song, "On the Isle of Anglesey," which is issued by the Star Company in their sixpenny editions. Miss Purcell is this week filling a special return engagement at the Tivoli.

Dr. Walford Bodie has played a record week at the Cardiff Empire. On Saturday the huge building was packed. This week he is repeating his former triumphs at the Hackney Empire, where he is greeted nightly by large and enthusiastic audiences. On Monday he will take a run to Liverpool, his eighth visit within the last three years. Christmas week will find him at his Highland home, the Manor House, Macduff, N.B., celebrating the first anniversary of his residence therein.

Her Majesty the Queen, the King and Queen of Norway, Princess Victoria, and suite, visited the London Hippodrome on Wednesday evening, to witness a specially-selected programme, consisting of The Earthquake, produced by Frank Parker, the Daily Mirror Boy Army, Chung Ling Soo, the famous Chinese conjurer, the Chronomegaphone, and Lavater Lee, the Hippodrome droll. It was expected that the King and little Prince Olaf would be present, but His Majesty did not arrive. The Royal party occupied three boxes, including the Royal box. Mr. Fred Trussell, the manager of the Hippodrome, received their Majesties.

At the ordinary annual meeting of the Motor-'Bus Advertising Co., Ltd., held recently at the offices, Birkbeck Bank Chambers, Holborn, Mr. J. Bartleet Perry, the secretary, proposed that a donation should be sent to the Music Hall Home, and Mr. J. J. Fruin, the secretary of the institution, has the pleasure now to acknowledge the receipt of a cheque for two guineas.

Mr. Will Evans, whose name is a household word to all metropolitan amusement seekers, has now achieved an extraordinary success in the Theatre Royal Glasgow pantomime, in which he figures as Idle Jack. Probably no living comedian earned greater applause or raised more genuine, wholesome laughter than did Mr. Evans on the first night of Mr. Wyndham's Dick Whittington. The curtain was raised twelve times at the finish, and the audience refused to leave the theatre until Mr. Evans made a speech. Mr. Evans must be a very busy man, for he is not only performing twice a day, but he is collaborating in a series of dramatic sketches with another popular comedian—Mr. Tom Craven to wit.

The chronomegaphone, the newest development in the combination of bioscope and phonograph, has aroused great interest at the London Hippodrome, but on Monday evening, during an illustration of the "Swing" duet from Messager's Veronique, the light failed. A stage official announced that one of the fuses had "gone wrong," but a new picture would be shown. The audience waited for several seconds, but the chronomegaphone refused to act. It has, however, behaved itself since.

The Court of Session, Edinburgh, on Thursday, the 6th inst., discussed the London Hippodrome's circular curtain. Isaac Nathaniel Lyons, merchant and Government contractor, 51, St. Mary-axe, London, sued Moss' Empires nearly a year ago for £1,361 18s. 4d., the amount alleged to have been incurred for work done at the London Hippodrome at the end of 1904 and beginning of January, 1905. The work consisted of the supply and fitting-up of two concentric curtains, which were intended to enclose the arena of the Hippodrome, and also to shut out the public view of the stage at the same time. Liability was admitted by the Hippodrome for extras amounting to £457 15s. 10d., but it was said that the remainder of the account represented work which the pursuer had contracted to do by contract for the lump sum of £500.

Lord Ardwall at the time found that the contractor was entitled to payment of £500, the contract price, and also to the extra cost of labour and material caused by the alterations and additions ordered, and that Mr. Lyons had failed to distinguish such extras from the proper contract work. His Lordship therefore dismissed the action, but in the circumstance found no expenses due to or by either party. Both parties appealed, and on Thursday Mr. Lyons' action was dismissed, and the Hippodrome management was allowed its expenses, which amount to about £800.

Mr. Bernard Armstrong, theatrical proprietor and variety entertainer, of the Queen's Theatre, Watson-street, and the New Gaiety (Tivoli) Theatre, Argyle-street, Glasgow, was examined in bankruptcy on Tuesday. There was a fair attendance of creditors in Sheriff Balfour's Chambers, Glasgow County Buildings,, in which the proceedings took place, those present including Councillor Scott Gibson, whose financial interest in the examination was shown to be very considerable.

In answer to Mr. Angus Campbell, who appeared as agent in the sequestration, Mr. Armstrong said he was thirty-eight years of age, and had been engaged in the variety profession for about twenty years. For a number of years he had been lessee of a music hall in Glasgow. Eight years ago he and Mr. Colquhoun entered into a partnership, which continued for about four years. He took the New Gaiety Theatre, then known as the Tivoli, and formerly the old Victoria Hall. Into that he paid in actual cash £2000, the result of his savings from his profession, and Mr. Colquhoun paid a like amount. The concern was created into a limited liability company in 1902. Their share was about £8000 in stock—£4000 each—but he never realised a single penny out of the company.

That company collapsed, and was now in liquidation. On its formation it expended a large sum on structural alterations in the Tivoli, amounting to between £12,000 and £13,000. The capital of the limited liability company was £15,000. This was a very large proportion for alterations, which proved to be very unsatisfactory. He was appointed managing-director at a salary of £4 a week. That was a loss, as he made about £20 a week by taking professional engagements, and he therefore resigned. The limited liability company acquired the Queen's Theatre in Watson-street. That concern embraced both theatres, but the Glasgow Corporation held that the original partnership of Colquhoun and Armstrong still existed, and had proceeded on that assumption. The Queen's Theatre paid. All the loss was incurred by the Tivoli.

Mr. Councillor Andrew Scott Gibson, who had advanced various sums, would have been a partner had the conditions of the lease been carried through, but never drew a shilling out of the business. Mr. Armstrong said he was at present carrying out a four weeks' engagement as a variety artist in England. The examination was adjourned.

The 492nd meeting of the Executive Committee of the M.H.A.R.A. was held on Wednesday afternoon, when the following members were present:—Messrs. Fred Neiman, Harry Bancroft, Bob Leonard, Harry Blake, Douglas White (hon. treasurer), Fred Herbert (vice-chairman), and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary). Mr. Fred Herbert presided. The minutes having been read and confirmed, several questions of refunds were considered. It was decided to hold the dinner and dance at the Horns, Kennington, the date not being definitely settled. The weekly financial statement was passed as read, the number of new members being seventy and the total amount received £56 15s. 6d.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

IN view of the recent legislation against the sale of pirated music, Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter, of 142, Charing Cross-road, point out that "it is time for publishers of cheap editions to discontinue their self-sacrificing policy of dispensing with a fair profit, and to revise their prices. Accordingly, in concert with brother publishers of sixpenny popular editions, they intend on and after Jan. 1, 1907, raising their trade rates fifty per cent."

THE extraordinary, though not unexpected, success attending the songs of Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter in the first pantomimes of the season in great provincial cities and towns has had, as in former years, the effect of definitely settling in the minds of London managements what shall be the songs of their respective productions. From Scotland alone the wires talked of thirteen solid successes, and the tale continued in the early hours of Friday morning, more "annuals" having been produced the evening prior.

IN Mr. F. W. Wyndham's magnificent Edinburgh production on Thursday night the audience went wild with delight over "Cheyenne," "Come to the tree-tops," "Snowflakes," and "It's a different girl again," all of which are Messrs. Francis and Day's copyrights. The firm received the gratifying intelligence shortly after the fall of the curtain.

ALMOST simultaneously news came to hand that during the progress of Mr. Richard Waldon's grand pantomime at Glasgow on the same evening enormous and peremptory demands for repetition followed the same firm's numbers, "Good-night, Mr. Brown, I'm out!" "Why do the girls love Charlie?" "Boy Blue," "There's a man in Manitoba," and "Starlight."

THE Christmas number of the New York Music Trades—the 150 pages of which are truly magnificent specimens of typography—contains a specially-written article by Mr. Fred Day, who controls the New York branch of Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter's business. It is entitled "The Differences Between the English, French, German, and American Song Publics as I Find Them," and, though written in a humorous vein, bears evidence of keen powers of observation in the writer.

MR. HARRY DACRE has received the good news by telegram from Mr. Richard Waldon, of the Royal Princess's Theatre, Glasgow, that the success of "My Sugar-plum" was immediate. It bids fair to be one of the most popular numbers in that gentleman's elaborate and tasteful Christmas production—already an assured triumph. The idea for the song occurred to the composer in the middle of the night, and he has invariably noticed that when one of his numbers has been born at some unearthly hour in the morning it has become extremely successful.

IT was Mr. George R. Sims, we believe, who, in his younger days, used to wake up in the small hours and write brilliant verses in soap on the bedroom looking-glass. Whether Mr. Dacre adopts the same method, we know not. There is, however, no barring clause against "Sunlight" being used for bars of melody.

MESSRS. PRICE AND REYNOLDS are now busy with their "Sixpenny Series," which now has reached sixty-eight items. The songs they have booked well for pantomimes include "Another little girl in your eye," "Same girl on Sunday," "What, what, what?" "All he wants is a girl," "Courting at Hampton Court," and the great American hit, "Robinson Crusoe's Isle."

MESSRS. MELLOR, LAWRENCE, AND GIFFORD have placed with Messrs. Price and Reynolds their melodious number, "Mr. Gollywog, good-night." The same firm have secured Murphy and Lipwin's "My château in Barcelona."

MILLS AND SCOTT have found another big hit this season in "Sailing in my balloon." This number, which will be featured all over the country, has made a distinct hit in two Glasgow pantomimes already; and the Star Music Company have received large orders for copies from practically every dealer in the northern city.

FROM Glasgow comes the report that "I've built a bamboo bungalow for you" achieved an instantaneous and emphatic "hit," in Mr. Fred W. Wyndham's Theatre Royal, Glasgow, pantomime. Considering the success which has already crowned this Monte Carlo publication of the fortunate Messrs. Mellor and Lawrance in the music-halls, its triumph in pantomime is not to be wondered at.

ALTHOUGH it is a "fee" song, the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s number, "Skyland," is being eagerly "booked" by pantomime producers, as in addition to Mr. John Hart, for Manchester, and Mr. Herbert Cottesmore, for Liverpool, Mr. J. A. Thomson has this week secured it for no less than six pantomimes and Messrs. Somers Bellamy and Chas. Kitts for their pantomime, which opens in Scarborough on Boxing Day. Furthermore, the two McNaughtons will sing it as a duet, in the balloon scene, in the Crown, Peckham, pantomime this year.

MESSRS. JOHN P. HARRINGTON and Jas. W. Tate have been specially commissioned by Miss Connie Ediss, the Gaiety favourite, to write and compose her a new répertoire of up-to-date songs, and in pursuance of this laudable object they have this week supplied her with two numbers, "on account," entitled respectively, "When I marry a millionaire," and "I never felt so awkward," with both of which the fair artist is delighted.

MISS VESTA VICTORIA is taking to America with her a very special number by F. W. Leigh and Henry E. Pether, the author and composer of her never-to-be-forgotten "Waiting at the church." Messrs. Francis and Day have secured the same.

A SECOND edition of Mr. Fred Earle's comic song "Birdseed" has been exhausted. This, for a song that has not yet been exploited, speaks volumes. The words are by the author of "The 'ouses in between," the music by H. F. Greenfield.

"THE QUEEN OF OLD SAMARA" has reached America. A cablegram from New York says, "'Samara' instantaneous hit."—This Monte Carlo winner is being "featured" by Mr. Fred Elton on the Stoll tour, and by Miss Alice Lloyd at the Holborn Empire and Collins's nightly.

MISS LIL HAWTHORNE produced a new song at the Leeds Empire last week, entitled "If a girl like you loved a boy like me," which at once proved a big success.

THE Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Co., Ltd., have been inundated this week by telegrams from pantomime artists and producers from all parts of England, Ireland, and, last, but not least, Scotland, asking for permission to feature their principal pantomime songs, among which the following may be worth mentioning:—"Take me back to London Town," "Moonbeam," "Sweet Saturday Night," "Fishing," "Idaho," "Mariar," "The Bluebell's Wedding," "My Rickshaw Queen," "In a hammock built for two," and "Little Girl."

THE demand for that charming number of Mr. J. F. Lambe's, "Queen of Old Samara," among principal boys and principal girls is simply phenomenal; and the Monte Carlo Publishing Co. are daily inundated with letters asking for permission to sing the song in pantomime from all parts of the Kingdom

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE PALACE ANNIVERSARY.

On the young shoulders of Alfred Butt two short years since fell the burden of responsibility that had been carried with honour by the lamented Charles Morton. To the high standard of entertainment set up by his venerated predecessor, for whom he had a filial regard, the younger manager has been true. The congratulations, therefore, showered upon him on Tuesday evening, the fourteenth anniversary of the opening of the house as a music hall, had a note of cheery encouragement thoroughly deserved by the enthusiastic way in which he has followed the precepts of a great caterer, who raised the banner of refinement at the old Canterbury fifty-four years ago. During the last year the Palace entertainments have been enriched by the contributions of such artists as Marie Tempest and Margaret Cooper—the latter still under engagement there—and this fact alone speaks volumes as to the desire to keep the theatre in the forefront of London houses of entertainment where artistic endeavour always takes into account the higher culture of the masses. Great theatrical artists have always favoured the Palace as a pied à terre, and Mr. Henry Neville, who appeared on the festival night, must have been touched by his reception from a packed house on reciting the famous poem by Clement Scott, "The Women of Mumbles Head." Mr. Hayden Coffin came along, too, to sing "Melisande from the Wood," by Goetz, a delightful experience for the audience. Barely had he departed when Little Tich arrived to convulse the house by his antics as "The Park-keeper" in his official capacity, and supplemented this amusing impersonation by his famous burlesque of a serpentine dancer. Mr. Alfred Lester, who found fame at the Palace, renewed his triumphs as a humourist on the anniversary; the McNaughtons kept the well-dressed crowd in the stalls and the more democratic dwellers in the gallery laughing while they talked at cross-purposes in their own inimitable way; Miss Alice Lloyd, with the art of the diseuse, gave the daintiest of numbers, with just a suspicion of naughtiness, in "The Tourist and the Maid"; Alice Pierce "impressed" one and all by her reproduction of Miss Lena Ashwell's famous impersonation of Leah Kleschna; and a most original and clever entertainment was that presented by D'Arc's Marionettes, the figures being made up and dressed as music hall celebrities. Mr. Arthur Prince and his cabin boy gave effect to much satire at the expense of the recent naval order "On the Knee"; Les Molasso created a sensation by their cyclonic dancing; Mr. Nelson Jackson entertained at the piano with much discernment and command of humour; Johnson and Dean showed us once more that they are king and queen of coon swelldom; Miss Clarice Mayne repeated her clever imitations of music hall artists; Galatea posed in classical representations of the nude; and Chirgwin, who arrived late, was none the less welcome in his colloquialisms and vocal and instrumental surprises. Other entertainers included Michael Braham with his dog Mickey; Alexandra Dagmar, who sang admirably; Herbert Lloyd, "King of hearts"; the Gordon Brooks' Duo; the clever and obedient thinking mare, Princess Trixie; Miss Margaret Cooper; and the Bioscope. Mr. Herman Finck opened the programme with a spirited march of his own composition, entitled, "The Palace," excellently rendered under his direction. As a selection he chose "The Yeomen of the Guard," which set the house humming familiar airs. Among those present to congratulate the directorate, represented by Mr. Ernest Polden and Mr. Cremetti as well as Mr. Butt, were Messrs. T. S. Dickie, Jack Somers, H. Wieland, Ernest Stuart, James W. Mathews, and others.

THE OXFORD.

Character impersonators have always loomed large in variety entertainments, and though we do not meet with Maccabes, or Woodins, or Thurtons, we must remember that such versatile entertainers would be much restricted by twentieth-century conditions obtaining on the lesser stage, where the "rapid impressionist" finds his true environment. It is not our business to discuss the effect of bustle or hurry upon his artistic ambitions. Time is the essence of the contract. He knows the conditions under which he appears, and sets to work accordingly. Within a minute of his appearance behind the footlights he has to arouse curiosity; within five he has to satisfy it; and within ten he has to justify his engagement by knowledge of stage effect, possession of dramatic instinct, and apt vocal illustration. At the Oxford Mr. Rex King, an entertainer who has an assured future, fulfils all these conditions, and more. He contrives in a few short minutes to win golden opinions concerning his ability. Like the entertainers we have named at the beginning of this article, he possesses in no little degree the art of the ventriloquist, and after announcing an "imitation" of a well-known French polyphonist, he voices with much clever deception a female and a male figure. He then burlesques a young lady in short skirts, who is quite equal to the singing of "Vainka's song"—a clever exhibition of vocal agility in the falsetto. The cracksman, who is about to rob an old miser, is a creation instinct with a grim humour; and then we have the miser with his worship of gold and his callous indifference to the sufferings of others. Retribution overtakes this Scrooge, who succumbs to heart disease as the tableau curtains close. Audiences at the Oxford recognise the artistic worth of such a clever quick-change entertainment as this by an absorbed silence, which breaks into loud applause at its conclusion.

Another impersonator is Mr. V. L. Granville, who, in chain armour, recites the speech of Henry the Fifth at Agincourt; and then as Mother Gutter-snipe, in Fergus Hume's novel, "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," utters that old dipsomaniac's imprecations. The Shakespearean passage—a favourite one with Mr. Lewis Waller—as given by Mr. Granville, is wanting in virility; and the hag's lines are grotesquely horrible perhaps, but scarcely entertaining. Mr. Charles Norton, in a particularly clever series of imitations, introduces Joe Elvin on a racecourse, where the cockney comedian is supposed to be laying the odds with various promiment members of the profession. Mr. Nat Clifford has nothing newer to offer than "The Grand Hotel"; but Mr. Fred Earle scores heavily with his absurdity, "When I looked out of the window"; and Mr. Sam Mayo raises a chorus of laughter with his Whitechapel Chinese song. Miss Lily Burnand has a tuneful chorus song in "Arrah Wannah," which we may expect to hear in every suburb during the coming Yuletide festivities; but she has greater opportunities for her command of humour in her clever satire upon the picture-post-card star. The lady satirised will no doubt go on singing "Why do they call me a Gibson girl?" for some time longer; but the prominent position she has gained is due to the camera, and not to art. Miss Burnand looks handsomer than the lady she takes off, and her costume is superb.

The "Mysterious Cross," one of the smartest illusions that have ever been presented on the variety stage, is puzzling and astonishing audiences nightly, and Mr. Arthur Preston, its introducer, works extremely well. Miss Lottie Collins's genuine comedy inspiration gives excellent point to her songs, and she secures a good reception. Dancing could have no daintier exponent than My Fancy, who puts poetry into a sand dance; Mr. C., who sings and talks, is rapidly advancing in the favour of Oxford audiences; the Derrington Family are among the smartest of cyclists; Lockhart's Elephants, presented by Captain Taylor, are gentle pachyderms, who evidently possess a sense of humour; the Three Laurels are acrobats of the first water; and nothing in the programme causes more amusement than Mr. Sidney Bacon's company in the musical comedy, The Duchess of Tooting, in which Mr. Ernest Spalding, Mr. Henry Latimer, Mr. Harry Buss, Miss Rhoda Paul, Miss Dora Heritage, and Miss Josie Farrington are conspicuously successful. Other turns in the bill are Ike Scott and Son, and Harry Weldon. Mr. Blyth-Pratt, the popular manager, welcomes nightly a crowd of friends.

THE PARAGON.

One of the best things in this week's programme at the Paragon is a thoroughly amusing sketch by that finished actor, Mr. Mark Melford. The playlet, to which no title is given, turns upon the embarrassing situation created by the return of a man from the Soudan, where he was supposed to have been killed. Under this belief, and in the interval, his most intimate friend has married his supposed-to-be widow. Mr. Melford's treatment of the awkward predicament in which, as the husband's friend, he finds himself, is characterised by dry humour and adequate appreciation of the humorous possibilities of the contretemps. The Musical Jees are, as is well known, a troupe of artists who manipulate with remarkable skill such unlikely instruments as anvils, cart-wheels, horse-shoes, and ladders, eliciting therefrom unexpected harmony. Miss Venie Clements displays considerable talent in the impersonation of various types of character, such as a working man, a Scots lassie, and a baby. She introduces a catchy song, "I will leave the decision to you." She is a smart dancer, and possesses a sweet voice. Desmonti and Mora always receive a cordial welcome at the Paragon, where the gracefulness and extreme accuracy of their various feats are greatly admired. From Miss Maud Mortimer we get a distinct musical treat. The chorus of "I've got a bungalow in Borneo" is already popular, and her introduction of a medley containing verses from "Robin Adair," "Comin' thro' the rye," and "Auld Lang Syne" is a very agreeable novelty, which is considerably enhanced by her pleasing manner and vocal abilities. Mr. Will Musgrave is a comedian whose rendering of "My giddy little Cocoa Queen" and "I lost my train again" is full of a humour into which his audience fully enters.

Mrs. John Lawson presents an episode, entitled Vanity. The subject is a distinctly unpleasant one, dealing, as it does, with the unfaithfulness of a wife while the husband is in the hands of the law for a forgery committed to supply her extravagance. His unexpected release and arrival at his home when she is awaiting her lover lead to a tragic dénouement, in which the outraged husband murders, first his erring wife and then the interloper. Mrs. Lawson is an accomplished actress, who handles the disagreeable rôle with considerable skill, portraying the light-headed, frivolous wife with marked ability. Mr. Horton Tree imparts to the part of the wronged husband considerable vigour and earnestness. The little piece is exceedingly well staged. Miss Marie Kendal appeals strongly to the patriotic sentiments of her audience with her song, "The girl I love lives in England." Miss Kendal has learnt a lesson which is neglected by many of our artists, namely, that clear enunciation greatly conduces to the good effect of a song. Chirgwin manipulates the bagpipes with the same facility he brings to bear on each of the other units in his varied collection of instruments. His dancing figure proves a source of merriment; and the house is not satisfied until he has played "The blind boy," with 'cello accompaniment. Mr. Nat Clifford gives his experiences "At the Grand Hotel," a place we judge to be unique among caravanserais. His patter is very clever, and as an encore he gives a grotesquely absurd dance. Walker and May, as usual, form an attractive feature of the programme. Miss May's song, "Dat's me," is very well received, while the couple's duet, "The Coontown Jubilee," is entertaining to a degree. The Stevens Troupe are graceful dancers; and Forest and King are artists whose physical flexibility suggests a total absence of bones in their anatomy, while the lady's dancing is particularly pretty. The introduction, by Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope, of a series of new pictures, brings a thoroughly attractive bill to a satisfactory conclusion.

HACKNEY EMPIRE ANNIVERSARY.

Anniversary follows anniversary in quick succession, and the special entertainment given at Holloway last week has been succeeded this week by a similar celebration in North-East London. On Tuesday evening two anniversary performances were given to commemorate the completion of the fifth year of the Hackney Empire's successful existence. The visitors included Mr. Oswald Stoll, Mr. Frank Allen, Mr. Gething (the district manager for Glasgow), Mr. Gerald Norton (the district manager for Leeds). Mr. W. Collins, local district manager, and Mr. Staughton had direction of the stage; and Mr. J. Christie, the resident manager, looked after the front of the house. At both performances there was a packed audience, and in the programme, from start to finish, not a weak turn could be detected.

The entertainment opened with the overture "Empire Echoes," composed by the conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Walter Johnson, and the services they rendered certainly deserve generous recognition. The artists included the Two Bostons, whose comic act was as efficacious as usual in arousing the merriment of the audience. The Bandurrias, with their admirable musical entertainment, also had a good reception. Miss Mabel Bright and company appeared in the attractive sketch Girls will be Girls; the Four Royal Welshmen gave evidence of their excellence as vocalists; Miss Dot Hardy and Miss Agnes Hazel quite maintained their reputation; and Mr. Michael Nolan, Irish comedian, was heartily welcomed. Dr. Walford Bodie happily introduced himself to the audience by stating that he was no stranger in Hackney, and there was no need for him on that occasion to give a long explanation in regard to bloodless surgery. Mr. Tom Owen, the Welsh comedian, met with success; and quite enthusiastic was the reception accorded Miss Alexandra Dagmar, who gave her popular Tyrolean song imitation. Other turns included Fred Frampton, the Sisters Grovini, the Welsh Wanderers, Elsie Brenton, Bernard Russell, the Stanford Quartette, Arthur Rigby, Nat Travers, George Antill, Frank and Free, Elsie Enry, Stewart and Morgan, Frank and Jen. Latona, Jessie Albini, Archie Anderson, Harry Hemsley, Lily Burnand, Lucy Weston, the Pavilion Girls, Daisy Davidson, Russell Brandon, Marie Kendall, and the Bioscope. At the second house Mr. Clark and Miss Hamilton gave their ever-attractive song and dance, "My Yokohama Queen," eliciting loud applause. Phil and Nettie Peters greatly amused the audience with their patter; the male artist's make-up alone excited much mirth, and his discourse on the subject of love, varied by an eccentric performance on a wind instrument, still further elicited the merriment of the audience. The lady lent able assistance. George and Leila were another successful couple, the gentleman appearing as a soldier, whose appearance is severely criticised by the lady. The two also contributed a lively duet. The anniversary certainly proved one of the most successful that have taken place in the brief history of the Hackney Empire, and congratulations to all concerned are well deserved.

PUTNEY HIPPODROME.

Since the opening of this well-appointed and cosy palace of varieties, the patronage bestowed has been satisfactory, and an exceedingly good programme is presented this week. The company includes Carson Hicks, a negro delineator of the Eugene Stratton type, who sings a coon love song in pleasing style, and afterwards gives a good exhibition of dancing. Geo. Fairburn appears as a barber, and furnishes imitations of well-known artists, who are supposed to patronage his tonsorial establishment, his best effort undoubtedly being that of R. G. Knowles. Suburban audiences have a weakness for sketches, and Rogues of the Turf, founded on the drama of the same name, is well received. The various characters are ably played, particularly that of the old trainer, Sammy, the leader of the gang; and the two ladies are equally good. The presence of three thoroughbreds, and an exciting paddock and race scene, tend to give a realistic effect, and the artists, whose names are not given on the programme, are loudly applauded. This is followed by Dan Conroy, comedian, and next by Miss Fanny Robins, in her popular melodies, including a well-rendered song regarding the "King of the Castle," her baby boy, the refrain of this ditty being taken up by a vocalist in the circle with an exceedingly good voice. Starr and Leslie give an interesting turn, including good singing, excellent fooling, and combined Indian club manipulating. Their joke about the colour of the lamp-light has been well worked, but seems to go as well as ever. An operatic excerpt by Flo Esdaile is the next item, and, wearing a much admired costume, she gives a charming rendering of a difficult aria. "Oysters and clams" is the theme of Amber Austa's song, in which she is assisted by an old darkey, who shuffles along in true negro style, making a capital foil to the somewhat eccentric, yet clever, dancing of the lady referred to.

It is somewhat difficult to impart novelty to a cycling turn, but the Arleys introduce many new and special tricks, and give a good display. The Mayvilles (marionette show) may also be commended, and come in for unstinted appreciation, although the caricature of the Salvationists is perhaps not in the best taste, and could easily be substituted by another item. Miss Florrie Cooper sings a couple of songs very acceptably, and has a favourable reception; and McCann's well-trained Irish terriers and leaping dogs give a smart, if somewhat noisy, turn. The following artists also contribute to an enjoyable evening's entertainment:—Fyne and Hurley, comedians; and the Sisters Tree, in their Hunting scena. Ruffell's pictures conclude the programme. The orchestra, admirably led by Mr. R. Allington, deserves special mention; and Mr. R. W. Allum, the acting-manager, is most assiduous in his attentions to those in front of the house.

HAMMERSMITH PALACE.

Mr. John C. Coe's enterprise at Hammersmith—the first management to cater for Suburbia—is marked by constancy to change, and every attraction of the modern music hall has to run the gauntlet of criticism from audiences at the local Palace. The Devil's Sunday, which has been thrilling the masses nearer the centre of the amusement world, occupies an important place in the current scheme of amusement, which is so admirably presented under the direction of Mr. Lewis Vincent. The dramatic playlet exposes relentlessly, and with no lack of power or realism, the doings of the world of frivolity. Tragedy dogs the footsteps of the mondaine, Fay Faber, whose feverish anxiety to get rid of her forger husband in order to fly to the arms of a married paramour supplies the main action of the piece, until, with the fury of madness, the deceived gambler throttles the guilty woman and shoots the man who had plotted to compass her dishonour. It was a theme that Alexandre Dumas the younger treated with characteristic power in the seventies; and in the present day Maurice Donnay is impressing Parisian audiences by "girding" at society in the faubourgs with unfettered power and uncompromising plainness of speech. The Devil's Sunday is now announced as the work of Mrs. Richard Pole, who acknowledges her indebtedness to Father Vaughan for one of her incidents. Mr. John Lawson repeats his fine performance as the prisoner on bail; and the part of Fay Faber, which makes heavy demands on the physical strength of an actress, is presented with far-reaching callousness and power of declamation that are most effective by a lady whose name does not appear upon the programme. The drawing-room in which the action of the sketch takes place is a sumptuously-furnished apartment.

Early in the evening the Karno Trio set the house in a roar with their farcical doings in a quick lunch, the diverting nature of the incidents being assisted by revolving doors and property poultry. Mr. Hardy Palm scores in a song concerning Chicago canned meat, evoking fun from the scandal exposed in "The Jungle Book." Devotees of St. Cecilia are found in Phern and Phern, who play "Genevieve" on stringed instruments with a funnel attachment—a new method of increasing "Helicon's harmonious sounds," discovered some years since by a gentleman named Stroh, who invented the Stroh violin. Other instrumental items of the clever pair include a duet on the more familiar banjo and a really clever vocal imitation of the 'cello.

The surprise of the bill, however, is the "Little One," a really wonderful child-actress, who sings a couple of humorous songs with point and finish, supplementing such exhibitions of her talent as a comedienne by imitations of a German vocalist and a French chanteuse. With an aplomb that would do credit to an experienced actress, "Little One" presents impressions of a scene from Sapho, with Miss Olga Nethersole as Alphonse Daudet's heroine, Mr. Frank Mills as the lover, and herself as the child Joseph—a remarkable tour de force, indeed, for one so young. More familiar and more welcome to the Hammersmithians were the child's mimicry of Vesta Victoria in her famous song, "It's all right in the summer-time," and of Harry Lauder in "Stop yer tickling, Jock." This youngster, if she sustains her early promise, should have a bright future.

Grant and Allen appear successfully as a couple of inebriated revellers, who serenade an animated pillar-box, and also appear as comic cavalrymen, with property steeds. An immense favourite at Hammersmith is Mr. Arthur Lennard, whose latest success is "If I'd been born a girl," the clever rendering of which finds the heartiest appreciation. Mr. Lennard has an appreciation of the value of repose, and his artistic method commends itself to those who have long since tired of the ranting roarer who literally "chucks" himself at unoffending persons in front. Mr. Lennard also scores in his popular cigar song. Mr. Johnny Johnston, the "musical dandy," sings in praise of the chorus song, and also gives a solo on the 'cello. Bijou Russell's sand-dance is a remarkable effort; and Phillips and Terry present cleverly the sketch, entitled The Revolt of Man, in which the action is supposed to take place a hundred years hence. The Carlyles, whirlwind dancers, put in an extra turn on the evening of our visit, and were well received; and a trio of clever acrobats, aided by a diminutive comedian, also made a hit. Other attractions announced on the bill are Miss Jenny Gray, Ergotti and King Luis, and the Edisonograph.

CAMBERWELL PALACE.

"Over the hill to the Palace" is a phrase in frequent use by the residents of the adjoining districts of Camberwell, where the tramway extension, now completed, enables variety lovers in Dulwich to gain easy access to the elegant hall close by the Green. A variety of attractions is this week presented by Mr. P. A. Lennon, the able manager, and the satisfaction of the audience which twice nightly assembles is unbounded. The fame of Mr. Joe Elvin is as great in Camberwell as in all other parts of the metropolis—not to speak of the whole kingdom. He is this week appearing in his diverting rôle of Podgers in The Wrong House, in which the inimitable comedian is afforded unlimited opportunities for his eccentricity. The first entry of the inebriated Podgers arouses a peal of laughter which scarcely ceases during the whole course of the sketch. Mr. Elvin is capably supported by the members of his company, and the cheers with which the comedian is greeted give ample proof of the solidarity of his success.

Animal imitations are no novelty on the variety stage, but Mr. Carl Lynn manipulates the vocal chords in a way that surely has never been done before. He presents his manifestations in the shape of a monologue in which the chief features of a trip in the country are divertingly detailed. By means only of his voice Mr. Lynn reproduces the starting of a motor-car, with the fearsome hoot of the horn. A farmhouse is reached, and the neighing of the horses in the stable copied with marvellous accuracy. A pigstye is then explored, and the squeals of a little porker and the grunting of the older members of the family imitated with comical results. Later a wild-beast show in the vicinity is visited, and the roaring of a cage of lions both before feeding-time and during that interesting process is cleverly simulated. Aided only by an ordinary lampglass the performer produces sounds that can only be described as phenomenal, the power and expression that he puts into the cries of the ferocious animals being startlingly real. Mr. Lynn's turn is certainly among the best of the evening, and the recalls he obtains are thoroughly deserved. For an encore he gives by special request an imitation of the braying of a donkey, and having obliged with a supplementary imitation of a lioness presents one of its cubs in the shape of a pretty little puppy which toddles across the stage.

A welcome return to her admirers in the metropolis is made by Miss Lily Langtry, whose reception is a most cordial one. Sparkling and effervescent as ever, the tireless comedienne keeps spectators in a state of excitement by the energy which she infuses into her singing. The ear of the audience is kept amused by the humour of "When we went to the Zoo," and the eye is kept constantly on the move to follow the rapid steps of the popular comedienne who is able to preserve her vivacity and charm even when careering along the stage at lightning speed. The humours of "Hampstead Heath" are also presented with exhilarating effect, and determined efforts are made to extract an encore from the popular young lady, Miss Rosie Lloyd, another comedienne of the first-class, gains the sympathies of all for the plaint of a coster lassie, whose injunction, "Never introduce your bloke to your lady friend," is sung in plaintive style. The song possesses homely sentiment as well as humour, and finds an echo in the hearts of the jilted fair ones among the audience, who appland the singer without stint.

Carrie Laurie's Juveniles appeared on the evening of our visit without their usual preceptress, but the business of the school was efficiently conducted under another fair mistress, and the singing and dancing of the pupils caused admiration, while the humour of the smallest boy gave keen delight. Mr. Charles Johnson, the "Black Diamond," shines brilliantly in real ragtime songs and gives a clever exhibition of the way in which he won cake-walk competitions in Paris and America. No counterpart to Mr. Sam Mayo's immobile features can be found during his occupancy of the stage, for every face is wreathed in smiles while he sings his piquant songs. Mr. Jack Camp amuses all with droll anecdote and refrain. Vernon's Bioscope gives a series of humorous pictorial displays, Tee and Tee, musical eccentrics, have many comical effects, and the programme is completed by J. G. Taylor, comedian, and Miss Florrie Gallimore, comedienne.

A CRY FROM THE CHILDREN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—I wish to thank all those who have so generously responded to our appeal for help in money and in clothing, and, beggar as I am, a letter I have received constrains me to beg still further. It is from a poor mother whose heart was wrung by the cry of her children for food and fire. We have lit the fire, and we have given the food, and the little ones were told that all these good things came from Santa Claus. Now the poor little trusting souls are asking their mother if he will come again at Christmas with toys and dolls. That's what I want. Please, dear, happy, mothers, look over your children's stock of toys, and send along what they don't want, so that we may make glad the hearts of these poor little mites. In the many miserable homes I have visited, the children, with the faith and hope of youth, are looking forward to Christmas and the coming of Santa Claus to clear away all their troubles, and when they talk the broken-hearted mother turns away her tear-filled eyes from them, for she knows, alas! too well that she can't give them what they hope for. Will you give? Yes, you will; and the day on which the message of peace goes out to all the world will be all the brighter, all the happier, to you and yours for the giving. Contributions in kind and money, which will be acknowledged in these columns, should be sent to—Yours faithfully, ANNE DE GREY,

KING OF THE WIRE, IN BRISTOL.

"A REMARKABLE TURN."

A remarkable turn heads the bill at the Palace Theatre, Don Juan A. Caicedo doing more things on the slender wire than a good many people can do on more solid foundation. It is impossible to enumerate all the things this modern Blondin does, but especially noticeable are the somersaults, both backwards and forwards, and a trick on a chair, which is as much a test of the nerves for the audience to watch as the artist to perform.—Western Daily Press, Dec. 11, 1906.

"IMITATORS BUT NO RIVALS."

If you want to laugh go to the Palace. Would you be entertained for two hours with amusing drollery and clever mannerisms, go to the Palace. Don Juan A. Caicedo is appropriately called "King of the Wire," for apparently there is little that he cannot do upon it. It is obviously a sensational and dangerously difficult turn, such as prove so popular nowadays to British audiences. Much hard work is required, as well as nerves of steel. This intrepid wire-walker goes ahead of his rivals in that he turns somersaults upon the wire when heavily booted and spurred. Don Juan comes in for a hearty reception, and well he deserves it.—Bristol Mercury, Dec. 11, 1906.

INTENSELY DIFFICULT FEATS.

"King of the Wire" is the title claimed by Don Juan A. Caicedo, and it is not an exaggerated claim either. Clever performers of the same kind have often appeared at the Palace, but none have carried through their tricks with more ease or exactness. It was this, more than anything else, which earned for the performer his success. Intensely difficult as some of his feats were, he never made a slip. When he stood upon a chair balanced by the two hind legs upon the wire he was enthusiastically applauded, and the demonstration was renewed upon his turning somersaults with top boots on to which large spurs were attached. He is sure to be a big draw for the rest of the week.—Bristol Times and Mirror, Dec. 11, 1906.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

Considerable expressions of dissatisfaction with regard to the nomination of officers having reached the executive officials of the Guild, it is proposed for the ensuing year that nominations of officers on the Executive Committee be sent in advance of the Manchester meeting, either direct to the Guild Secretary, care of this office, or to the Honorary Secretary, Mr. T. Hurst, Broadhurst Farm, Clifton, Pendlebury, Manchester. To be in order the person nominated must be a member of the Guild, and the person nominating a committeeman must also be a subscribing member. It is hoped that having the nomination list open for a month before the Manchester meeting will remove all possible cause of complaint, and also clear the ground at the Manchester meeting for the very important open and public part of the proceedings.

With the growth of the Society's work it has been long felt that the selection of the committee should be wider spread over the country, and also that the committee should be more representative of the whole body than has hitherto been the case, and it is in order to secure this that the executive officials readily afford the opportunity of throwing open the nominations a month before the annual meetings.

The Manchester meeting has been fixed for Jan. 16, 1907, and will be held at four o'clock in the afternoon, in the Memorial Hall, Albert-square. The annual Committee meeting will take place at eleven in the forenoon of the same day, at the Black Lion Hotel, Salford.

Hancock's Fair at the Winter Gardens, Plymouth, was maintained by Hancock's four-a-breast galloping horses, park swings, side shows of living pictures, marionettes by Lawrence, cocoanut sheet and bottle-smasher by Oldridge, wallops and ring stall by Whiteley, throwing games and football by Locke.

A three weeks' carnival is in progress at Wall's End, near Newcastle-on-Tyne. Among the attractions are J. Wingate with his latest novelty, the razzle-dazzle, J. Key's horses and swings, J. Hancock's gallery and bottle shooter, J. Shaw's Emma stalls, R. Glancock's fair play, M. Mitchell's hobby-horses, and other concerns by J. Gray, Cartwright, Smith, Slater, and Mrs. Kelly—all doing good business.

Heal's steam roundabouts and attendant side shows are once again set up on the Broad Quay, Bath—an excellent pitch for all travelling showmen on the West of England Circuit.

The famous Bostock and Wombwell Menagerie has opened in the Smithfield fairground, Sheffield, for a week's visit on Wednesday.

The animated pictures proving so great a draw at Hancock's Winter Gardens, Plymouth, the management have decided to continue their production.

A seasonable film, happily named "A Christmas Card," has been specially devised by Mr. Robt. W. Paul, the patentee and manufacturer of the "Reliance" animatograph. It depicts, in a series of vivid scenes, a story of three homes, and in the course of the portrayal a little girl, who befriends a ragged boy, is taken with him by fairy means to the Home of Santa Claus, and afterwards transported to the humble attic of the boy's mother, which Santa Claus magically transforms into a home of plenty. It is an ideal picture for the Christmas festivities, and just such a one as Dickens loved to draw.

THE STUDT-DOONER WEDDING.

We have great pleasure in giving to our readers the following interesting details of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Studt, jun., that we briefly chronicled last week. Probably no wedding in Southampton during the past ten years has excited so much interest, or has led to so many pleasing demonstrations of popular esteem. St. Mary's Church was filled to excess with an attentive and interested congregation, including many showmen and their friends. Numerous congratulatory letters and telegrams were received before and during the day of the marriage from prominent showmen and friends, regretting their inability to be present at the ceremony. During the day and evening the bells of Holyrood Church rang out merrily in honour of the event. As we have already recorded, the service was fully choral, the splendid choir of St. Mary's Church singing in a devotional and impressive manner.

The marriage was taken by the senior curate of the parish (the Rev. W. White), assisted by the Rev. T. Horne, Honorary Chaplain to the Showmen's Guild. At the end of the service the Rev. T. Horne delivered an appropriate and impressive address, primarily to the newly-married couple, and also pointed the lesson of the service to the general congregation.

The following were the guests present at the marriage ceremony:—Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Studt, father and mother of the bridgroom; Mr. James Dooner, father of the bride; and Mr. Richard Dooner, brother; Mr. John Johnson (best man), uncle of the bridegroom; Mr Johnnie Studt, Mr. George Studt, Master Chas. Studt, Master Harry Studt, brothers of the bridegroom. Pages: Master Conrad Studt, brother of the bridegroom; Miss Doreen Johnson, cousin of the bridegroom. hall, when a sumptuous repast was provided. A string band was in attendance, and played during the wedding feast, and afterwards for the ball in the evening. The Rev. T. Considerable local feeling has been provoked in Aylesbury by some recent restrictions imposed on shows, menageries, and roundabouts when using the Market-square of the town.

To the Chairman and Members of the Aylesbury Urban District Council, Oct. 25.

We, the undersigned ratepayers and voters in and near the Market and Kingsbury-squares and other districts, beg to tender our sincere thanks to the Council for endeavouring to keep the rates as low as possible by allowing shows, roundabouts, &c., in the Market and Kingsbury-squares on other days than Fair-days. Public institutions have benefited thereby, the proprietors offering donations. It improves business by attracting country people into the town. The showmen also pay heavy tolls for their standing towards the rates. We therefore respectfully hope that the Council may see their way to continue in the future as at present, and allow the showmen to erect their stands in the said squares as heretofore, thereby giving a chance for our poorer brethren to obtain a little cheap amusement. (Here follow about 400 signatures.)

An adverse petition was also presented to the Markets and Fairs Committee, with the following satisfactory result to showmen:—

"The committee considered the two memorials received on the subject of permitting shows in the Market-square and Kingsbury on days other than Fair-days, also a memorandum prepared by the Clerk on the receipts and expenditure in connection with these shows, a copy of which is presented to the Council herewith. It was resolved to recommend that the shows continue as usual, on the following grounds:—(1) The heavy annual outlay for principal and interest renders it inadvisable to diminish any source of revenue, however small; (2) that while the ratepayers in the vicinity appear to be divided in opinion, the ratepayers as a whole appear to be emphatically against any change; (3) that the receipts from these shows are practically all profit; (4) the small number of occasions on which these shows are held, and the fact that directions have now been given to vary the positions of the shows as much as possible, resulting in a minimum of inconvenience; (5) the number of years during which these shows have been permitted. The committee recommend that negotiations be opened with the Trustees of Bedford's Charity with a view to ascertaining the terms upon which they would be prepared to convey the Recreation Ground to the Council. The committee recommend that shows, on days other than Fair-days, be required to close at 10.30 p.m., Saturdays 11 p.m.; also that printed notices to this effect be handed to showmen."

THE FIGHT FOR BURSLEM WAKES.

The latest incident in the struggle between the people and their would-be "Pastors and Masters" took place in the Borough Council Chamber at the last meeting of the Town Council on the 10th instant, and although it ended in a drawn battle, the whole proceeding was full of hopeful augury for the future success of the people's cause and the vindication of the showmen.

Happily, at Burslem, the fight is being well led and successfully carried on by local champions under the leadership of that veteran warrior for popular rights, Mr. T. Bentley, and the showmen's interests only need careful watching until such time as shall be deemed opportune for them to intervene.

Showmen do not forget that it is primarily a people's question. When it is made clear that the people do not want the Wakes, then as business men they will find a fresh outlet for their enterprise.

The Corporation enemies of the Fair will have to bow to the will of the people or make room for representatives who will.

The proceedings at the Council meeting were of the most significant character, when it is borne in mind that the resolution against the Wakes passed in October last was carried by sixteen votes to two, and that things have so marched ahead since then that the voting now stands equal on both sides.

The matter came before the whole Council on the report of the procedings of the General Purposes Committee. The report set out the question of removing the Wakes from the centre of the town had been before them, and the Town Clerk reported that at the public meeting held in the Town Hall a resolution was passed requesting the Council to rescind their resolutions passed on Oct. 8. The Clerk also read memorials from the Burslem Evangelical Free Church Council, the Burslem Sunday School Union, and from tradesmen and ratepayers of the town, urging the Council to adhere to their resolutions. After the question had been fully discussed, it was moved by Alderman Bratt and seconded by Councilor Sargeant: "That a ballot be taken with the object of ascertaining the opinion of the burgesses as to whether the Wakes should be held in the centre of the town or removed elsewhere." The resolution was put to the meeting, and declared to be lost, the voting being as follows: Ten voted for the resolution and thirteen against it. By order of the Mayor, the votes were recorded, and were as follows: Alderman Bratt, and Councillors Broadhurst, Edwards, Green, Jackson, Johnson, Mitchell, Parkes, Robinson, and Sargeant voted for the resolution. The Mayor, Aldermen Cartlidge, Edge, Edwards, Malkin, and Councillors Averill, Brodie, Chadwick, Ford, Gibson, Porter, Wade, and Willett voted against it. The question of the admission of ratepayers to the Council Chamber was considered, and after some discussion it was resolved to proceed with the next business on the agenda.

The Town Clerk said that a petition had been handed to him at noon that day, praying that the Council should rescind the resolution passed on Oct. 8 forbidding their toll-collector to let any land in the streets in the centre of the town for shows, &c., during the Wakes week.

In reply to Mr. Parkes, the Mayor said he thought there were about 1300 signatures to the petition.

Alderman Bratt moved as an amendment to the above minutes that the one referring to the question of the Wakes should be referred back to the Committee with the view of a ballot being eventually taken.

This was seconded by Mr. Sargeant.

Mr. Brodie said he hoped that the Council would not take any action of that kind. Nothing had occurred, since their last decision had been arrived at, which had in any way altered the position. It was true that a town's meeting had been held, but the representatives of the Council had not then had a fair hearing.

Mr. Willett said that before the Council could be asked to refer the matter back there should be some fresh reason given, but no such reason was given. The Council had already considered the subject upon its merits.

Mr. Finney said that while he personally agreed with the action of the Council, if a vote was taken he was pledged to the ratepayers of the North Ward to vote for a ballot. And if a ballot was taken, it ought to be a thorough one, and facilities for the people of each ward to vote should be given.

Alderman Malkin said the people most affected by the Wakes, the tradesmen in the centre of the town, had presented a petition against the continuance of the Wakes in their present position. Seventy per cent. of the whole of the tradesmen having shops there had voted.

Alderman Cartlidge opposed the proposition, and declared that to bring the question up in this manner at each meeting was merely child's play. (Hear, hear). They had considered the subject time after time, and to raise it so frequently was an insult to the intelligence of the Council. It was said that by abolishing the Wakes they would be taking away the enjoyment of the children, but a petition had been signed by 5000 Sunday school children against the Wakes. How a man professing Christianity could oppose the action of the Council, he could not understand, and he thought it would be a standing disgrace to the Council if the question was again sent back.

Mr. Porter agreed, and said he did not know when the advocates of the Wakes being continued would acknowldege that they had been honestly beaten. (Hear, hear). After every discussion that had taken place they had brought up the matter again.

Mr. Robinson took exception to the remark made by Alderman Cartlidge to the effect that he could not understand how a man professing Christianity could oppose the action of the Council, and he said that a great deal more would be heard about the Wakes question before it was finished. He wished to be the mouthpiece of those whom he represented, and the only true way out of the whole difficulty was to leave the decision to the ratepayers. If the Council did not think the Wakes fair was a proper thing, they must try to educate the people to that view. He believed that it would be infinitely better, from the point of view of morality, if the Wakes were in the centre of the town than outside it.

Mr. S. Ford urged those members of the Council who had voted for the original motion, to "play the man."

Mr. A. H. Gibson spoke in favour of the removal of the Wakes from the centre of the town.

Alderman T. Edwards, who said that he had visited sixty-four Wakes fairs in Burslem, declared that there were too many holidays in the Potteries—(hear, hear)—and the sooner they got rid of some the better it would be for the working people. From Easter until September the workmen had "broken-time" continually, and were never able really to recover the time lost. Although he had said at the East Ward meeting that he was in favour of a ballot, he did not mean any kind of a ballot.

Mr. Parkes said he was pledged to support a ballot, and he should therefore support the proposition. He agreed with Alderman Edwards that the Wakes caused a great deal of wasted time, and he should like to see one holiday time for the whole district arranged for. (Hear, hear). If it was a question of the workmen's holidays why should they not allow the workmen to decide?

Alderman Wilcox Edge urged the Council, as a body of business men, not to stultify itself by referring the matter back, because it had been discussed as much as possible, and there had been no new element introduced except that petition, which had only been presented that day. They must not forget that there had been other important petitions from the Free Church Council and the Sunday School Union. Democratic as these days were—and no one rejoiced more than himself—they were surely not coming to a point when they must do their business in the Market-place. (Hear, hear). If a mere detail in administration was to be referred to a ballot why were they there at all? (Hear, hear). People had their rights and their opportunities, but those opportunities arose in November and at the ward meetings.

Mr. Wade said that if to the question of the abolition of the Wakes was added the desirability or otherwise of fixing one general holiday, he should have no objection to the poll being taken, but the general holiday was not one of the points at issue, and on such a small matter as remained it would not be wise to go to a poll costing about £100.

The Mayor said that the petition from the Free Church Council represented 18 churches, 1900 members, 500 Sunday school teachers, and 5900 scholars. He added that the Town Clerk had been in communication with the owner of land in Moorland-road, which, with the old "Keep-off" land would be available for the Wakes shows if the Council decided to remove them, and reasonable terms could no doubt be arranged.

Mr. Green asked whether the owner of the land or the Corporation would receive the benefit from the rentals.

The Mayor said the land-owner had no intention of making a profit, and the Town Clerk said the town would get the profit.

Mr. Johnson supported the proposal to refer the question back. He was in favour of the Wakes being swept away, but as there seemed to be a preponderance of opinion against its abolition, he could not vote for such a step being taken.

Mr. Mitchell also supported the proposal.

The proposition was then put to the meeting, and twelve voted in favour of it and twelve in opposition to it. Those in favour were: Alderman Bratt, Councillors Broadhurst, Chadwick, J. H. Edwards, Finney, Green, Jackson, Johnson, Mitchell, Parkes, Robinson, and Sargeant. Those voting against the proposition were: The Mayor, Aldermen Cartlidge, Edge, T. Edwards, and Malkin, Councillors Averill, Brodie, Ford, A. H. Gibson, Porter, Wade, and Willett.

The Mayor said he did not care to take the responsibility of giving a casting vote.

The proposition therefore fell to the ground.

At the close of the Council meeting the Town Clerk said it was open for any member to give notice of motion for the next meeting.

Mr. Finney said that he would propose, at the next meeting, that a ballot of the ratepayers should be taken on the Wakes question.

Mr. Brodie asked whether the Council was to be subjected to such child's play at every meeting.

Alderman Malkin said it was unfortunate that Mr. Finney should be the one to again bring the matter forward because he had been absent, through illness he was sorry to say, from the meeting of the General Purposes Committee at which the subject had been most thoroughly thrashed out.

Mr. Porter asked if it would be possible, even after the next meeting, for the subject to be again brought forward?

Alderman Cartlidge: Yes, for twenty years if they like. (Laughter).

The minutes of the General Purposes Committee were then confirmed.

Just one or two obvious comments may be usefully made at this juncture.

Firstly—it is now recognised that it is a question for the ultimate decision of the people; and that, if it is not decided by an immediate ballot of the ratepayers, it will be decided by the voters turning out the men who misrepresent them as occasion offers at the municipal elections. "Even to this pass" must the autocrat of the Wakes question—Councillor Brodie—himself come.

Secondly—the forces of puritanical prejudice are being marshalled, and we are now told that it is the Fair as an institution and as a means of popular recreation and holiday that is objected to—it is no longer those vulgar, dirty showfolk, to be banned as moral and sanitary pests; but that the Wakes must go, because certain goody-goody people object to its continuance.

It is well to review the position and to see where we stand. We do not think that there is much fear now as to what the ultimate answer will be. The process may be slow, but we anticipate a full and complete victory for the people of Burslem over the forces of organised prejudice and reaction.

An exceptional opportunity of acquiring a popular concern in good going order occurs in the forthcoming sale of Mr. J. Wingate's razzle-dazzle, widely known as "Whirling the Whirl." It is acknowledged to be the prettiest machine on the road, and can be carried in four loads by road or rail. It can be seen working in the Garrison Field, Sunderland, during Christmas and New Year. Price and particulars may be obtained on application to J. Wingate, Whale Museum, Skegness.

"THE DEVIL'S SUNDAY."

To the Editor of The Era.

Sir,—Re Mr. Dan Fitzgerald's letter in your last issue. Mr. John Lawson purchased the playlette, A Jury of One, for one idea, namely, that of a collar-stud. This situation of the gentleman's collar-stud being found in a lady's bedroom was reproduced in The Bride for a Living, and it is very hard to see where the resemblance of The Devil's Sunday or Vanity come in. The little sketch, A Jury of One, is very good, but it was simply purchased for the one idea, as stated above.

Yours faithfully,

THE CHESHIRE BYE-LAWS.

PETITION TO THE HOME SECRETARY.

The Executive Council of the Showmen's Guild have despatched the following petition against the proposed bye-laws of the County Council to the Home Office :—

To the Right Honourable H. J. Gladstone, His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department.

The County Council of Chester, having approved of certain bye-laws for the good rule and government of its administrative area, "a copy of such bye-laws having been duly advertised as the Statute directs, and a sealed copy of such bye-laws having been deposited at the Home Office," we, on behalf of the organised showmen of the United Kingdom, respectfully object to the ratification of the said bye-laws.

We consider that unless certain modifications of their proposals be accepted by the County Authorities, our trade and business interests in the County of Chester will be seriously hindered.

We have already set out in order our objections to the County Council, and have been advised by their clerk to lay our grievances before you, so that, in accordance with the accepted procedure, the matter may be referred back to the Council, for their comments and reconsideration.

Proposed bye-law No. 1 sets out :—"No person shall in any street or public place, or on any land adjoining or near to any street or public place, use or play, or cause to be used or played, any steam organ or other musical instrument worked by mechanical means, to the annoyance or disturbance of residents or passengers."

Your petitioners, in catering for the amusement of the people at fairs, feasts, and wakes, do use organs worked by mechanical means, music being a necessary adjunct to our business, and we submit that an additional clause be added, in these or similar words :—

"Provided always that the above bye-law shall not apply to any fair, feast, or wakes lawfully held."

Furthermore, we suggest that the latter portion of the proposed bye-law, from the word "means" to the end, be deleted, and the following words substituted :—

"To the injury, annoyance, or disturbance of at least three residents."

Your petitioners have suffered a most grievous loss in the past from the application of bye-laws, to our business at times of popular holidays and fairs, where such bye-laws regarding organs had been without the saving clause exempting fairs, and where complaint can be made by individual residents or passengers.

Bye-law No. 2 also presents considerable elements of danger and loss to our business, and is worded thus :—

"MUSIC NEAR HOUSES.

"No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument, or sing in any street or public place, within one hundred yards of any dwelling-house or office, to the annoyance of any inmate thereof, after being requested to desist by such inmate, either personally or through his servant, or through a constable: Provided that this bye-law shall not apply to properly-conducted religious services, except where the request to desist is made on the ground of the serious illness of any inmate of the house."

Your petitioners have been subjected to interference and loss by the mistaken application of bye-laws (manifestly intended for street musicians) to them and their business.

We readily recognise that, in the case of serious illness, music should be stopped, and it has been our invariable practice to stop all music or other noises at such times.

But, in order to prevent the tyranny of an individual, we suggest that the words, "to the annoyance of any inmate thereof" down to the word "provided," be struck out, and the following substituted :—

"To the injury, annoyance, and disturbance of three or more residents," and that following the words "religious services" these words be added :—"Or at any time of fair, feasts, wakes, or public holidays, except when the request to desist is made on the ground of serious illness of a resident within one hundred yards of the music complained of."

With regard to the other proposed bye-laws regulating music near churches and hospitals, your petitioners make no complaint; they are only too anxious that, in the pursuit of their business, they shall be able to use such necessary music as it demands, without subjecting anyone to serious annoyance or disturbance.

With regard to the bye-law concerning organs, the following important public bodies have bye-laws with the clause exempting fairs, from their provisions :—Yorkshire (West Riding), Lancashire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Lincoln (parts of Holland), Bedfordshire, Norfolk, Suffolk (East and West), Surrey, Middlesex, Isle of Wight, and the Boroughs of Leicester, Dewsbury, Norwich, and Croydon.

We therefore respectfully submit to your consideration the above amendments as meeting the justice of the case with regard to the fair-ground industry and the avocation in life of the travelling showman.

We consider that the popular fairs of the people should not be at the mercy of an individual resident or a single passenger, but that the people's fairs should be allowed to depend upon a proper expression and representation of a majority of the residents in any given district.

We therefore respectfully beg that you will refuse your sanction to the bye-laws unless they are modified or amended along the lines we have ventured to set before you.

Signed on behalf of the Guild Executive,

GEORGE SANGER, President,
THOMAS HORNE, Chaplain.

Those of our readers who remember the negotiations with the Lancashire County Council will see that the dispute with the Chester County Council is pursuing a somewhat similar course. It appears to be necessary in every case that a petition be sent to the Home Secretary, who, in the exercise of his discretion, may refer the matter back to the County Council for reconsideration. We again wish to emphasise the importance to showmen of taking notice of all bye-law proposals, and also the importance of sending newspaper cuttings relating to bye-laws immediately to the Guild Secretary, care of this office.

The Home Secretary has sent the following reply to the showmen's petition against the bye-laws :—

"Home Office,
"Dec. 11, 1906.

"SIR,—I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, and to say that the same shall receive due attention.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"M. D. CHALMERS.

"Rev. T. Horne."

So thoroughly advanced are the general arrangements for the twenty-eighth annual World's Fair at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, that Mr. T. E. Read is only waiting for the exit of the Cattle Show, to start the building up of this colossal exhibition, which promises to be the very best on record.

COED PORTH fancy fair was held by J. Greatoreaux's flying horses, boats, Winchester range, and motors, Mander's giant electrograph, T. Connor's Winchester range and strength tester, and Leonard Greatoreaux's football saloon and miniature roundabout.

THE BRIXTON DISPUTE.

MEETING OF ARTISTS.

A meeting of members of the Variety Artists' Federation was held at the Horns, Kennington, on Sunday evening, for the purpose of discussing matters in connection with the dispute between Mr. Walter Gibbons and the artists who were engaged to appear at the Brixton Hippodrome and the Empress. Mr. Joe O'Gorman occupied the chair, and he was supported by the members of the executive committee of the Federation, as well as Mr. J. W. Williams (general secretary of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union), Mr. Jesson, L.C.C., Mr. Claud Bartram (International Artists' Lodge), and Mr. W. Johnson (Stage Employees' Association).

The chairman very briefly opened the meeting by referring to what has now been fully dealt with in the Press. In reference to the statement made by a newspaper to the effect that the Water Rats were gnawing at the Variety Artists' Federation, he had to say that it was a malicious and wilful falsehood.

MR. FRANK GERALD, the secretary of the Federation, read his report. He stated that when the V.A.F. started, a letter was sent to all managers, asking for certain concessions. All they got in reply from Mr. Walter Gibbons was a mere acknowledgment. He (the speaker) thought that the matinée question was one which should receive their earnest attention. He had been in communication with Mr. Jesson, L.C.C., secretary of the Musicians' Society, and a deputation was received by the Labour group of the Council at Spring Gardens. The result of the meeting was a triumph for their cause. They had been supplied by Labour Members with questions to be asked on licensing days regarding barring clauses, matinées, &c., and several such questions had been asked but a few days previously. Then, as to what happened last week at Brixton. Telegrams were sent from the Federation to all the artists, telling them not to change over from one hall to the other. Eleven members of the Federation obeyed the instructions, and only four previously advertised turns appeared at each house. Mr. Gibbons was waited upon, but he would not agree to the minimum terms offered by our executive. They had received votes of confidence and thanks from all over the country from other branches, and during the week just concluded had secured seventy-five new members.

THE CHAIRMAN then read to the meeting the resolution, which was as follows :—"That this meeting unanimously endorses the action of the executive committee of the Variety Artists' Federation with reference to the Hippodrome and Empress, Brixton, and urges them to continue their efforts to obtain the eradication of the matinée clause, the new transfers clause, the varying times clause, and other objectionable clauses that do not constitute an equitable contract, the establishment of a board of arbitration, and the extirpation of other existing conditions that are a hindrance to our trade and profession."

MR. HARRY MOUNTFORD, in moving the resolution, said that they had no personal animus against Mr. Gibbons or any other manager. What they did quarrel about was the system which was put in force against them. It was not a strike on the previous Monday. They were there at the Empress, Brixton, to go on, and they were not allowed to go on. Mr. Gibbons had in his contracts a clause such as this :—"The artist is engaged at the Brixton Hippodrome, or any other hall under the manager's direction." In that way, and by changing about, he got the exclusive services of an artist at a third of the salary that should be paid. For instance, an artist might be engaged to appear at the Islington Empire, and might be told to go to Willesden or Croydon. There was another of Mr. Gibbons' clauses, to the effect that he could vary the times at his discretion. They had, however, brought about one improvement. With all the contracts now it was agreed that for members of the Variety Artists' Federation, six matinées will mean only two.

MR. CLAUD BARTRAM, in seconding the resolution, referred to the transfer clause, which he considered a grave injustice to the artists. The fact that an artist was called upon to transfer from one hall to another which happened to be next door, was only one step towards being called to go from Aberdeen to Southampton. The Federation was formed for the purpose of improving their contracts, and it had already effected something towards that end. So far as the present dispute was concerned, they had expected to have to make a stand, and he was sorry to say that when they did make a stand some of their members did not support the executive committee.

MR. J. W. WILLIAMS, the general secretary of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, remarked that it spoke well for the success of the Federation that they could bring together such a big and enthusiastic meeting as that he was addressing. He advised them not to listen to the statements of their opponents; they must have absolute confidence in the integrity of their committee.

COUNCILLOR COX, L.C.C., expressed his pleasure at being invited to the meeting, and hoped that the artists would stick together.

MR. JESSON, of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, said he thought that the musicians, stage employees, and artists should amalgamate, and form one huge Federation. The old proprietors and managers of theatres and music halls had given place to trusts and syndicates, whose directors had no interest in the entertainment world beyond obtaining profits by exploiting the talents of the artists. The capitalists had organised, and how were the artists to hold their own against the trusts if they did not organise as well? He would mention, by the way, that there was a likelihood of Mr. Frank Gerald being brought forward in March as a Labour candidate for the L.C.C.

MR. W. JOHNSON, of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, expressed his belief in the value of the Federation, which had evidently come to stay, and would do more good than was at present realised, for it would not only help the stars, but the whole profession as a body. The members must, above all things, be loyal, and the only place for the man who was not loyal was outside. The speaker also said that his Association was ready to give all the assistance in its power to the Federation.

MR. MACGREGOR, of the Brixton Trades Council, remarked that his Council had much pleasure in meeting Mr. Gerald last Friday, and they were having ten thousand bills distributed amongst their fellow unionists, urging them to keep away from the halls whose managers were unjust in their demands to artists.

The resolution was put to the meeting, and it was carried, seemingly unanimously.

THE CHAIRMAN, in his concluding remarks, said :—It is common property that I disagree with the action of the executive committee who acted in this case. Of course, this action must now be adhered to, but I do say that any action so momentous, and liable to bring upon us such grave consequences, must not be passed in a hole-and-corner fashion, but by a properly convened meeting, and I wish to put before you a motion to that effect. I am not here to open old wounds, but I do wish things done in the way proper to a rightly-organised institution.

The chairman's motion was then proposed and carried, and the meeting, after the usual vote of thanks had been passed, dispersed.

THE sympathy of his many friends has gone out to Mr. Henry W. Garrick, the Press representative of the London Hippodrome, who lost his young wife with terrible suddenness a fortnight since.

"The Era" Annual (1s.) is, of course, issued by our premier theatrical journal, which, under the literary supervision of Mr. T. F. O'Connor, has recently improved an already strong position. The Annual is better than ever, and includes, besides details of all plays produced in London, the provinces, Paris, and Berlin, lists of all theatres and music halls in the United Kingdom, &c., many stories and sketches by and portraits of actors and actresses. It is a remarkable shillingsworth; useful and interesting to all playgoers and members of the profession alike.—Sunday Sun, Jan. 21, '06.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1906.
"The Era" Almanac and Annual for 1906, is not only a valuable collection of information and a history of the dramatic and musical year. It is also a very amusing and entertaining shillingsworth It contains contributions from many well-known actors and actresses. Mr. Frank Desprez, the editor, contributes a delightful story about an actress who sold her collection of Press notices in order to help a colleague in distress. There are numerous portraits. MAKE UP YOUR MIND! One of the things you want in Panto. is a chorus-song with "grip" and "go" in it; one that will hold your audience from first note to last, and then leave them wanting more.
Two songs fulfilling these conditions are
and
"WHY DO THE GIRLS LOVE CHARLIE?"
by the Author-Composer of
"MOLLY, I LOVE YOU!"
one of last season's biggest hits.
Recent trial-trips have proved them to be THE REAL THING.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS.

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not re-booked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follows:—

MANCHESTER, LIVERPOOL, AND DISTRICT
MR. ALAN W. YOUNG,

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,

THE DOLL MAKER'S DAUGHTER.

At a small shop where a speciality is made of mechanical dolls, the daughter of the proprietor is busy winding up a model about her own height. The doll walks stiffly from her box and goes through many wonderful antics, which the girl copies very cleverly. As the machine runs down in the toy it travels to a corner of the shop and leans against one of the walls just behind a large box out of sight. An idea suddenly striking the youngster, she dons similar clothes to the figure and enters the large case, just as the proprietor, her father, ushers in a likely purchaser. The small customer, a princess, has her governess and an officer in attendance. The imperial child is enraptured with the supposed doll which the shopkeeper shows her, and at once commands the purchase to be made. The proprietor, delighted at his good fortune, rubs his hands in self-congratulation as the goods are taken out. Starting to rearrange his cases, he is astonished at seeing a doll leaning against the wall. Searching around he discovers his daughter's discarded garments, and the truth dawns upon him that he has just sold his daughter! In a beautiful room the child walks in, and orders her new dolly to be brought in. Her Royal father enters the room just as the figure is being wound up, and watches with much surprise the various movements. One of the officers in attendance on his master closely watches the doll rather suspiciously. Upon being left alone in the room with the figure, which is standing in an awkward attitude, the officer pulls her hair, and drawing his sword, lightly touches her with it on the leg. These efforts to disclose the humanity of the figure being unsuccessful, he obtains a rat, and puts it near one of her feet. He laughs aloud, as the poor girl, thoroughly frightened, rushes away and mounts a chair. Going to the scared girl, and lifting her from her position, he kisses and reassures her. His highness, on entering the room suddenly, sees the movement of the girl, and going straight up to her looks into her eyes and passes his hand over her face, which makes "dolly" break forth into a broad smile. The man takes her upon his knee and fondles her. At this moment the officer, who has already learnt the secret, enters the room and watches with envy and annoyance his master's caresses. He rushes from the room in search of his mistress, as he sees his chief offer to take the girl for a motor ride. Upon the girl's acceptance the Prince leaves the room, to give orders for his machine to be got ready. The girl once again strikes her dollish attitude as she hears the door open. This time, however, it is her father who enters, and he soon brings the girl to her senses. As he catches her roughly by the arm she sinks on the floor and sobs. He orders her to rise, and has the real doll brought in. As soon as they are alone he locks the door, takes out the doll, and pushes the girl into the box. The man then leaves the house, and has the box containing his daughter carried out. A short time after in comes his highness, arrayed for the motor trip. As he goes down upon one knee his jealous subordinate walks in, accompanied by his mistress. Seeing his wife in the room the man rises hastily, and in doing so the doll falls over, one leg sticking inelegantly in the air. The tables are turned upon the officer, as it is disclosed that the figure is a real doll and not a living being! His mistress shows her annoyance, and the Prince makes the best of a foolish situation.

FOX HUNTING.

IN 23 DIFFERENT SCENES.

Section I. LEAVING THE KENNELS.—"Simply marvellous."—Standard.
The Hounds scratching at the gate, anxious to get out. Huntsmen and hounds leaving.

Section II. ON THE WAY TO THE MEET.—"Tit-bits of the first order."—The Field.
Huntsmen, runners and hounds coming through the woods and crossing a swollen ford with the water well over the huntsmen's boot tops. Horsemen, Lady Riders, traps, lads on ponies on their way to Milton.

Section III. THE MEET.—"Full of the most interesting details."—The Bystander.

Section V. THROWING HOUNDS INTO COVERT.—"The best representation of the winter sport that can be imagined."—Morning Leader.

Section VI. THE FOX BREAKING COVERT.—"The 'view-hollos' and 'tally-ho' were loudly cried by excited hunting people in the fauteuils."—The Bystander.

Huntsmen, Hounds and Riders taking hedges in full cry. Along the road, over fields, away they go helter-skelter. Another view of the fox is also shown.

Section IX. "FOR'D AWAY."—"Again the fox comes down the screen at full speed, with that twisting action one knows so well."—The Field.
Reynard is closely followed by the hounds and huntsmen. Again we see the field in full cry. Two fine incidents happen in this section. One is a terrible tumble and the other the pony clearing a fence on his own chased by the luckless rider.

Section XI. RETURN TO KENNELS.—"Brimful of life and healthy movement."—The Star.

Section XII. FEEDING AND LOOKING OVER HOUNDS.—"The Public will loudly applaud the pictures."—The Sportsman.

Section XIII. THE LAST HOME.—"And then——there is seen a plaintive figure limping home across a field ever so slowly and so sorry for himself. A pathetic expression, and scarcely able to move, but he will get there eventually. The expression of that dog is human——"—The Express.

A MARVELLOUS AND UNIQUE COMBINATION OF GRANDEUR, VARIETY, AND ADVENTURE.

This further Dolomite Series depicts the most difficult Mountaineering Venture in the World. Of these scenes, the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS says:—

THE STAGE ARC LIGHT OF THE FUTURE.

THE
MACHIN ELDORADO STAGE LANTERN

(Fully Patented and Protected).

These lamps have been designed by an expert in stage lighting, and have proved themselves a great success where fitted.

Among the many advantages claimed are a Saving in Current of from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. over battens, without taking the cost of incandescent lamps into account; a great saving in labour, one man can easily control twenty lamps with one lever-board; all battens and lengths can be dispensed with; specially-prepared flexible coloured mediums are used; the danger from falling glass is thus avoided; the simplicity of construction, there is no danger of them getting out of order; they can be adapted to any stage; no counter weights are required, and the lamps cast no shadows, thereby getting over a difficulty stage-managers of big productions have had to contend with in the past; they flood the entire stage with a powerful, soft, sunlight effect, not the steel cold light of the ordinary stage lamp; there are no shadows and no flickering.

A perfect stage lamp in every way, which will meet a long-felt want. The saving in current will pay the cost of the lamps in a very short period.

"The Era" Annual appears once more in its familiar binding, a compendium of information and amusement for all who are interested in theatrical affairs. In the calendar will be found an array of anniversary dates, some recent, some recalling memories of old times and actors and actresses long passed away. The summary of new plays produced during the past year is admirably done, its value being increased by the alphabetical list which is appended. Well-known actors and actresses contribute stories in accordance with a custom justified by its success.—Daily Telegraph, Jan. 18, 1906.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SYDNEY, Nov. 6, 1906.—Mr. Bland Holt's revival of The Betting Book comes at a singularly appropriate time—just when a Puritanical law prohibits any kind of betting in New South Wales. Mr. and Mrs. Bland Holt are again Ginger and Marjorie Cribb, extracting every possible atom of fun out of the characters. Mr. Walter Baker repeats his performance as Edwin Hurst; the Frank Wilton is by Mr. Albert Norman; and Mr. Charles Brown scores all along as the Jew bookmaker. The other characters are by Misses Harrie Ireland, Jennie Pollock, Violet Canty, Mr. Arthur Styan, and Mr. Carleton Stuart. The Betting Book will not be closed for some time.

"THE CHRISTIAN," though several times acted here in past years, has increased in attraction at Her Majesty's each night with the sterling cast engaged by Mr. J. C. Williamson. The chief characters, by Miss Ola J. Humphreys, Mrs. G. B. W. Lewis, Mr. Charles Waldron, and Mr. Cyril MacKay, are soundly played.

MESSRS. MEYNELL AND GUNN will produce The Little Stranger at the Palace Theatre on the 17th, with a strong company, largely composed of residential performers.

THE Tivoli has a big list of first-class artists just now, the programme including Duncan and Godfrey, Cassie Walmer, Alf. Chester, Victor Kelly, Miss Brightie Smith, Austin and Hartley, the Phillips Brothers, Ibsen Brothers, Harry Tate's company, Jessie Jee, George Bentley, Olive Robinson, Nellie Maher, and Tim Howard. The Gaumont chronophone discloses new pictures, "The Swing Song" from Veronique, and a fine one of Mrs. Harry Rickards presenting the prizes at the annual London Music Hall Sports.

SYDNEY, Nov. 13.—The Virginian, as a drama depicting American ranch life, is complete in every detail, and, as acted by Mr. J. C. Williamson's company at Her Majesty's, keeps an audience intensely interested. Miss Ola Humphrey as the schoolmarm, Molly Wood, has a strenuous rôle, in which she is quite successful. Mr. Charles Waldron is manly as the Virginian, and, following up his success as the Indian chief in The Squaw Man, Mr. Hardee Kirkland makes the scoundrel, Trampas, stand cut in rugged prominence. The quaint geniality of Uncle Heevie is admirably depicted by Mr. Edwin Lester; Judge Henry is well cared for by Mr. George Carey; and Mr. Rapley Holmes scores as Honey Wiggin. Mrs. G. B. W. Lewis is a motherly Mrs. Heny, and Miss Ada Stirling a handsome, obtuse Mrs. Ogden.

"THE EMPEROR" is a new comic opera by Mr. W. Arundel Orchard, and Mr. W. J. Curtis, barrister-at-law. These gentlemen had previously collaborated in The Coquette with success, and the production of this more ambitious effort was awaited with interest. The Palace Theatre was secured, and after the performance the delighted audience called the artists, composer, and author with great enthusiasm. The plot is distinctly good, the period ancient Roman. The book is well written, being full of humour and wit. Mr. Orchard's music is excellent, particularly the choral portion. The Emperor is worthy of attention by managers, and I am told that it is likely to be seen in London.

THE Tivoli has a new and vivid sensation in the Alaskas, who created a furore on the 10th inst. by their marvellous turn.

MR. TOM H. RAINFORD, the best known of our concert and operatic basses, died on the 9th, at the age of seventy-five. He came here with the Leslie and Bacchus Minstrels in the sixties, and has been a great favourite. He had a stroke of paralysis a couple of years ago. Mr. Rainford was buried at Waverly Cemetery on the 10th, a picked number of vocalists singing "The long day closes" over his grave.

MELBOURNE, Nov. 13.—PRINCESS THEATRE (Lessees, the Brough-Flemming Comedy Co.).—The Brough-Flemming Comedy Company returned to Melbourne on Saturday evening, and was accorded a most enthusiastic reception by a crowded house. STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

ANOTHER, and fatal, accident resulting from the thoughtless practice of pulling the trigger of stage pistols has occurred. The victim is Mr. Charles Christian, assistant stage-carpenter, who for fourteen years past has been employed under Mr. J. D. Hunter's management at the Hastings Pier Pavilion. Mr. Hunter's company had given its last performance of The Danites on the 1st inst., and Ernest Tubbs, another stage hand, was returning the pistols to their case, unaware that one was loaded, and aimlessly had several times clicked the trigger of one, or perhaps both, as he went to the dressing-room, when deceased, sitting on a dressing-basket, received the charge in his thigh at close quarters. He was at once taken to the East Sussex Hospital. The doctor at first treated him as an out-patient, and he appeared to progress satisfactorily, but last week blood-poisoning and tetanus supervened, and though admitted to the hospital again, he died from lockjaw on Monday last. The unfortunate man leaves a wife and three children; and Ernest Tubbs, who from boyhood was his fellow-employee, regrets too late the sad result of his thoughtlessness.

GRAND THEATRE, ISLINGTON.

On Monday, Dec. 17,
the Drama, in Four Acts, entitled
"A BEAUTIFUL FIEND."

For the concluding week of the dramatic season the above drama is paying Islington a third visit, Messrs. Beaudyn and Livesey's company being responsible for the production. Nothing now need be said about the drama itself, which lends itself readily to effective acting and mounting, and it is again exercising its familiar attraction on the patrons of this theatre. Mr. Montague Beaudyn as Paulovitch acts the repellent rôle with power and effect, and gains the usual reception from the "gods." Mr. J. P. McBride as Kasaleff gives a sound performance, making the most of his many opportunities. Mr. Albert Wray as Strogoff is good; he has but few openings, however. Mr. Harry Oats as Christopher Crackles provides abundant laughter, his acting being very humorous. Mr. W. Robertson Foulis as Malachi also does well. Mrs. Arthur Mewburn as Trolski submits a capital study that deserves all praise; Miss Irene Munro as Nadine plays with sympathy and power, and has made a good impression. Miss Annie Cherier as Patty is bright and vivacious, and does much for the comedy scenes; Miss V. St. Lawrence in the title-rôle acts with power, and to her much of the success of the performance is due. Numerous smaller parts are all capitally filled, and the drama is received with every sign of popular approval. The scenery and mounting are above reproach. On Tuesday next pantomime holds sway here, Mr. Samuel James producing his second annual, Jack and the Beanstalk.

WHEN Mr. Beerbohm Tree brought out The Charlatan at the Haymarket Theatre he had been trying in vain to obtain an illusion of a vision. Finally, he sent for Mr. J. N. Maskelyne, of Egyptian Hall fame, stating that the time was very short, as he was going to produce the play the next day. Mr. Maskelyne and his son worked at the theatre from eleven o'clock until two o'clock in the morning, and were lucky enough to get an illusion ready for Mr. Tree. It simply consisted of a little luminous speck of light which appeared at the back of the stage, and gradually extended into the head and bust of a performer. Everybody was delighted that the idea worked so satisfactorily.

AMERICAN AMUSEMENTS.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEW YORK, DEC. 5.—Susan in Search of a Husband, a comedy in three acts, adapted by Eugene W. Presbrey from a short story by Jerome K. Jerome, was produced at the Liberty Theatre a few days ago, with Miss Eleanor Robson in the title-rôle, this being the second of the series of new plays in which she is to appear during the present season under the management of Messrs. Liebler and Co. Susan Gambett, a young American girl who applies for a situation as chambermaid at a Welsh inn, was married seven years ago to a sailor in New York. He disappeared immediately after the ceremony, and she has searched for him in vain. At the inn she meets an old friend, Miss Pennicuique, an American heiress, who has made an impression upon a certain Lord Rathbone. The latter arrives at the inn, and in order to test his sincerity Susan and her friend exchange identities, and Lord Rathbone proves to be Susan's long-lost husband. He fails to recognise her, however, but is plainly smitten, and when Susan has completely captivated him she tells him that Miss Pennicuique, the pseudo-chambermaid, is his deserted wife, just at the moment when the latter is unjustly accused by the landlady of stealing some silver spoons. To the relief of Susan, Rathbone stands by his supposed wife and acknowledges her. This satisfies Susan that her husband is a man to be trusted, and the pair are reunited, the spoons being found in the nest of a predatory crow.

As Susan Gambett, Miss Robson has another congenial part like Merely Mary Ann and Nurse Marjorie, and she plays it charmingly. Mr. H. B. Warner is manly and sincere as Lord Rathbone. Miss Isabel Irving and Mr. Reuben Fax distinguish themselves in important rôles.

"A TENEMENT TRAGEDY," a one-act play by Clotilde Graves, is presented as an after-piece. The scene is laid in the East End of London, but the story bears a strong resemblance to a tragedy in real life that actually occurred in New York a few months ago. Bill Kelsey, a young coster, has married a girl named Tina, who has been employed by an Italian organ-grinder. The girl is totally ignorant of the difference between right and wrong, and has been ill-used by her brutal employer. Conversing with Kelsey's blind mother just after the wedding, she learns that she is unfit to be a wife. Kelsey receives an anonymous letter containing information which impels him to seek the Italian for the purpose of killing him. During his absence, the Italian calls on Tina, and in the quarrel that ensues she stabs and kills him. The wife of the Italian witnesses the murder through the window, and Tina gives herself up to the police as the curtain falls. The little play is cleverly acted by Miss Robson, Miss Emily Rigl, Miss Ada Duyer, Mr. H. B. Warner, and Mr. Frederic de Belleville.

THE English version of Puccini's three-act opera, Madam Butterfly, is delighting large audiences nightly at the Garden Theatre. The principal male rôles are filled by prominent members of Mr. Henry W. Savage's English Grand Opera Company, including Messrs. Francis Maclennan and Joseph F. Sheehan, tenors; Messrs. Winfred Goff and Thomas D. Richards, baritones; and Mr. Robert Kent Parker, basso. The title-part is sung in rotation by Mme. Elza Szamosy, from the Budapest Royal Opera; Mme. Rena Vivienne, a pupil of M. Victor Maurel; and Miss Florence Easton; while Miss Harriet Behnée and Miss Estelle Bloomfield alternate as Suzuki, the maid. The opera is mounted in exquisite taste, and has scored such an emphatic success that it will remain at the Garden Theatre for at least several months to come.

"SIR ANTHONY," a comedy in three acts, by C. Haddon Chambers, has just had a brief but successful run at the Savoy Theatre. The purpose of the play, apparently, is to rebuke the practice of tuft-hunting by placing it in a ridiculous light. Clarence Chope, a young clerk employed by a Mr. Bulger, who deals in bacon, has crossed the Atlantic to New York to testify in a law suit. On the way over he has met Sir Anthony Mellish, a former Cabinet Minister, and he returns to his mother's house at Herne Hill with a monocle and all the airs of a superior person, and representing himself to be the intimate friend of Sir Anthony. His sweetheart, Olive Bruton, is enraptured with the new Clarence, his mother is greatly impressed, his employer invites him to dinner, and his pastor talks of making him a deacon. His rival in love, Bob Morrison, a rude young man of pugilistic proclivities, hates him, of course, and his sister Sally has her doubts, but she stands by him. Sir Anthony is not in evidence at all, but his private secretary writes pointed letters repudiating Mr. Clarence Chope. The scenes are laid in Mrs. Chope's modest suburban drawing-room and in the conservatory of Mr. Bulger's mansion at Dulwich. In the first act we have Clarence in his glory, in the second the fall of Clarence, and in the third his redemption, brought about by his victory over his rival in a fistic encounter, which is not seen but heard, and is described in an effective and comical manner by Clarence's sister and sweetheart, who witness the combat from a window.

"THE DAUGHTERS OF MEN," the latest play from the pen of Charles Klein, author of The Lion and the Mouse, deals with the problem of capital and labour. Grace Crosby is the daughter of Matthew Crosby, an arrogant plutocrat, who is fighting federated interests opposed to capital. He leads a hollow life in which Mammon is god. His daughter Grace, tiring of such an existence, falls in love with John Stedman, a young lawyer, who has dedicated his life to the uplifting of the labouring class. Old Crosby is enraged, and tries to break off the match, but all that Grace will do is to go to Stedman and ask him to settle the differences between Crosby and those who work for wages. In Stedman's rooms she encounters Louise Stolbeck, known as "the Daughter of the People." She is the child of a German Socialist, and has come to warn the lawyer of a plot to ruin him. Her father, believing that the love of Stedman for Grace has caused him to turn traitor to the cause, is plotting against him, and the girl openly denounces Miss Crosby when she finds her with Stedman. The representatives of capital and labour come together, and begin a discussion of their difficulties which is apparently to end in the complete undoing of Stedman, but when the situation appears to be hopeless the senior member of the "Federated Companies" agrees to a compromise, being old-fashioned enough to believe that business dealings should not be utterly devoid of sentiment. The outcome brings happiness to the lovers, and is satisfactory for the cause of labour as well as capital. The play has been well received at the Astor Theatre, the principal characters being ably represented by Mr. Herbert Kelcey, Miss Effie Shannon, Mr. Orrin Johnson, Mr. Ralph Delmore, Mr. George Parsons, Miss Dorothy Donnelly, and Miss Grace Filkins.

MR. EDWARD PEPLE, who wrote The Prince Chap, is the author of a new play, entitled The Love Route, which has had a favourable reception at the Lincoln Square Theatre, a new playhouse at the corner of Sixty-sixth-street and Broadway. The play is melodrama of the good old-fashioned sort, and is interspersed with many comical and highly-entertaining situations. The scenes move rapidly from New York to Texas, and the plot has to do with the efforts of some Eastern financiers to build a railroad through a Texan ranch in defiance of the wishes of the young woman who owns the place. The financiers place the construction of the road in the hands of a stalwart young engineer. He falls in love with the pretty ranch owner, and she reciprocates his affection, but refuses to allow the railroad to be built through her property. In the ensuing complications and conflicts of love and duty there is plenty of "gun play" on the Texan ranch, and a liberal supply of strong language of the frontier. The engineer is shot down by the ranch foreman at the end of the third act as the climax of a stirring and realistic railway building scene. He ultimately recovers, and finds the railroad completed by his sweetheart, who was stricken with remorse as she saw her lover fall. Mr. Guy Standing gives a fine impersonation of the young engineer, John Ashby, his fine physique standing him in good stead for such a rôle, and Miss Odette Tyler is very popular as his sweetheart, Allene Houston.

MISS LENA ASHWELL, who created the title-rôle in Mrs. Dane's Defence when the play was first produced in England, and Miss Margaret Anglin, who played Mrs. Dane in the American representations, made two joint appearances lately in the above-named play at the Princess Theatre. At the first performance Miss Ashwell impersonated Mrs. Dane, and Miss Anglin was seen as Lady Eastney. On the following afternoon the two rôles were reversed. Thus a highly-interesting study in contrasts was afforded, each exponent revealing the qualities which have so agreeably impressed the playgoers of London and New York respectively.

MME. ALLA NAZIMOVA, a Russian actress, who won high praise by her admirable work in M. Paul Orleneff's company of players, recently made her début upon the English-speaking stage at the Princess Theatre in Ibsen's Hedda Gabler, and scored a most emphatic success, her complete mastery of the English language during the last twelve months being a remarkable achievement. Her embodiment of Hedda Gabler was lifelike and convincing. Mme. Nazimova is appearing in this character at a series of matinées, under the direction of Mr. Henry Miller, who is very much in the public eye at the present time as an actor-manager and producer of plays. Mrs. Sarah Cowell Lemoyne is giving special matinée performances of Browning's Pippa Passes at the Majestic Theatre, under Mr. Miller's direction, and his delineation of an uncouth plainsman in The Great Divide is applauded heartily every night at the Princess Theatre.

MR. JAMES K. HACKETT recently appeared in The Walls of Jericho at Ottawa. On the opening night there was a brilliant and representative audience, Earl Grey, the Governor-General, attending with his suite.

MME. FRITZI SCHEFF laid the corner-stone of the new Edwin Forrest Theatre in Philadelphia last week. In the stone were placed copies of the local papers and signed photographs of a number of prominent players.

MISS GEORGIA CAYVAN, for many years one of the most popular actresses in America, died on the 20th ult. in a sanatorium. Her mind became affected about seven years ago as the result of an unjust accusation in connection with a society divorce case. For several years she had been an honoured member of the old Lyceum Theatre company under Mr. Daniel Frohman. Three years ago the entire theatrical profession rallied to her aid and gave a benefit performance, at which the sum of 8,000 dols. was realised, this ensuring her comfort during the last few years of her life.

MESSRS. B. F. KEITH AND F. F. PROCTOR have opened a new vaudeville theatre in Jersey City. The house is thoroughly modern and beautiful in its appointments, and every possible precaution has been taken to guard against fire. The asbestos curtain is operated from the stage floor instead of from overhead, and the dressing-rooms are in a separate building, connected with the stage by fireproof doors.

MISS JENNIE YEAMANS, daughter of Mrs. Annie Yeamans, and sister of Mrs. Lydia Yeamans-Titus, died in New York on the 28th ult., of tuberculosis.

IN the opinion of Mr. Alfred Sutro, what we need in this country is not so much a repertory theatre, where the plays of past successful writers could be produced, as a theatre with a man at the head of it who would recognise talent, and discounting blemishes, would give a chance to the man who could show he had the [illegible]. For eleven years Mr. Sutro has been knocking at doors which have refused [illegible]

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Described as a romantic drama, The Tyrant, produced by Miss Marie Dagmar and Mr. Fred C. Somerfield at the Royal Osborne Theatre, Manchester, on Monday last, is a story of love, jealousy, and revenge. In the manner of its development no one can complain that incident is lacking; indeed, it errs on the side of profusion, especially in the first act, which is so complicated by the various threads that it is hard to distinguish the main line of interest. The "Tyrant" is Angelo, Governor of Padua (so one gathers from the dialogue), and though he is a strong and a mericiless ruler, capable of implacable hatred, he has just that weakness for women which has proved the downfall of many others of his kind—among them some notable historical examples. Three years antecedent to the action he had married by force, without love, but for her money, a fair and gentle lady called Katherine, whose heart was then, and is still, in the keeping of Rudolph, the Prince de Roma. Katherine is now kept a close prisoner at his palace, while he carries on a serious flirtation with Tisbe, an actress, at the latter's mansion—the opening scene. But Tisbe is a pretender, for she also is in love with Rudolph, who for purposes of his own has been leading Tisbe to believe in his affection for her, while still cherishing a tender memory of Katherine. The worst thing against Angelo, however, is that he has seized a poor half-demented girl and outraged her out of sheer brutality, and when he finds her raving in the street, trying to escape and find her brother, he coolly orders her to be executed, on the pretext that she had made an attempt upon his life. The order is not carried out, and the brother and sister meet. This brother is a formidable personage named Homodei, from Venice, in the course of whose search for his sister it transpires that he is hugging a feeling of hatred against Katherine, the wife of Angelo, for having refused his love with scorn. He seems omniscient; he knows all about everyone concerned in this intricate situation, and one of his schemes is to bring disaster upon Katherine and Rudolph by compromising the guiltless lovers and turning both Angelo and Tisbe upon them at the critical moment. From this subtle design arises the clever and dramatic climax of the second act (in Katherine's bedroom), a really satisfactory piece of work, in which the further discovery is made by Tisbe that Katherine, whom otherwise she would have sacrificed to certain death, was the girl who had once saved the life of Tisbe's mother by intercession. Homodei is thus defeated, but Angelo is not satisfied with the joint evasions of Tisbe and Katherine, and is subsequently assured of the existence of a lover by his intercepting an unsigned letter from Rudolph to his wife. A later scene in Katherine's bedroom promises to end in the fair lady's death, in view of which her husband has provided a headsman's axe and a draped block upon the bed; but this, at Tisbe's suggestion, is waived for the cleaner expedient of poison. The upshot is that the poison which Katherine is forced to take, and which has been provided by Tisbe, is not poison at all, but a sleeping draught; and the access of pity for Katherine which now inspires Tisbe impels the latter to have the apparently lifeless body conveyed to her mansion, wherein we see it lying upon Tisbe's bed. Homodei, in the meantime, having discovered that the author of the outrage upon his sister is Angelo, has taken a sinister resolve to kill the tyrant; and his movements to this end are simplified by his having revealed himself to sundry of the tyrant's bodyguard as one of the Council of Ten. Preliminary to the end of the play, therefore, a terrible scene is enacted by Homodei and Angelo in the former's home, to which place he has invited Angelo, ostensibly for the purpose of revealing to the latter the name of his wife's lover. Having first given Angelo poison, he then announces his object of revenge. They fight, but the poison is insidious and unnerves Angelo's arm. The coward, not the tyrant, is now revealed. He dies pitifully, stabbed and cursed repeatedly by Homodei. After this nothing remains but to end the play as agreeably as may be. It is done cleverly. The despair of Tisbe; the rage of Rudolph, who would kill her for her connivance at the supposed murder of Katherine; the awakening and intercession of Katherine at the critical moment; Tisbe's attempt to poison herself, utterly hopeless now of Rudolph's love; the appearance of Homodei with his sister, whom he confides to the care of Tisbe; and the uniting of the lovers, all combine to make a thoroughly interesting and skilful conclusion. Much comic interest is contrasted against these serious events, and much laughter was created by it on Monday. Miss Lizzie Chambers, Mr. Lynn, and Mr. Albert Rogers did their work in this line very well indeed, and were appreciated as they deserved.

Miss Marie Dagmar's rendering of Tisbe stood out prominently as the work of an actress skilled in emotional and character parts. From the first moments of her dissimulation and bitter jealousy to her transfiguration by the power of love—a disappointed but potentially heroic woman—she retained the sympathy of the house. Of Homodei, embodied by Mr. Fred C. Somerfield, complimentary words must also be written; a reserved and powerful delineation, it reached a high pitch of drama both in the scene of his sister's revelation about Angelo and in his arraignment of the tyrant in the latter's final hours. Mr. Roy Fortescue as Angelo acted well, yet hardly seemed to embody the frightful villainy of the man, perhaps because of the lack of sinister features in his make-up. As Rudolph, Prince de Roma, Mr. Lionel Atwill looked well, and acted with a manly emphasis that was invested with just the right tone of sincerity and sympathy; he was, in fact, one of the marked successes of the evening. Mr. Alec Findlater also deserves a word of praise for a bold, though somewhat overdrawn, depiction of the mean Lieutenant Taska. Miss Theresa Osborne was particularly well suited by the rôle of Katherine, the suffering but guiltless wife; and Miss Clara Santley offered a neat and reserved impersonation of Daphne, Katherine's maid. The part of Eulie, Homodei's sister, was in the hands of Miss Lallah Shelton, who made quite a success of a difficult task in which many might easily have failed; and as Pan, Rudolph's friend, Mr. Alec Mayheu gave a quietly satisfactory performance.

The play was well received, and is likely to prove a prominent and highly successful acquisition to current drama. It is staged and costumed brilliantly.

PLAYERS OF THE PERIOD.

MR. ROBERT MILSTEAD.

Mr. Robert Milstead's first appearance on the stage was made as a violinist at the age of eight, but early promise in this direction was not fulfilled, as at eighteen his violin master—of course, a different one—brought him the same "concert" sonata, telling him to "have a cut at it," but he feared it was too difficult for him.

Mr. Milstead says he never quite knew why, but he started engineering when he left school, and was articled to a London firm of consulting engineers. Most of their work was in connection with various theatres, and while with them he worked at the Grand, Fulham, the Kennington Theatre, the Bradford Music Hall, and Wyndham's Theatre. Later on he toured the United States with an idea of finishing his engineering education; and this he literally accomplished, as on his return to England he promptly joined Mr. Ben Greet's Royal Family company. While in America, Mr. Milstead figured in the Colorado papers as the hero of a small adventure with card sharks, in which, with his usual luck, he came off best.

One of the passengers on the return voyage was a well-known American dramatist, who was on the look out for a promising young English actress for a leading part in America, and Mr. Milstead was loud in his praises of Miss Edith Wynne Matthison. He does not know whether she was ever approached on the subject, but he is very proud of his "spot" for a future star.

MR. ROBERT MILSTEAD.

After playing a large number of small parts with Mr. Ben Greet's own company on tour and in Pastorals, Mr. Milstead joined his Sherlock Holmes company to play Billy and understudy Sid Prince. In a few weeks he was called upon to play the latter part, and he continued in it for the rest of the tour. During the following autumi he was with Mr. Bernard Copping's Répertoire Company in such parts as Diggory, Glavis, Piper (Garrick), Gustave de Grignor (Ladies' Battle), and Bamfield (Sunlight and Shadow), returning later to resume Sid Prince for Mr. Greet. The whole of the following year he was with Mr. J. Bannister Howard's Eternal City company, playing Minghelli and as assistant stage manager. During the vacation, to his great delight he had the opportunity of playing Jerry in Jerry and a Sunbeam, and Sam Gerridge in Caste.

An engagement to play Will and Blib in Bluebell followed in the spring, and in the autumn Mr. Milstead was again under the same management (Messrs. Murray King and Clark) in Sweet and Twenty, playing Eustace for the greater part of the tour, but fininshing up with Prynne when Mr. King himself was out of the cast. Last Christmas he was engaged by Mr. Philip Carr as assistant stage manager at the Royalty Theatre. Asked if he preferred musical comedy to the legitimate, Mr. Milstead's reply was: "Well, I am fond of variety and contrast. Really, I think my preference is for modern comedy, but I am afraid a 'fat' part and a correspondingly 'fat' salary are my first considerations, and so I am rather prejudiced in favour of musical comedy, in addition to which it was in Bluebell that I met my wife." The press notice he prizes most is one that he earned in the "Referee" for his performance of Crab in Two Gentlemen of Verona—"An entertaining, but somewhat impatient comedian."

Mr. Milstead is an occasional contributor to the Press of light articles and poetry; and this year he filled in the vacation by taking the temporary post of secretary to the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. This opportunity came to him through a fellow Wykehamist, and curiously enough his last two theatrical engagements have also been under old Winchester men.

DALSTON THEATRE.

The members of the North London Operatic Society commenced at this Dalston theatre on Tuesday evening a series of five performances of the musical comedy, An Artist's Model. The company consists of fifty performers, and additional zest is imparted to the representations by an augmented orchestra. Miss Mabel Palmer undertakes the title-rôle, appearing as Adele, the rich widow, who formerly was an artist's model. Miss Palmer has a good presence, appears quite at ease in the part, and she sings some rather trying songs with evident ability. She is consistently vivacious throughout the piece. Lady Barbara Cripps finds a dignified representative in Miss C. Macdowall; while Geraldine (a model), is played by Miss Nellie Craig, is piquant, and gets through some dances that give evidence of her sustaining powers. Other lady characters are represented by Miss Netta van Eitzen, Miss May Jennings, and Miss Katharine Craig. Mr. Murray Short causes amusement as James Cripps (husband to Lady Barbara); Mr. Percy Short is quaint as Smoggins; and other characters are sustained by Mr. A. D. Hale as Sir George St. Alban, a diplomatist; Mr. Charles D. Dickinson as his son, an amusing personage; and Mr. Harry Evans, an art student. Mr. Arthur Robey is musical director, and composed the song, "Girls I adore," sung by Mr. Chas. Dickinson in the second act.

THE NEW KING'S THEATRE, SUNDERLAND.

The new two-tier theatre to be opened on Monday next is a worthy addition to the handsome buildings in the Wearside Borough. Situate in a prominent position, the theatre occupies an important coign of vantage at the corner of Crow Tree-road and South-street. The façade of the handsome structure is of Ruabon bricks, with heavy freestone dressings, and is of noble proportions, the architectural features generally being on bold and artistic lines. The main entrance in front is in Crow Tree-road, and is of pleasing design, and leads to a large and lofty vestibule with marble staircases on either side, directly facing the entrance. There is also a broad staircase leading to a slightly lower level, in which is situate the "Parterre." Over this staircase is a fine airing balcony, with a handsomely carved booking or box office in front. The staircases on either side of the vestibule lead to the foyers, of which there are two, one on each side of the circle. These roomy foyers are furnished with comfortable fit-up lounges and chairs, and have large cloak-rooms, saloon, and managerial offices opening from them. The "Parterre," which usurps the whole of the ground area, is the best part of the house, and is devoted solely to orchestra stalls and stalls. This is quite a unique feature, and a distinct departure for the North of England. and one, from a Northerner's point of view, perhaps open to doubt; however, the "proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof," and time can alone solve the utility of such a change. It is fitted throughout with "tip-up" chairs, handsomely upholstered in red plush, the floor being carpeted to match. From every point here there is an uninterrupted view of the stage.

The dress circle is, as already stated, approached through the foyers, and has a fine wide sweep, and is of magnificent proportions, having a seating capacity for about 800 persons. The floor, as well as that of the tier above, rests on steel girders on the cantilever principle; it is composed on the Hennebique system of reinforced concrete, and is, if we are correctly informed, the first raised floor or gallery to be so laid in any theatre in England. The first seven rows are devoted to the "dress circle" patrons, whilst the remaining rows are termed "balcony stalls." There is a considerable slope or rake, each bench being about 18 inches higher than those in front. There is also ample space between, the dress-circle benches being each 3 feet wide, and the balcony benches 2 feet 6 inches apart, thus affording abundance of space between the rows. The line of sight here, as elsewhere, has evidently received careful attention at the hands of the designer, with the best of results. There are two private boxes on each side, for the use of the more exclusive patrons, on a level with the circle, and are constructed of waterproof partitions and fibrous plaster decorations. They have fluted Corinthian columns in front, supporting pediment in canopy, with niche and rich shell above. The roof of the auditorium is an enriched domed ceiling, with semi-circular panels at either side, with large dome and brilliant sun-burner in the centre. The decorations here are cream and gold, with bunches of studded electric lights at each corner of panels. The proscenium opening is 33 feet wide, and about the same height. Over the proscenium is a large cool, with "cartouche" depicting the figure of His Majesty the King. On each side there are Cupids supporting laurels, the whole forming a striking and most artistic design. A large fluted frieze runs up each side of the proscenium opening, the decorations here being of cream, light green, and gold. The whole scheme of colour is highly pleasing and on delicate lines throughout.

The gallery, which is approached from Crow Tree-road and South-street, is on a large scale, with a seating capacity of close upon 1,000. The slope here is also on a sharp rise. It is divided into three divisions, and the front rows form a sort of amphitheatre, separated from the rear ranks by a massive brass rail. On each side there is a stairway and two gangway staircases. The exits are numerous, and sufficient for the now and ever increasing requirements of the licensing authorities.

The orchestra floor is sunk 1 foot below the main "Parterre" floor. It is 6 feet wide and extends the full width of the auditorium, thus affording the audience a clear and uninterrupted view of the stage. The latter is also of ample dimensions, and will suffice for any demand of modern stagecraft. It is 82 feet wide, and has a depth of 44 feet, with baggage and scenery entrances from the street level. It is constructed and fitted with "sinks and rises," "traps," and "bridges," all movable, being laid in sections, and is on the Mazarine principle. The "flies," "paint bridge," and "grid" are all of the latest design and on the most modern and improved principles. No expense seemingly has been spared in any detail or requirement. From the "prompt" side of the stage there are numerous exits, leading to the open street in cases of emergency; whilst from the "o.p." side, which is entered from South-street, there is a vestibule with hall-keeper's office. There are three floors, with large and smaller dressing-rooms, each being replete with lavatory, hot and cold water, heating radiators, electric lights, and gas illuminants, &c. On each of these floors there are provided ample general conveniences for the use of the artists and staff.

The plans are those of Messrs. Hope and Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne, well-known designers of houses of entertainment throughout the United Kingdom; while the constructing contractors are another well-known firm, Messrs. S. F. Davidson and Miller, also of Newcastle-on-Tyne, under the supervision of Mr. J. W. Bell, who, under Mr. Davidson, was responsible for the building of the Grand Theatre, Margate, Gaiety, Birmingham, and the New Palace, Blackburn. The "fibrous" decorations and paintings are the work of Mr. De Jong, of London, whose representative, Mr. J. Latimer, is to be congratulated upon the result of his labours. The plumbing and heating arrangements have been carried out by Mr. Engledew for Mr. Davidson, who also provides the brass handrails, &c., used. The furnishings, which are on a luxurious scale, are by Messrs. Goodall, of Manchester. The electric lighting and engineering work is by the Northern Electric Co., of North Shields. The fireproof curtain is supplied by Messrs. J. Tweddle and Co., Ltd., of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The managing directors, Messrs. Ernest Stevens and R. C. Buchanan, for the proprietor, have appointed Mr. H. Carlo as their resident manager, and no doubt he will soon win the appreciation of his Wearside patrons by his urbanity of manner and unfailing courtesy.

The theatre will, as already stated, start upon its career on Monday, the 24th inst., under the most favourable of auspices, when the managing directors will submit for public approval the pantomime, Little Red Riding Hood, written and produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Stanley Rogers, whose experience in such productions augurs well for the initial success of the first annual extravaganza at this newest of houses. Mr. George Le Clerq has been secured for the part of the principal comedian, with Miss Lilian Lea as principal boy and Miss Decima Brooke to fill the title-rôle.

MR. LEWIS WALLER, in the course of a speech delivered some months ago, expressed himself strongly in favour of free trade in matters of amusement. He would place as few restrictions upon it as possible, he said. If the music halls liked to play five-act tragedies as well as one-act plays such a course would have his entire approval.

MR. CHARLES BROOKFIELD.

Mr. Charles H. E. Brookfield was born on May 19, 1857. He went to Westminster School and to Trinity College, Cambridge (where he divided the Winchester Reading Prize with Herbert Ryle, who is now Bishop of Winchester. He made his first appearance on the stage at the Alexandra Palace on Wednesday afternoon, July 9, 1879, as Gimlet, in Still Waters Run Deep, with Mr. Charles Kelly. He played in pantomime at the Crystal Palace, and did a good deal of touring. He was with the Bancrofts throughout their management of the Haymarket Theatre. Since then he has played with Mr. Hare and the Kendals at the St. James's Theatre, with Mr. Tree at the Comedy and Haymarket, with Mr. Hawtrey at the Comedy, at the Court with Mr. Chudleigh, at His Majesty's with Mr. Tree. Mr. Brookfield's last appearance was as Baron Grog in The Grand Duchess, at the Savoy, under the management of the late Mr. D'Oyly Carte. His health obliged him to give up acting in 1898. In 1882 he married Frances Mary, daughter of the late Mr. William Grogan, by whom he has issue living, Peter Archibald Kemble.

Mr. Brookfield has written a good deal for various papers and magazines. In his Cambridge days he wrote constantly for the old Examiner, when Prof. Minto was editor; and for the old Saturday Review, when it was under the editorship of Messrs. Walter Pollock and George Saintsbury. He has also written for the Pall Mall, St. James's, Globe, World, and Tatler. He wrote a book in 1888, called "The Twilight of Love," and in 1902 a volume of "Random Reminiscences" (Edward Arnold). Last year his wife and he published successfully a book called "Mrs. Brookfield and Her Circle" (Sir Isaac Pitman).

MR. CHARLES H. E. BROOKFIELD.

Mr. Brookfield has distinguished himself as a dramatic author, the following being a full list of plays written by himself, alone or in collaboration:—

Nearly Seven, monologue; Godpapa, three-act farce; The Burglar and the Judge, one act play; A Woman's Reason, three-act comedy, in collaboration with F. C. Philips; To-day, three-act adaptation from Divorçons; The Poet and the Puppets, one-act burlesque; Under the Clock, one-act burlesque, in collaboration with Seymour Hicks; The Dovecote, three-act adaptation from Jalouse; The Cuckoo, three-act adaptation from Décoré; The Grand Duchess, three-act adaptation; The Lucky Star, three-act adaptation; The Model Trilby, two-act burlesque, in collaboration with W. Grésac.

THE WEST LONDON.

On Monday, Dec. 17, the Drama, in Four Acts, by J. A. Campbell, entitled "THE LITTLE BREAD-WINNER,"

This drama of homely life is skilfully framed, and thoroughly deserves every success. Mr. Eugéne Santley is responsible for a powerful delineation of Lord William Dorrington, his representation of this kindly Quaker Peer being in excellent taste. The Joseph Prior of Mr. Alfred Maurice is a carefully thought-out performance, full of unctuous servility, skilfully presented; Mr. Matthew Boulton shapes well as Richard Lawrence; and Mr. Stanley Leedham is decidedly original and versatile as Charles Prior. Miss Mary Mallalieu makes a favourable impression as Margaret Daventry; Miss Jenny Bostock is a homely Bridget O'Flanaghan; Miss Nellie Thorne-Hallam plays with energy and determination as Kate Cherry; Miss Kitty Melville is well placed as Ruth Cherry; Miss Lissa Young displays much ability as Bobby Trott; whilst little Emmie Thomas in the title-rôle gives convincing proof of her histrionic talent, her performance being one of the highest merit, and not exaggerated in the least. The play is mounted and staged in irreproachable style, the scenery being specially noteworthy.

LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Dec. 17, the Drama, by Tom Taylor, entitled "THE TICKET-OF-LEAVE MAN."

Mr. H. H. Barrington and company are here this week with The Ticket-of-Leave Man, in which fine play he takes the difficult part of James Dalton, the Tiger, which he plays excellently. Robert Brierly is entrusted to Mr. W. Heilbronn, who makes an admirable hero, full of life and vigour. Miss May Hastings as May Edwards is a powerful heroine, being deeply pathetic and altogether charming. As the detective, Hawkshaw, Mr. R. Ferriss is exceptionally good, and receives loud applause. Miss Kate Froude, as Emily St. Evermonde, gives a capital character-sketch. Sam Willoughby is played with considerable abilty by Miss Irene Tracey; Mrs. Willoughby is excellently rendered by Miss Florence Lovell; as Green Jones Mr. John Leoni causes much merriment; and Mr. Thorpe Tracey as Melter Moss does good work. Mr. Ernest Carlton as Mr. Gibson deserves praise.

The Beadle of Towey ..... MR. W. LAMBTON

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Silver Stick is the heirloom of the ancient Cornish family of the Zennors, and hangs in the hall of their ancient manor house on the Cornish coast, now carried on as an inn under the sign of "The Silver Stick," by Joyce Zennor, who, with her brother Willie, are wards to a grasping, miserly lawyer, one Joel Polperro, Mayor of Towey. He it is who holds the deeds of their inheritance, which he has converted to his own use, hence the poverty of the Zennors. The play opens at "The Silver Stick" on the night of May 7 of the present year, where a merry group have assembled to prepare for the ancient festival of "The Furry," which is held to this day in the far west of Cornwall. After the opening chorus and dance Professor Isidore Percival, a music hall artist, known to his companions as Rip, arrives upon the scene with the intention of stopping at the inn for the night, having an engagement to appear at a booth which is one of the shows of to-morrow's fair. He is much interested in his surroundings, and is about to remove the Silver Stick from its resting place, when he is warned that dire results might ensue, and that the place is haunted. Aunt 'Liza Ann, the cook at "The Silver Stick," has the reputation of being a witch, and she acts up to that repute both in costume and in her melodramatic manner. She narrates the legend of the Silver Stick and the ghost that haunts the hall, this being the night of its annual visitation. Rip is amused with this, and claims 'Liza Ann as a "pro," which leads to an amusing duet between them, "I guess you are a bit of a fraud." The revellers proceed on their way, and Joyce Zennor, with thoughts of love, sings one of the gems of the piece, "Waves bear him gently along," and then we have a charming and sweetly pretty love duet, extremely well rendered, between Joyce and her sweetheart, Roy Tregenna, a Cornish gentleman and a naval officer, by his uniform. They are interrupted by the arrival of another spooning couple, Willie Zennor and Pollie Polperro, who are on an up-to-date runaway match on a motor-car. Scarcely have they explained the situation in song and dance, when they are interrupted by the arrival in fierce haste of Joel Polperro in search of the runaways. As his daughter will not return with him, he determines to stay at the inn for the night, sleeping on a chair in the haunted hall. The Professor, who is under obligations to Willie for past favours, determines to assist him and his sister if he can, so by the aid of his wardrobe he appears as the ghost at the hour of midnight, and secures the keys of the safe from the affrighted Polperro. This brings the first act to a close.

The second act opens outside the house of the Mayor at Towey. The rejoicings are in full swing. The Mayor is much disturbed at the loss of his keys, and issues a warrant for the apprehension of Willie Zennor for an assault on the previous night, but Willie dons the garb of Mephistopheles and evades arrest. The Mayor arrives in his robe of office to lead the Furry Dancers in their merry house-to-house visitation, but Willie, by reason of his title of the Prince of Darkness, claims the post of honour, thus obtaining the entrée to Polperro's house, where Rip, by the aid of the keys, ransacks the safe, and secures the deeds which restore to the Zennors their property and position in the county, and as the price perty and position in the county, and obtains in return the consent for the marriage of his daughter Pollie with the man of her choice. On this happy ending the curtain falls to a melodious chorus.

Well played, the merry piece achieved an instant and pronounced success, and has been drawing crowded houses every night. The principals all received special calls, and in response to the continued calls for the author, he appeared and thanked the audience for their kind approval and encouragement. Mr. Compton James, in the arduous part of Joel Polperro, acquitted himself well, giving a powerful delineation of the grasping lawyer. Miss Alice Chapman as Pollie was excellent in every way. Mr. Ernest Lorimer played Willie Zennor admirably, his experience standing him in good stead. Mrs. F. J. Crockett was an ideal Joyce, graceful, sweet, and winning in her artlessness. She was artistic in her singing of the pretty love duet, her treatment of the dainty little love passages being instinct with tenderness. The applause for this duet was equally gained and shared by Mr. Albert H. Derrick (who appeared by kind permission of Mr. R. Courtneidge) in the part of the Cornish gentleman, Roy Tregenna. His acting was good, and his singing of "Fair Maid of the West" was a distinct success. Professor Reginald Isidore Percival, commonly known as Rip, a music hall artist, is a part that seemed written for Mr. Harvey Reeves, and he scored a big success, his topical song, "It's so easy," gaining numerous encores. Mrs. Compton James was also well suited as Aunt 'Liza Ann, cook at "The Silver Stick," a part played with good dramatic force and intensity. Miss Gertie Smith as Betty Bobbin was a pert and pretty barmaid, acting with a charming gaiety and humour, which were ably seconded by Mr. A. H. Odhams, who as Amos Love, ostler at "The Silver Stick," was full of comic force and bubbling over with humour. Mr. Harold was the egotistical parish clerk, Peter Piggins, to the life. Mr. J. T. Benson was distinctly good as Uncle Poldice. Mr. Harry Holland scored a big success as Grandfather Bolitho, "the oldest inhabitant." Mr. W. H. Barber's Sergeant Trevannion of the police was also a good character sketch, and Mr. M. Lambton as the Beadle of Towey was excellent. Incidental to the Furry dance in the second act, a delightful solo was danced with great charm and effect by Miss Maud Wilkins. The stage manager, Mr. T. S. James, is to be congratulated on the completeness of the production. The orchestra was ably conducted. Mr. William Bree well and courteously carried out the duties of business management. The wigs and costumes were by B. J. Simmons, Covent Garden, London. The special back cloth for the second act was painted by Ernest Howard, Scenic Studio, Northampton. The dances were specially arranged by B. M. Crompton, of London. The entire production is under the direction of the author.

MR. TREE once [illegible] answer that after he played [illegible] in The Private Secretary he was [illegible] urged and [illegible] by pecuniary considerations to go away [illegible] playing the part. He refused to do this, as he did [illegible] to become a fly in [illegible]; and he would have played Macari in Called Back, Macari being the very antithesis to [illegible] Private Secretary.

PROVINCIAL PANTOMIMES.

"THE BABES IN THE WOOD" AT EDINBURGH.

Messrs. Howard and Wyndham have added another success to their long list of triumphs in the pantomime, The Babes in the Wood, produced at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, on the evening of the 13th inst. The book, by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, strikes an opening note of gaiety and brightness which never grows faint, and the pantomime goes with a laugh from beginning to end. The concluding scene, The Homage of the Nations to King Eric, introduces a procession of representatives of different countries. The groups are arranged with great care, and the whole effect of the tableaux is to convey an impression of brightness and beauty characteristic of the entire pantomime, one of the best of the kind within the memory of Edinburgh playgoers.

Mr. Mark Sheridan plays Baron de Boots with much racy originality and genial humour. He is wonderfully buoyant, fertile in business, and with a constant flow of sprightly witticisms, which never fails to delight the audience. He scored a great success with the song, "Hello, hello, hello! it's a different girl again," the refrain of which was soon taken up by the gallery, and vigorously repeated. The Brothers Egbert, as the villains, have parts in which they simply revel. Their acrobatic knockabout business is never overstrained, but is gone through with a neatness and ease which excite constant wonderment, and evoke hearty applause. The principal boy, Miss Gwladys Elvey, is an actress of prepossessing appearance, with a charming figure and face. Her performance of Robin Hood is a dashing one, and her singing is finished and expressive. Miss Daisy Dormer, the Maid Marion, has a dainty, attractive personalty. She dances with exquisite grace, and sings with delightful fervour and freshness. Her felicitous rendering of "I've built a bamboo bungalow for you" was encored again and again. Miss Gladys Cooper is a very beautiful fairy queen, and her voice is cultured. She sang with intense feeling the new song, "Snowflakes," and was warmly recalled. The babes are in the hands of two engaging children, Wee Wallace and Baby Betty Green. The boy is a manly little chap, who plays his part with great zest, and dances a big-boot dance with extreme vivacity and dexterity. The girl, a pretty child, sings very sweetly, dances gracefully, and plays her part in a style which gives much promise for her future success. Miss Mildred Claire as Allan-a-Dale, and Miss Edna Loftus as Molly, are a pair of captivating sweethearts; and Mr. Harry Conlin shows undoubted powers as a comedian by his performance of Charity. That admirable actor of animal nature, Mr. Harry Lupino, gives further proof of his ability by his clever acting; and Master Nipper Lupino Lane as Pickles is a smart page, and shows what an extremely proficient dancer he is. Mr. Tom Walker's sonorous voice is of service in the choral work as King Eric; and pleasant performances of two fairy attendants are given by Miss Doris Cooper and Miss Vera Elvey. Miss Lottie Stone's troupe of dancers imparted additional liveliness to the scenes in which they appeared; and the auxiliaries all did their work well. The scenery, by Mr. T. Holmes, Mr. Stanley Schuter, and Mr. E. H. Ryan, are excellent illustrations of the scene-painter's art. Mr. Holmes's canvases are clever studies, and there are force and humour in the work of Mr. Schuter. Mr. Ryan's examples are, as already stated, admirable in light, shade, and colour. The music in Scene 7, The Fairy Orchard, is charmingly composed by Mr. Geo. Burnley, the efficient musical conductor. The properties again reveal the facile hand of Mr. Geo. Sutherland; and Mr. Macalpine deserves praise for the mechanical effects. The fall of the curtain was the signal for prolonged applause, and calls for Mr. F. W. Wyndham, who appeared and bowed his acknowledgments, and then led on Mr. John J. Lloyd, who is largely responsible for the production. The audience renewed their applause, and were not satisfied until Mr. Mark Sheridan and the Brothers Egbert spoke a few words of thanks for the reception of the panto mime.

"MOTHER GOOSE" at GLASGOW.

Mr. Rich. Waldon produced the twenty-seventh annual pantomime at the Royal Princess's on Thursday, the 13th inst., and had the pleasure, very early in the evening, of realising that he had again "struck ile." A pathetic interest attaches to the fact that, for the first time in twenty-seven years, a different name is seen as librettist. Mr. Fred Locke, author of all the previous pantomimes at the Princess's, has been lying seriously ill since last January, and, in consequence of this, Mr. Waldon was reluctantly compelled to look elsewhere for a librettist. In the circumstances, no better choice could have been made than that of Mr. J. James Hewson, and he has written a book that is full of good things, and provides all the principals with numerous opportunities for showing their ability at its best. The ten scenes into which the pantomime is divided are all by the resident artist at this theatre, Mr. J. C. Bontor, and right well has he carried out this portion of the work. The opening scene, The Village of Meadowsweet, is a pretty set and Foxglove Glade, the concluding scene of Part I., is another charming picture, in which extensive use is made of electrical effects with happy results, this part of the business being again to the credit of Mr. D. Barbour, electrician at the Princess's. Part II. opens with a clever scene, representing the interior of Mother Goose's Poultry Shop, which affords lots of opportunity for funny trick effects. Scene VIII., On Board the Pirate Ship, is another clever bit of stage setting, and in this is given some very clever sailor dances by Dollie Bell's English Violets. In this scene is also introduced a smart burlesque of circus and variety business by Miss Ella Retford and Messrs. Foreman and Fannan. The concluding scene, The Court of Cupid, introduces some wonderful electrical devices, designed by Mr. Bontor, and carried out by Mr. Barbour. In addition, Mr. Bontor contributes some front cloths of much merit, including The Picture Gallery at Bombasto Castle, Lover's Lane, The Baron's Brown Study, and The Tail of the Bank. One scene is entitled Menzies' 'Bus and Panorama, and in this some excellent fooling is introduced by Foreman and Fannan and others. The 'bus is fixed, but the wheels revolve, the panorama goes flying past, and there is a moving track beside the 'bus, which tries the stability of the various characters, and the laughter was loud and long all through this scene.

For the hero of Mother Goose, Robin, a charming principal boy has been engaged in the person of Miss Ethel Campbell, who caught the fancy of the audience from the start. She has an attractive manner, sings well, and dances neatly, and has the gift of delivering her lines with point and precision, bringing out the humour of the author with neat emphasis, and making the hits—local, political, or otherwise—tell at once. Her various songs were received with enthusiasm, and hearty encores were insisted on for "When there isn't a girl about," "My sugar plum," "Stowaway," "Sailing in my balloon," and "Cupid," all of which are likely to be popular items during the run. As principal boy, Miss Ella Retford is just the ideal of Princess's audiences, being a dancer of special merit, and able to sing a coon song with an archness and vivacity that is irresistible. She acts brightly as the heroine, Marguerite, and made a huge success in every one of her songs. These included the tuneful "Zuyder Zee," with its sabot dance, which was encored several times; "Goodnight, Mr. Brown, I'm out," a special favourite; and the attractively-dressed item, "My little Eskimo," in which she had the aid of a chorus. In comedians Mr. Waldon has again made an excellent selection, and Messrs. Foreman and Fannan, as an Inspector and a Policeman, were responsible for some of the heartiest laughs the audience enjoyed. Their own special patter and business is fresh and original, and in the way of combining with the other comedians in funny business they were simply invaluable. Mr. Austin Lenton, who plays Mother Goose, is another clever artist, and ably contributed his quota to the fun. He is well made-up, and dresses humorously, without overdoing the exaggeration associated with pantomime dames. His songs included Rachel Lowe's "All go to church on Sunday," and with Mr. James Foreman he sang a clever duet, "Two little maids." Mr. Wal Croft, from his long association with The Trip to the Highlands company, is particularly well-known here as a Scotch comedian, and as MacGander, the goose merchant, he is provided with a part that affords him unlimited opportunity for the display of his quaint methods and mannerisms. He gives with much humour a lively ditty, entitled "If it hadna been a Sunday nicht," and a burlesque version of "Annie Laurie." Mr. Harry McClelland, the Baron Bombasto of the cast, has been seen before in Princess's pantomime, and gives a very good performance. Most of his speeches are interspersed with lengthy quotations from Shakespeare, and these he gives with due bombastic effect. He acts well with the others in the funny interludes. Messrs. James Ross and Harry Taylor as the Baron's retainers, so blithe and gay, are a smart couple of knockabouts, and assist well in all the lively business of the evening. The Sisters Hall (Ethel and Lily), as Strephon and Dorothy, are an attractive couple, and were accorded an enthusiastic reception. In the pretty song, "Moon, dear," they were specially successful, and their "Boy Blue" was another enjoyable item. The opposing forces of good and evil are represented by Miss Sadie Wade as Fairy Greatheart, in which part she speaks her lines with excellent effect, and by Miss Grace Elvio as the Stately Spirit of Discord.

The dressing and staging of the present pantomime mark a distinct advance even on last year's production, and much credit is due to Miss Binnie for the handsome dresses designed and made under her care. The entire production was superintended by Mr. Rich. Waldon, who said he had practically lived in the theatre for a week previously, and in the duties of stage-manager he has an able assistant in Mr. S. K. Alexander. The mechanical changes and running track are by Mr. John Higson; the trick properties by Mr. L. Glennie; Mr. David Barbour has eclipsed his former efforts in the elaborate electrical devices; while the scenery is all from the brush of Mr. J. C. Bontor, who had the honour of several calls on the opening night, and shared with Mr. Waldon in the enthusiastic recall at the conclusion. In response to loud demands, Mr. Waldon thanked the audience for their hearty reception of his latest effort, and hoped for their patronage for many weeks to come. Mr. Hugh Murdoch ably carried out his arduous duties as acting-manager, and had the invaluable assistance of Mr. Harry McKelvie, manager of the Palace.

"THE BABES" AT LIVERPOOL.

The management of the popular Star Theatre has the honour this year of being the first in the local field with pantomime. On Monday evening a large audience expressed their cordial appreciation of The Babes in the Wood, an entirely new production emanating from the pen of Mr. Joseph L. Barry. There is every promise that the work will prove a big success on tour, for Mr. Fred Granville, the producer, has spared neither expense nor trouble in creating a most acceptable show. Dresses and scenery are entirely new, and extremely pretty, the artists (about fifty in number) capable and full of that energy necessary to keep things in swing, while the dialogue has a flavour of originality that is pleasing to the ear and the latest songs are introduced. Praise is also due to Mr. Arthur W. Parry for his catchy music

Miss Bertha Cousins, who was the principal boy Robin Hood, sang with taste, and was particularly good as a dancer, for which she earned rounds of applause; a dainty Maid Marian was submitted by Miss Hettie Lind, her rendering of "The Zuyder Zee" meeting with acceptance; Miss Cissie Bodina looked like a fairy queen, and, possessed of a charming voice, sang with touching effect "Sweet dreams of my homeland"; credit is deserved by Miss Queenie West for her Merry Mavis; and Miss May Cornish did the utmost with Little John. A deal of valuable support came from the gentlemen of the company. As the schemer Aconita Mr. H. Val Morgan afforded an excellent picture of one whose deeds are evil; Mr. Norman Hall, inclined in a similar direction, was well to the fore in the character of the wicked uncle; the two villains, engaged to put away the babes, could scarcely have had abler and funnier exponents than the Kimberley Boys, who were the mainstay of the pantomime; Mr. Joe English helped with the laughter as the eccentric schoolmistress; Master Harry Boden and Miss Edie Bell were the Babes, and brought down the house with their remarkable dancing, having to respond to several encores; and Mr. Dan Mining made his Friar Tuck particularly humorous. In the last scene several specialities were introduced, the big feature being classical tableaux by the Three Graces; the Clancy Girls, four in number, gave a pleasing and clever turn as acrobats and dancers; and the Three Bodinas made a hit with their musical mélange. Mr. Harris Fineberg, the proprietor of the theatre, who evinced deep interest in the new production, is to be congratulated upon this year's show.

"GOODY TWO-SHOES" AT PAISLEY.

Mr. J. H. Savile presented his tenth annual pantomime to a crowded house at his Paisley Theatre on Saturday evening. The story chosen for illustration is Goody Two-Shoes, invented and written by Mr. Fred Locke, a sad feature being the fact that it was the last work of this well-known pantomime writer before his illness took such a serious turn. The mounting has received lavish treatment, and in point of splendour and beauty this year's production will long be remembered. The production has been divided into two parts, five scenes being allotted to each. The first scene discloses The Village, a beautiful piece of work by Mr. J. M. O'Farrell, the resident scenic artist. The second scene, Interior of Dame's Cot, also by Mr. O'Farrell, is a very pretty set. Here Roland (Miss Marie Adair) gives an exquisite rendering of "By the side of the Zuyder Zee," and an opportunity occurs to Phil and Tom (the Passmore Brothers) for some clever knockabout business. In a wonderfully realistic local scene, The Linn, Braes o' Gleniffer, by Mr. O'Farrell, Dame Freckles (Mr. Jack Foley) scores with a parody of his own on "In the shade of the old apple tree" and Mephisto sings "Will o' the Wisp" in dramatic style. In the Baron's Library the Baron (Mr. H. A. Gribben) contributes a capital song with whistling chorus; a clever sketch is submitted by Goody and Simon, which was remarkably well performed and warmly appreciated. In the next scene, The Gardens en Fête, a setting that shows some lovely floral effects from the brush of Mr. Wm. McCulloch, a pretty ballet takes place. The opening scene of the second part, All the Fun of the Fair, by Mr. O'Farrell, gives opportunity for many specialities, chief being the graceful dancing of the Tricky Trio, the acrobatic and hand-balancing performance of Smirk and Smile (Messrs. Claremont and Victor), and an amusing show, with grotesque and original make-up, by the Brothers Passmore. The eighth scene, My Father's Brother's Shop (Mr. O'Farrell) is a truly lively one, and contains some capital fooling. No more dashing pantomime boy than Miss Marie Adair could have been selected for the part of Roland. Good-looking, beautifully dressed, a capital actress, singing with plenty of verve, at once sympathetic and vivacious, this young lady was a tower of strength, if she may be described as anything so stern and unmoving. With her is Miss Maggie Bowman, who fills the rôle of Goody Two-Shoes. Hers was in every way a fascinating and romantic embodiment. As a vocalist, too, Miss Bowman easily gained a place in the esteem of the audience, who rewarded this dainty and clever lady with frequent applause. Miss Carrie Foy, the Peter Piper, fills the rôle with admirable ability. A handsome presence, good singing, and rare vivacity are all brought to her aid. Associated with her is Miss Adela Crispin, whose Dolly Dimple was winsome and acceptable. Smart and attractive, and with many dainty ways, she at once sets the stamp of success upon her performance, her singing of "The Man in Manitoba" making a decided hit. Mr. Peter Bermingham is responsible for a vast amount of laughter, caused by his whimsical sayings and doings in the rôle of Sandy Sapps. Varied are the different characters assumed by this resourceful comedian, contriving in each instance to be genuinely humorous and diverting. At his side constantly is Mr. Jack Foley, who as Dame Freckles re-established himself, after a few years' absence, firmly in the good graces of the audience. His Dame bubbles over with high spirits and quaint remarks. As Baron Grabb Mr. Harry A. Gribben worked with unflagging energy and asserted himself throughout with pronounced success. Mr. Tom J. Morton scored in his assumption of Simple Simon, and some of the business introduced by this amusing and experienced artist is excellent of its kind. The Passmore Brothers as Phil and Tom are a pair who would be a credit to any pantomime, and on this occasion they achieved decided distinction. Messrs. Claremont and Victor as Smirk and Smile have little to do, but their acrobatic and hand-balancing performances were applauded. Miss Florence Lister as Mephisto employs a good contralto voice effectively in her songs, and likewise acts well. As Fairy Goodheart Miss Lena Wylie is charming, her finished and artistic singing being vociferously applauded. The Tricky Trio of speciality dancers (Dollie Lancaster, Queenie Hollingsworth, and Maisie Rawlins) performed splendidly.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

On Friday evening, Dec. 14, the pupils of Mr. L. F. Chapuy gave a dramatic performance in the theatre of the School. The programme commenced with a scene from Sheridan Knowles's Hunchback, the characters of Julia and Helen being brightly enacted by Miss Gertrude A. Shill and Miss Winifred Doré Johnson. In the abridged version of The Little Treasure, by Augustus Harris, Miss Gertrude A. Shill displayed no little talent for comedy in the part of Gertrude; while Miss Julie C. Huntsman appeared to great advantage as the stern mother-in-law, Mrs. Meddleton. Miss Eunice Moore made a sympathetic Lady Florence Howard; and Mr. J. A. Ellerton an effective Sir Charles Howard. The humorous part of Captain Walter Maydenblush was cleverly played by Mr. James L. Dale; and the small part of the servant, Jane, by Miss Pleasant Hurst. The performance concluded with John Daly's original comic drama, Mother Carey's Chickens and Young Husbands, in which the character of the match-making mother, Mrs. Carey, was skilfully undertaken by Miss Julie C. Huntsman, Miss Emily M. Surridge being equally successful as Anna Carey, the bride. The other daughters of Mrs. Carey, Mrs. Fagg, and Mrs. Digby Spooner, were cleverly played by Miss Eunice Moore and Miss Gertrude A. Shill; while the two single daughters, Miss Sophia and Miss Jane, were performed in a lively manner by Miss Badcock and Miss Huntly. Mr. Jackson played Digby Spooner, the young husband with betting proclivities, with ability; and Mr. J. A. Ellerton caused much merriment by his quaint acting in the character of Uncle Gadbury. Mr. Maurice A. Rossiter gave a capital study of the rather caddish shop-keeping husband, Matthew Fagg; and Mr. Earle Gabriel was effective as Alfred Vacil, the bridegroom. The comic element was supplied by Mr. Andrew Pace in the part of Wee, otherwise Montgomery, the hired waiter; and Miss G. Amy Sylvert as Mrs. Dunder a most realistic charwoman, Miss Winifred Doré Johnson appearing as Mary, the housemaid. The dramatic pupils did their able professor, Mr. L. F. Chapuy, great credit. Between the acts Miss Jessie Willis gave selections on the piano.

A dramatic performance of W. S. Gilbert's Pygmalion and Galatea was given in the theatre of the school by the pupils of Miss Kate Rorke on Thursday evening, Dec. 20, and Miss Rorke had every reason to be gratified by the successful result. Gilbert's mythological comedy is no easy task for students, and therefore the correct delivery of the somewhat long speeches and the intelligent dramatic action with which they were accompanied merit great praise. Mr. George Cooke made a manly Pygmalion, delivering his lines with admirably clear enunciation. The young actor might, however, have shown a little more surprise and awe in the scene where Galatea first shows signs of life. It must have been no easy task to secure a young lady who could look as well as act the part of Galatea, but in Miss Ethel McDowal quite a clever and statuesque exponent of the character was found. Miss McDowal showed no little talent as an actress, and evidently appreciated the quiet satire underlying Gilbert's clever dialogue. The young lady had quite a hearty round of applause after her chief speech. Miss Annie Walden proved an excellent Cynisca, with great aptitude for the dramatic features of her part; and Miss Olga Kent made a charming Myrmi; while Mr. Ben Soulten, jun., showed ability as a comedian, although at first disposed slightly to exaggerate the art patron Chrysos. As Daphne, Miss A. Castiglione was effective; and Mr. J. M. Napper as the young soldier Leucippus deserved praise. The smaller parts of the two slaves, Mimos and Agesimos, were efficiently undertaken by Miss Irene Grahame and Miss Madge Thorne. The dresses were characteristic and effective, and the scene of the studio capitally managed, though we must take exception to the large goose painted on the centre wall, which, however appropriate at this present season, was not very Grecian. The second piece performed was Alfred C. Calmour's poetical play Cupid's Messenger, in which Mr. S. Marryat Hughes appeared as Sir Phillip Sydney, Miss Winifred Barnett as Mary Herbert, and Miss Kathleen Ewen as Fanny Walsingham. A small orchestra under the direction of Mr. H. Philipe Thomas gave short selections during the evening.

A new hall is in course of erection at Abertillery. It is to have a holding capacity of over 2,000. It is not yet decided whether it will be a public hall or a music hall, but, without doubt, it will be licensed for entertainments.

NEW ENGLISH AND FOREIGN PLAYS.

In order to assist managers and others in the selection of pieces for production and adaptation, we are publishing from time to time synopses of likely English and Continental plays, so that dramatic speculators may judge for themselves of the suitability of the plots for their purpose. Authors wishing for this publicity should forward synopses to "Playwrights," care of The Era, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

THE STREET SINGER.

A Musical Drama, in Four Acts, by Hal Reid.
(All rights reserved).

Morgan van Voort is an octogenarian, multimillionaire, and a despicable old roué. He has an illegitimate son, Lawrence Winfield, whom he has made his business-manager, and a younger legitimate son and heir, Billy, who is engaged, secretly, to "La belle Violetta," otherwise Violet Vodray, a famous singer, daughter of old John Vodray, Morgan's honest confidential bookkeeper. Madge Westervelt is an unprincipled adventuress, in league with Lawrence Winfield to swindle Billy out of his inheritance. This precious couple have obtained large sums by means of forged cheques and the like, and have succeeded in casting grave suspicion upon John Vodray. Morgan wishes to marry Violet; but Mona Mayne, one of Morgan's many victims, has warned Violet of the fate in store for her; so she refuses Morgan's advances, and announces her engagement to Billy. Enraged at her refusal, Morgan threatens to prosecute John Vodray, unless Violet consents to marry him. To save her father, Violet marries Morgan, but leaves him at the altar. Returned to her apartments, Violet makes no secret of her love for her former fiancé, Billy, now her step-son. Disowned by his father, Billy lives with Violet and her father, in constant dread of old Morgan's revenge. Violet desires to divorce Morgan and marry Billy. Their hiding-place is soon discovered by Madge and Lawrence, who plot to get rid of Billy, by fair means or foul, and effect Lawrence's recognition by Morgan as his son and heir. Billy is to quarrel with Lawrence, who is to kill him in a duel. Morgan finds Billy talking to his stepmother; he makes the most of this discovery; reminds Violet that his promise to refrain from prosecuting her father was only a verbal one; threatens immediate proceedings unless Violet returns to conjugal life with him, and urges Lawrence to assault Billy. Blows are exchanged, and a duel arranged, and steps are taken for the immediate arrest of John Vodray. He, however, contrives to escape with Violet and Billy. Morgan urges Lawrence to kill Billy in the duel, promising him public acknowledgment as his son and large sums of money, but Billy injures his hand and is unable to fight. By arrangement with the seconds, a substitute is permitted; and Violet, in mask and male attire, unknown to Billy, however, fights with Lawrence, wounding and disarming him. Old Morgan's vast wealth enables him to reduce John Vodray, Violet and Billy to the depths of poverty; and still flying from his persecution, they are obliged to sing in the streets, with a barrel-organ, disguised as Mexicans. Morgan succeeds in tracing them to their poor lodgings in a miserable part of New York City. Lawrence has captured Billy's place in Morgan's will, as sole heir, and holds a document stating his parentage. Their hiding-place being discovered, there is a very sensational escape by the fire-ladders outside the block of buildings. Morgan is furious with the failure to capture them, and has a violent quarrel with Lawrence, threatening him with disinheritance. Billy arrives on the scene of the quarrel, and is taunted by Morgan about his love for his stepmother. Lawrence, who was about to stab Morgan, steals behind Billy, whose hand is raised over Morgan threateningly, stabs Morgan, and, dropping his knife at Billy's feet, accuses him of murdering his father. The police arrive, and Morgan expires, after telling Lawrence that, after all, he has not had time to alter his will in his favour, and accusing Billy of murdering him. Violet, now a very rich widow, uses her wealth to obtain the acquittal of Billy, who is in prison awaiting trial as his father's murderer. Installed in Morgan's Fifth-avenue mansion, she contrives a trap for Madge and Lawrence to confess their various misdeeds, Billy and the necessary witnesses being concealed within earshot. The trick succeeds. Lawrence and Madge, the latter half-intoxicated, quarrel, and their mutual abuse and incrimination establish, beyond all doubt, Billy's complete innocence. Lawrence is arrested on the charge of having murdered old Morgan, and Violet and Billy are left free to discuss their future relationship to each other. There is abundant Irish and other comic relief. Musical numbers and specialities can be arranged for Violet and a troupe of girl-singers who appear in connection with the plot.

The appendices will comprise a synopsis of London playbills of the year, new productions in New York, Paris, and Berlin, a record of theatrical events of the year, law cases of special importance to the profession, articles on dramatic critics and criticisms by Mr. J. T. Grein and the editor, obituary for 1906, a list of theatrical clubs, charities, and kindred institutions; a list of all the theatres, music-halls, concert-rooms, and "fit-up" halls in the United Kingdom and Ireland, with populations of the towns; a special article on theatrical finance, with tables showing market movements in theatre and music-hall shares, and box plans of all the leading theatres. The book, which will be illustrated by full-page portraits of well-known personages, will be issued at 5s. net, by T. Sealey Clark, 1, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Miss B. Wynne Matthison comes of histrionic stock. Her mother, under the name of Miss Kate Wynne, was known as a talented Welsh singer, and her father's brother, Arthur Matthison, dramatist and actor, played with Sir Henry Irving and with Booth. Miss Matthison, who, by the way, is a native of Shakespeare's county, having been born in Birmingham, has studied the works of the master dramatist since she was a child. In one year alone she gave 326 performances of parts from Shakespeare and Everyman. Miss Matthison, it will be remembered, played Portia with the late Sir Henry Irving on tour, as well as other leading parts.

MR. TREE AT NEW CROSS.

An immediate call upon Mr. Beerbohm Tree's sympathy since his return from his triumphal visit to Cardiff was made at the Broadway Theatre, New Cross, on Monday last, when the Dickens Fellowship Dramatic Society, of which Mr. Tree is president, gave a performance of Dombey and Son in aid of the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Hamper Fund. The house was crowded by an enthusiastic audience, Mrs. Dickens and daughters occupying a private box, and when, after the third act, the curtain rose and revealed Mr. Tree, the Lord Mayor (Sir William Treloar), the Mayor of Deptford, and Mr. C. W. Bowerman, the local M.P., standing on the stage, the cheering lasted for quite a minute.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, began Mr. Tree, beaming on the house, "I imagine that you thought this was another act of the play, but it is not. I desire to introduce to you the Lord Mayor of London. He is held in high respect throughout London, and that respect on my part is attended with affection. I have known the Lord Mayor for a very long period, and many years ago we fought side by side in the cause of the Sunday League. The Lord Mayor is in a sense the father of the citizens of London, and among his many children none are more dear to him than his cripple children, in whom he has for many years taken a warm interest. Last yea- something like 7,000 hampers were sent to these poor little children, and thus made their Christmas happy. After all, what is the great misery—I may say, the great tragedy—of life? Why, too little to eat. And what is the great joy—I may say, the comedy—of life? Why, to eat too much, at all events, for children—and many of us remain children all the time. It has been a great pleasure to us to witness the performance and see the really delightful representation of the play by the members of the Dickens Fellowship, with which I feel it an honour to be connected. I do not profess to be a great Dickens critic, but I love Dickens very much, and I believe that dear man Mr. J. L. Toole must have had something of Dickens's honest, sweet, warm nature. I think the honour was conferred on me in consequence of my having produced a Dickens play. You know what we produced"—Mr. Tree paused, evidently forgetting the name of the adaptation, until, prompted by the audience, he added, "Oliver Twist. We are," he continued, "shortly to see another Dickens play by Mr. Comyns Carr—Edwin Drood. I will not detain the Lord Mayor further, but hand him a cheque on behalf of the Dickens Fellowship. The cheque amounts to £50, thanks to your presence here to-day. Then there is a cheque from Mr. Louis Calvert for the sum of £10. Mr. Calvert and I have long been brother actors. I never allowed him to get the better of me, so I insist on adding my own cheque for £10 as a birthday gift. This happens to be my birthday, and the better the deed the better the day. The Mayor of Deptford will give another five guineas." Mr. Tree's speech was constantly interrupted by loud applause, which was heartily renewed at the close.

The Lord Mayor then stepped forward and said he had been very much interested in the play, but was still more interested to receive the cheques. Mr. Tree had told them that for many years he had sent out hampers to crippled children of the metropolis, and this year he thought he would send out more than 7,000. The fund arose in this way. Some thirteen years ago he had the idea of entertaining at the Guildhall some poor children, and he induced the Corporation to let him have the hall for the purpose. A few friends subscribed money to give the children a dinner, and 200 were provided with a meal. After paying expenses there was a little money over, and he asked the secretary of the Ragged School Union to let him have the names and addresses of crippled children for Christmas, and from that beginning had arisen the sending of hampers every year. They began with 200, and last year the number amounted to 2,500. To the certain knowledge of Lady Treloar and himself there were more than 7,000 poor crippled children in the metropolis of London other than those in institutions. He wanted to interest every Londoner in the success of the scheme which he had started, and he wanted those happy children who had nothing the matter with them and lived in nice homes to endeavour to collect a few shillings to help their less fortunate brothers and sisters. He was very pleased to be present and listen to the applause showered upon Mr. Tree as soon as he came on to the stage. Mr. Tree was a very old friend of his, and they had fought shoulder to shoulder in the cause of the National Sunday League. He was very much obliged to the ladies and gentlemen who performed in the play and much obliged also to the Dickens Fellowship, and he thanked the audience very heartily for their kind response to the appeal. His lordship concluded by calling for three cheers for Mr. Tree, which were enthusiastically given.

Mr. Calvert, the lessee of the theatre, briefly proposed a vote of thanks on behalf of Deptford, the Dickens Fellowship, and himself to the Lord Mayor and Mr. Tree, which was carried by acclamation, the curtain having again and again to be raised in acknowledgment of the applause.

The House of Dombey, which was recently produced at the Cripplegate Institute, is an effective adaptation in five acts of Dickens's novel by Florence Teignmouth Shore and Walter Dexter. It was ably represented, Mr. John M. Cohen as the adamant Mr. Dombey, Mrs. J. T. Grein as the young wife, and Mr. Frank Staff as the mincing Mr. Toots particularly distinguishing themselves.

THE PAVILION.

On Monday, Dec. 17,
the Historical Operetta, in Five Acts, entitled
"JUDAS MACCABÆUS."

The historical opcretta Judas Maccabæus, as performed by the Jewish Operatic and Dramatic Company on Monday evening at the Pavilion, is somewhat of a sombre nature for this season of the year, while it does not deal very largely with the warlike attacks that Maccabæus made upon Antiochus Epiphanes, but has evidently been written round the trials and persecutions the Jews endured during this ruler's reign. The story as presented was on the whole well acted and vividly picturesque, and secured a favourable reception from a good audience, although the torture scene was singularly lacking in stage-management. Mme. J. Kayzer as Medea was watched with close attention, while the intensity of her performance in the second act was marked by artistic ability of an unusual degree, which created a profound impression. As the deliverer of the Jews, Judas Maccabæus, Mr. M. Gusofsky was manly and vigorous, using his magnificent voice to great advantage, while Mr. J. Fineberg gave a finished study and was efficient as the scheming Antiochus Epiphanes. The impersonation of Chane by Mme. Berman was endowed with pathos and power; and Mr. Goldsmith as the Great Priest delivered his lines with intelligence and discretion. An acceptable representative of Nicanor was found in Mr. N. Isaacowitch; and Abinoel received careful treatment from Mr. Berman; while Miss Lubritzky enacted Aliezer with distinction. Mr. N. Hamburger was successful as Josohn; and Messrs. Markowitz, Seroki, Greenman, and Katchmeroff were competent in minor parts. During the week Deborah, King Herodes, The Musician, and The Two Cripples have been played.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

Presented by the dramatic society known as the Pioneers, On the Side of the Angels attracted a large and distinguished audience to the Royalty Theatre on Sunday night, amongst those present being Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr. George Alexander, and Mr. Arthur Bourchier. It is a rather singular coincidence that, just at the time when one of the medical journals contains an article asserting that the use of cocaine seems to be growing, and that it directly stimulates to evil passions and evil deeds, a play which enforces the warning as to the effects of the habitual use of the drug should be produced at a London theatre. The first scene represents the interior of a country cottage in a Yorkshire village, to which Major Ralph Hawstorne has come, with the object of recovering his shattered health. He is under the care of his old nurse, Mrs. Mayhew, and her daughter, Grace. The relations existing between the man and the girl are made clear when they are left alone. It is also then that we first hear of a ring which Hawstorne has temporarily lost. While serving as a young soldier in India he was given by a native priest a ring containing three stones, and bearing the inscription, "What will be, must be. To desire, to possess, to know—this is the sum of human wisdom and of human folly." One of the stones has disappeared, and, as the play proceeds, the others are lost, a vein of superstition thus running through the whole story. Grace is perfectly happy with the man who has won her heart, though she is somewhat alarmed by the tale of the ring. But her peace of mind receives a much greater shock when a certain Lady Rolleston appears on the scene, and claims acquaintance with the Major. They have been close friends in India, and now she is staying with her brother at his shooting-box only a few miles away. She invites Hawstorne to spend a few days with them; he consents, and poor Grace, recognising a formidable rival in her ladyship, buries her face in her hands and cries bitterly as the curtain descends on the first act.

In the second act, the scene of which is at Mr. Guy Daneborough's shooting-box, we find Hawstorne in a moody, fretful temper. Everything looks its blackest, and it is at this moment he learns that his bankers have suspended payment, and he is a ruined man. Lady Rolleston has never disguised the fact that she still loves him, and she offers to marry him and come to his assistance financially. Notwithstanding the fact that he is morally bound to marry Grace, he accepts her ladyship's offer. Then, to quiet his unsteady nerves, he injects into his arm a dose of cocaine. As he is also drinking heavily, the result is that Hawstorne's brain is seriously affected, and he behaves like a maniac, to the consternation of Mr. Guy Daneborough and his guests. His medical attendant is sent for, and arrives only just in time, for the unhappy man falls to the ground in a fit. In the last act Hawstorne is again at the cottage, slowly recovering from his attack. He receives a visit from Lady Rolleston, who is about to restore to him the cigarette-case containing the deadly cocaine, which has been forbidden by the doctor, when Grace intervenes, and points out in forcible language the real nature of her ladyship's so-called love. Thus the woman who is "on the side of the angels" finally conquers.

The character of Major Ralph Hawstorne presented many difficulties. Mr. Norman McKinnel deserves every credit for the degree of success he achieved. A hard-drinking grandfather and a dissolute father have transmitted an hereditary tendency to evil habits, and Hawstorne's willpower is eventually destroyed by cocaine. Mr. McKinnel depicted this complex character with remarkable ability and power, graphically realising the horrible effects of the drug habit, the man's terrible outbreak at Lady Rolleston's house, as the combined result of the deadly drug and over-indulgence in drink, being extremely well done. Mr. Matheson Lang was excellent as Dr. Tom Raleigh, a young medico of the modern school, who explains in a concise, professional style the shocking fate of the man or woman who becomes a slave to cocaine. Mr. Arthur Playfair successfully embodied the part of the Hon. Guy Daneborough, a rough sporting character, who appears to have learnt his manners from the stable. Mr. A. Vane Tempest was well placed as Mr. Ray Luneville, an unknown poet, who poses as a brilliant conversationalist, but is regarded as a harmless lunatic by Lady Rolleston's extremely matter-of-fact mother. Miss Lilian Braithwaite played the part of Grace Mayhew with her usual charm of manner, and the loyal girl's devotion to the man who has won her heart was prettily expressed. Lady Rolleston is not a good woman; even her love for Ralph Hawstorne is wholly sensual and selfish, but Miss Granville, by her treatment of the character, contrived to win a certain amount of sympathy for the woman. Her acting in the strong scene with Hawstorne in the second act was specially deserving of recognition. Miss Agnes Thomas was very natural as Mrs. Mayhew, Hawstorne's old nurse, whose pet remedy is a piece of flannel placed over the heart. Miss Florence Haydon gave a delightful sketch of the Baroness Daneborough, a deaf but shrewd old lady. Mr. Daniel McCarthy was good as Lord Vivian Rodney, and Mr. Frank Cochrane lent useful assistance as Mr. Robert Tidman. Commendable work was also done by Miss Eily Malyon as Mrs. Hargreaves and Miss Mabel Beardsley as Miss Angela Crompton. Mr. George Bealby can be commended for his neat sketch of the Rev. Charles Hargreaves, little Miss Dorothy Schofield scored as Tommy, a crippled boy whom Hawstorne befriends, and Mr. Patrick Digan as the servant, Jarvis, adequately completed the cast.

The new play, which was produced under the direction of Mr. A. E. George, met with a favourable reception, and after the final fall of the curtain the author responded to a call.

MR. H. SHERRIFF HOWARD, general manager of the Queen's Theatre, Longton, took his tenth annual benefit on Monday, and was well supported both before and behind the footlights. Towards the close of the entertainment, Mr. Howard expressed his thanks, and said he would forward a cheque for £10 to the Cottage Hospital from the proceeds of his benefit. At the same time, Mr. Harry Fischer, of the Cinderella pantomime company, handed to Mr. Howard a handsome diamond pin which he said was a present from the directors to the general manager in recognition of the way in which he had conducted the theatre.

THE management of the Theatre Royal, Halifax, have entrusted their Christmas pantomime to Messrs. Partridge and Longden, who are to stage Aladdin, opening to-night (Saturday).

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, CARLISLE.

There is something appropriate in the fact that Mr. Thos. Courtice, who in 1900-1-2 was resident-manager for Mr. Milton Bode and the late Mr. R. Stewart McKim at this theatre, should again find himself controlling its fortunes. On this occasion, however, he holds the reins of management largely on his own account, having acquired from the trustees of the late Mr. McKim a half interest in the lease with Mrs. McKim, in whose intereste and his own he now takes up the sole responsibility of management.

The present theatre, which occupies the same site as the building presided over by Mr. Courtice in the past, was erected in consequence of its predecessor having been destroyed by fire, and is in every respect a vastly superior building, not only holding a great deal more money, but being so appointed as to afford players and public alike the utmost comfort. The dressing-room arrangements are perhaps the most perfect in England. The stage itself is capable of any production, and is excellently lit with the latest electric appliances.

With these advantages, coupled with the fact that Carlisle is so conveniently placed for companies working their way to and from Scotland, Mr. Courtice has surely some reason for his confidence in the future of Her Majesty's Theatre, a feeling which is strengthened by the fact of his renewing the acquaintance of the numberless friends he made during his previous three seasons at Carlisle.

This actual experience of his own particular public cannot fail to be of advantage to him, though, on the other hand, he feels that the four years that have intervened will enable him to take up his old position with larger and newer ideas, he having, as business manager for Mr. Charles Frohman and Mr. Robert Courtneidge, gained a wide experience of the workings of the largest theatres in the kingdom, as well as handling some of the greatest attractions of recent years. The fact of his having been associated with both the late Sir Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry will always be a source of pride to him, in addition to which the phenomenally successful first appearance in the provinces of Miss Ellaline Terriss and Mr. Seymour Hicks in The Catch of the Season resulted in some records which will ever be a source of satisfaction to look back on. Other star artists whom Mr. Courtice has been associated with include Miss Olga Nethersole, with whom he was twelve months in America, as well as at the Gaiety Theatre, London; Miss Madge McIntosh and Mr. Graham Browne during their seasons at the Comedy, the Court, and Terry's Theatre; with Mr. George Giddens at the Royalty Theatre; and tours with Miss Marie Dainton and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan and the late Alfred Maltby. Mr. Courtice's first experience began with the late Miss Sarah Thorne at the Theatre Royal, Margate, where, for the last three years of her life he acted as business manager for her; and seeing that since those days he has had almost every experience that management affords, from "fit-ups" to West-End management, he confidently hopes and expects to increase the reputation of the cosy Carlisle Theatre both with the public and the touring managers.

MISS McGRATH'S DRAMATIC AND VOCAL RECITAL.

At Brinsmead Hall last Saturday evening, Dec. 15, Miss Lylie McGrath, one of the professors of elocution at the Royal Academy of Music, gave a recital, assisted by Miss Wadia and Mr. Ambrose Coviello, and several of her diction and elocution pupils. The hall was well filled when the programme commenced with a pianoforte solo of Brahms Rhapsodie in G minor, played by Mr. Ambrose Coviello. Miss Mary Lauder sang "Autumn," by F. Abt, with expressive feeling, and Miss Eugenie Rittenburg was much applauded in Rameau's song, "Accourez, riante jeunesse." The recitation of four poems, "Spring," "Lamplighter," "Little Bo Peep," and "The Path," by Post Wheeler, were cleverly given by Miss Marjorie Martyr, one of Miss McGrath's pupils; and Miss Gale sang "Summer Night," by Goring Thomas, with good intonation, but a slight tendency to drag the time. Miss Ida C. Pierre recited Rudyard Kipling's "Grave of the Hundred Lead" with marked ability and dramatic effect. Miss Pierre comes from the West Indies, and, as Miss McGrath announced from the platform, was the first lady of her complexion who had recited before a London audience. The diction class gave "Three Cavalier Ballads" and "As I ride," by Robert Browning, and Miss Gwendolen Lally was warmly greeted for her recitation of Grieg's "Bergliot," and another most promising pupil of Miss McGrath's, Miss Muriel Allen, gave good effect to her recitation of "La belle dame sans merci," by Keats, and Robert Browning's "The Laboratory," the latter being encored. In the second part of the programme Mr. Ambrose Coviello played Chopin's piano solo, Scherzo in C minor skilfully, and Miss Lylie McGrath and Miss Gladys Baird gave a (selected) duologue that was well received by the audience, Miss Isabelle Wadia gave a successful rendering of Saint-Saëns' song, "Softly wakes my heart," from Samson and Delilah, and Miss Gladys Baird recited "Meet we no Angels?" words by Thomas Ashe and music by Stanley Hawley, and "Roadside Fire," with words by R. L. Stevenson and music by Miss McGrath. Among other clever pupils of Miss McGrath were Mr. Cyril Twyford and Miss Hilda C. Lyon. The accompanist was Mr. Henry Sanders.

PLAYGOERS' CLUB FESTIVITIES.

The joys of Yuletide were anticipated at the Hotel Cecil on Sunday, when the Playgoers' Club Ladies' Christmas dinner was given. It is admittedly the most successful function connected with the Club, and this year's celebration quite equalled those of former years, the fine banqueting-room being completely filled with a gay assemblage. The chair was ornamented by Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and amongst those present were Miss Phyllis Broughton, Miss Isabel Jay, Miss Mabel Love, Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Huntly, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Glenister, Mr. Bannister Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sounes, Mr. James Sharpe (hon. sec.), Mr. Osman Edwards, Mr. C. E. B. Kibblewhite, Mr. and Mrs. W. Sparks, Mr. Frederick S. Hess (hon. treasurer), &c.

In the absence of Mr. Hall Caine, who was too unwell to be present, the toast of the evening, "The Ladies (our Guests)," was proposed by the vice-president, Mr. H. Passmore-Edwards, who said it had cost him nights of sleepless agony in wondering how he could do justice to his subject, his audience, and the traditions of the Club. It was a very happy omen that Mrs. Patrick Campbell should preside at a dinner of the Playgoers' Club, for their initials were the same, and he thought they might infer a pleasant bond of sympathy from that coincidence. Mr. Passmore-Edwards referred in the highest terms of praise to Mrs. Campbell's various impersonations. It was with the greatest possible pleasure that they welcomed her amongst them that night. They always loved to honour those who were an honour to our stage, and, in according their warmest greetings to Mrs. Campbell, they knew that they were right. Handing Mrs. Campbell a handsome mirror, the speaker asked her acceptance from the Club of a little gift as a souvenir of one of the most charming evenings they had ever spent within those walls.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell, who had a most enthusiastic reception, said in response that it had been a pleasure, a very great pleasure to her, to take the chair that night, but she would have to tell them that when Mr. Hess asked her to do so, he gave her his most solemn word that she would not be asked to speak, and Mr. Edwards had given his most solemn word to the same effect. Ten minutes ago, however, she was assured that everyone would pay half-a-crown more for their tickets if she would consent to speak. She felt, therefore, that she must say a few words, however foolish. She was glad, after all, that everyone had broken their most solemn words, for it enabled her to thank them heartily for the lovely mirror which had been given her by the Club. When she looked in the mirror of late, she had a slight feeling of regret, but whenever she looked into the mirror she then held in her hand, she would do so without any regret, but remember only that pleasant evening and their charming treatment of her. She thanked them very, very warmly.

It was afterwards announced that Mrs. Campbell would write her signature on the menu at a charge of half-a-crown, and by that means realised for the Children's Pantomime Fund £10—double the amount, it was stated, that has ever been received for autographs of the Club's guests. Miss Phyllis Broughton and Miss Mabel Love were also subjected to a siege of autograph hunters, whose attacks they smilingly survived. Great applause greeted the announcement during the evening that Mr. Arthur Collins had invited two thousand poor children to the dress rehearsal of Drury Lane pantomime, and that Mr. Bannister Howard had extended a similar invitation to fifteen hundred at the Crystal Palace in January.

An admirable concert was begun by Mr. Tom Clare, who gave a clever parody at the piano of "Love, could I only tell thee!" Miss Clarice Mayne was wildly encored for her lifelike imitations of popular favourites; Miss Madge Vincent was similarly honoured, Mr. Arthur Bleackley aroused enthusiasm for his vivid reproductions of eminent actors, Mr. Charles Capper whistled the popular "Estudiantina" mellifluously, Mr. Leslie Stiles sang "I dream" with fine expression, Miss Aileen Hodgson gave a cultivated rendering of French ballads, and the programme was completed by Miss Rosamund Bury, Miss Ida Freeman, Mr. Arthur Melrose, Mr. Frederick H. Blamey, and Mr. Harrison Latimer.

KING'S THEATRE, SUNDERLAND.

Things theatrical bear a most interesting aspect in Sunderland, two first-class houses being in course of erection within a stone's throw of each other, and within a stone's throw also of the existing Avenue and Palace Theatres.

The Empire (Mr. Thornton's) had its foundation-stone laid a few weeks ago by Miss Vesta Tilley, and is to be a three-tier house, and will be used for the two-turns-a-night system. Most remarkable, however, has been the progress in erecting the new King's Theatre, situate in Crow Tree-road, the building of which, to outside appearances, seems finished almost.

The King's can claim to be unique amongst theatres, being the first, and thus far the only, theatre to be constructed of ferro-concrete (Hennebique's patent).

The whole of the foundations, piers, grand circle, and gallery are made of this material, which consists of concrete made from gravel, whin, sand, and special Portland cement, reinforced with round steel bars and hoops.

These ferro-concrete structures are able to withstand enormous strains, and, owing to the protection provided by the concrete to the steelwork, the latter remains rustproof for ever, obviating the frequent inspection and repainting of exposed steelwork which are necessary in metallic structures generally. The same cause also renders the building absolutely fireproof. The recent conflagrations at Baltimore and San Francisco have proved most fully that concrete is the best protection which may be given to steelwork against intense heat, and in the construction of a theatre this is a matter of considerable importance, and in the case of the King's it has been given full attention and regard, the utmost possible safety compatible with the necessary comfort having been provided.

Appliances of the most modern and improved type are being fitted in connection with the stage, which can at a moment's notice be completely isolated from the rest of the building. The design has been executed on the cantilever principle, so as to avoid the inconvenience to the audience of columns obstructing the view of the stage.

Accommodation is being made for about 3,000 persons, special attention having been given to the number of exits from every part of the house.

The furnishing and decoration of the theatre will be most modern and sumptuous, and the whole erection will be lit by electricity.

Mr. Wm. Hope, of Newcastle, and Mr. S. F. Davidson, also of Newcastle, are the architect and contractor respectively for the building. The ferro-concrete work is being carried out under the direct supervision of M. Hennebique's district manager, Mr. Guerrittee, of Newcastle.

The fashionable audience gave a cordial reception to The Dandy Duke at the Brighton Theatre Royal on Monday evening, when it opened a week's run in aid of the Sussex County Hospital, and was performed by local amateurs, who had some professional support. The story is of a very slender character, its leading features being the escapades of the Dandy Duke, who disguises himself as James MacEachran, the long-lost father of Carmina, in order that he may gain the young lady's respect, and ultimately her hand and heart. If the plot is somewhat weak, the author has achieved a distinct success in the music he has wedded to the lyrics of the burlesque. The vocal solos and concerted pieces are refined, graceful, and delightfully tuneful, and his dainty, charming orchestration reaches a high standard of excellence. The piece was admirably staged; the scenery, by Messrs. W. Drury and T. Bull, comprised two superb sets descriptive of The Village of Rothenbosch and The Hall at Colonel Dumbel-Bowers'. The dresses were rich and handsome, and the full chorus and orchestra numbered upwards of a hundred performers. The opening representation of the burlesque went with surprising smoothness and an exhilarating swing, and the duties of conductor were carried out with masterly skill by Mr. F. D. Bulkley-Byng, of the Alhambra, London. Miss Margaret Cooper, who is a great favourite with Brighton concert-room audiences, enhanced her reputation by her graceful and charming impersonation of Rosaline, the Dandy Duke's sister. She invested the songs allotted to her with sweet, sympathetic tone and artistic finish, and was unanimously encored for her renderings of "Hey Ho!" and "Crimson Rose," but achieved her greatest success in "Fairyland," a veritable vocal gem, supported by beautiful orchestration and fine choral singing. She was also conspicuously effective in the stirring song, "The Soldier Girl." Mr. Vere Smith as the Duke of Rothenbosch was well suited, and acted with alertness and spirit. His songs were ably rendered, his treatment of "I'm from Australia" being especially effective. Mr. Harold T. Richardson proved very entertaining as the dude, Philip Phootle, his quaint style reminding one forcibly of Mr. G. P. Huntley. Mr. Claude Dale, who possesses a light and well-trained tenor voice, gave an excellent enactment of the Hon. Claude Pulham. The duet "If I ever thought of marrying you," in which he was joined by Miss Margaret Cooper, was awarded the honour of a double encore. Mr. Low Warren was droll as Alexander (the Duke's servant), and Miss Gretchen Sawyer made a dainty and bright Suzanne (Rosaline's maid). Their love-making scenes were diverting, and their duet, "The Bond Street Beauty Shop," was warmly appreciated. Mr. Mervyn Trevor as Colonel Dumbel-Bower submitted a capital character-study, and in his eccentricities and by-play recalled Mr. George Graves's General des Ifs. Miss Dorothy Liddell's Carmina merits warm commendation. Her singing and dancing were alike excellent, and she was heartily encored in her songs, "He gave the lady away" and "The Musical Comedy Girl." Miss Dorothy Landon's Mrs. Bang and Miss Dolores Jackson's Annie Hodge were capital impersonations, bright and merry. Mr. W. J. Steers was humorous as the butler, Anthony Godolphin; and Mr. Thomas I. Gates showed praiseworthy acting as Farmer William Hodge. Mr. Frank T. Toulmin made the most of his opportunities as James McEachran; and Miss L. Colbatch Clarke was sprightly as the cook, Martha. Miss Eileen Molyneux won enthusiastic applause for her gracefully executed solo dances; and other special dances were effectively given by the Misses Bull, Colville, Hodgson, and Jenkins. Much of the spectacular success of the piece was due to the eight Bored Ladies, who were exquisitely gowned and posed gracefully. The choruses were ably rendered. On the termination of the performance Messrs. Vere Smith and Mervyn Trevor and Miss Margaret Cooper were called to the front. The duties of acting-manager to the company are courteously carried out by Mr. Charles Howard, who is well known in local as well as London theatrical circles.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

the Drama, in Four Acts, by Fredk. S. Jennings and W. P. Sheen, entitled
"WHY WOMAN SINS."

With the Borough Theatre closed for pantomime rehearsals, the Theatre Royal holds sway this week at Stratford in catering for local playgoers. Popular audiences, who are not too insistent on the score of probability, but like their dramatic fare served "hot and strong," will find Why Woman Sins much to their liking, for there are thrilling incidents galore, with plenty of comic interludes. A well-balanced cast has been engaged by Mr. Samuel James, and the piece is excellently mounted. Mr. John D. Sanders makes a manly and buoyant Lieut. Harry Maxwell; and Mr. Jackson Hayes contributes an incisive and very convincing portraiture of the callous and blackguardly Captain Herbert Carlton. Mr. Alec Forbes is responsible for a most effective sketch of Jim Rainbird; and Mr. George Ellis plays capitally as the easy-going Cecil Spencer. Mr. A. P. Kaye is always amusing as Sam Spavins; and the lighter side of the piece is further contributed to by Mr. C. Grant as Bobby Beans, and Mr. Fred May as Orlando Whiffles. Miss Gertrude Netterville plays very powerfully as the scheming Ida Vallette, an exacting part, which is handled with admirable restraint; and Miss Hilda Baynton makes a charming and sympathetic Nell Desmond. Miss May Seton is vivacious and pleasing as Lily de Vere; Miss Ella May plays brightly as Nancy Nibble; and Miss Bertha Baker presents a plaintive figure as the waif, Jack Smith. The remaining parts are undertaken with intelligence and care.

LITTLE MAX DARLEWSKI, the marvellous boy pianist, composer, and conductor, will appear at a special matinée at the Palace, Southampton, on Wednesday afternoon next, at 3 p.m.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree was enthusiastically acclaimed at the Broadway Theatre, New Cross, on Monday, when he handed the Lord Mayor of London the proceeds of the performance of Dombey and Son, given by the Dickens' Fellowship, of which society Mr. Tree is president. The house was crowded, and large numbers assembled outside to greet the distinguished visitors. The occasion was Mr. Tree's birthday, and he marked it happily by adding to the receipts to be devoted to the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Fund a cheque for £10, wittily paraphrasing an old saying by adding, "The better the deed, the better the day."

An ingenious method of securing the signatures of supporters of the Irving Memorial was adopted at the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday. After the meeting all present were invited on the stage to append their names to a sheet, but it was clear that it would be a long proceeding, and many might not stay to carry out the request of the committee. More effective measures were therefore taken, and as the large assemblage passed out by way of the stage they found the stage-door keeper's office occupied by Mr. Cyril Maude, who carefully supervised the appending of the names, while Sir Charles Wyndham stood in the corridor courteously but unmistakably directing attention to the operation.

The death of Mr. Hamilton Aïdé, which occurred on the 14th inst., after only two days' illness, has brought to a sudden termination a career of wide diversity in the literary world. The deceased gentleman, who had reached the age of seventy-six, wrote poems, songs, and novels, and made several notable contributions to dramatic literature. He had the distinction of writing for Sir Henry Irving, in 1874, a play taken from the French, called Philip, which, however, attained only a brief run. Mr. Aïdé made a hit with a piece entirely of his own, entitled A Nine Days' Wonder, produced at the old Court Theatre in 1875, with Mr. Hare and Mrs. Kendal in the cast. A long run awaited his adaptation of Dr. Bill, produced at the Avenue in 1890, with the success of which Mr. George Alexander was so prominently associated. Other plays by Mr. Aïdé were Die Fledermaus, an adaptation made in 1876; All or Nothing, produced in 1880; Cousins, 1882; A Great Catch, 1883; the libretto of Not At Home, staged in 1886; and Incognito, given at the Haymarket in 1888.

Mr. Lewis Waller entertained about 400 crippled children to a special performance of Robin Hood, given at the Lyric Theatre on Monday afternoon on behalf of the Lord Mayor's Fund for Cripple Children. The dress circle and upper circle were filled with happy boys and girls, whose hearty and repeated applause testified to their full enjoyment of the play. At the close of the second act the Lord Mayor, addressing the children, said that their pleasure that afternoon was owing to the kindness of Mr. Lewis Waller and Miss Evelyn Millard, who, when they first heard of his scheme for building a home for crippled children at the seaside, determined to do something to give the children enjoyment, and so gave that matinée for their benefit. Cheers were asked for and cordially given for Mr. Waller and Miss Millard and the others of the company who had so generously assisted in the good work.

Miss Topsy Sinden, the death of whose father we recorded in our last issue, has suffered another bereavement in the loss of her aunt, sister to the deceased gentleman, who passed away on the 12th inst. Mr. Sinden died in his sleep of heart failure on Nov. 17, after an acute attack of influenza. Mr. Bert Sinden is still at the sanatorium, where he went in the summer, but is happily improving in health. Miss Sinden, it may be added, has finished her engagement at the Aldwych, and has taken another appointment with Mr. George Edwardes to play So Hei, in See-See, opening at the King's Theatre, Glasgow, on Monday.

We have to record with great regret the death of Miss Mabel Lane, who succumbed to an attack of pneumonia in her native Australia last month. The deceased actress was for several years with Mr. Penley, in Charley's Aunt company, and for the last three years had played with Mr. J. C. Williamson's companies in Australia. Miss Lane was highly esteemed by all who knew her, and her untimely death will be mourned by many friends in London as well as her native country.

The reopening of the Garrick Theatre after the Christmas vacation at the Boxing Day matinée will mark the 125th performance of The Morals of Marcus. An extra matinée of the successful play will be given on the following day. In the New Year a further series of matinées of Macbeth will be given at the Garrick after Mr. Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh return from their holiday on the Continent.

"Amasis," which is to give place to Mr. Fred Terry and Miss Julia Neilson at the New Theatre on the 31st inst., will on that date be transferred to the Criterion Theatre for a continuance of its successful run. On the opening night each member of the audience will be presented with a specially bound copy of the full vocal score, by which it is hoped to compensate many who were disappointed at the 100th performance, when similar souvenirs were given away.

Mr. Chas. Manners sang selections before a crowded congregation at St. James's Church, Burnley, on Sunday night. Mr. W. M. Chapman Huston, the general manager of the Moody-Manners Company, read the lessons, and, in place of the sermon, a selection from the "Messiah" was sung by Mr. John Child. The collections, which were on behalf of the Burnley District Nursing Association, amounted to £14 5s. 6d. Mr. Lecoys James, of the same company, was in attendance at the Ebenezer Chapel, where his rendering of "Why do the nations" ("Messiah"), was so much appreciated that the congregation could not refrain from breaking into loud applause.

Mr. Louis Calvert is making elaborate preparations for the tenth annual pantomime at the Broadway Theatre, New Cross. Cinderella will be produced on the afternoon of Boxing Day, with Miss Lucie Caine in the title-rôle, Miss Beatrice Edwardes as Prince Perfect, and Mr. Fred Carey, the Tally-ho Trio, the Brothers Pollard, the Sisters Sprightly, Miss Lilian Cecil, the Eight Sunrays, and Mr. George Grogie in the cast. A series of special children's matinées will be given during the run.

The "Peter Pan Keepsake," edited by Daniel S. O'Connor, and issued by Chatto and Windus, is an admirable production, both in illustration and letterpress. It gives numberless sketches, excellently printed on glazed paper, of scenes from Peter Pan, and a comprehensive version of the story, retold from Mr. Barrie's fantastic play, which seems to have become quite a Christmas institution. A reproduction in reduced form of Mr. Charles Buchel's well-known coloured poster, representing Peter and Wendy's flight over the house-tops, appears on the cover, and the book is further embellished by nine full-length portraits of Miss Cecilia Loftus, the Peter of last year, and of Miss Hilda Trevelyan, the Wendy of each London production. The play is alluded to in terms of warm praise in a "foreword" by Mr. W. T. Stead, and a tabulated page giving the casts of the three London performances, as well as those of New York and Manchester, enables an interesting comparison to be made.

Boxing Night will, as is customary, witness the production of Mr. Arthur Collins's children's pantomime, Sindbad, written by J. Hickory Wood and Arthur Collins, with music by J. M. Glover. The cast of principals consists of Messrs. Walter Passmore, Harry Randall, Harry Fragson, Fred Emney, Drew and Alders, Arthur Conquest, and Alec Davidson, Misses Queenie Leighton, Marie George, Florence Warde, Ethel Oliver, Rosamund Bury, and Mlle. Rodriguez. The action of the pantomime, which is illustrated by twelve scenes, will finish with a striking representation of the Durbar, with a Harlequinade as a finale.

Mr. Richard Green, the well-known baritone, was recently singing in aid of the Waterloo Hospital for Children at a concert at which H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany was present. After his singing of the Prologue to Pagliacci he had the honour of being presented to H.R.H. at her special request.

The British Empire Shakespeare Society gave a dramatic reading of Henry VIII. at Kensington Town Hall on Monday afternoon. The hall was quite full, and the audience very enthusiastic. Mr. Walter Hampden was an excellent Buckingham, and Miss Edith Wynne Matthison and Mr. Acton Bond repeated the renderings of Katharine and Wolsey which they gave so impressively at the St. James's Theatre on the occasion of the last meeting of the society. Mr. Kenyon Musgrave made a robust King, Mr. J. Fritz Russell—who was also the Sir Henry Guildford—struck the right note in the part of Griffiths, and the other characters were capably filled. Messrs. Lewis Willoughby, Russell Norrie, Clarence Derwent, William Burchill, Stanley Drewitt, Douglas Vigors, A. Bristowe, and Charles Hann, and Misses Mary Barton, Claire Greet, and Florence Geere. Miss Enid Rose read the stage directions, and Miss Patricia Plowman sang "Orpheus with his lute" with great charm. The reading was under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.

A trio of toasts has been prepared for the Savoyard celebration dinner of the O.P. Club, which will take place at the Hotel Cecil on Sunday, Dec. 30, when Mr. W. S. Gilbert will be the guest of the evening. "The Savoy Opera" will be proposed by the president, Mr. Sidney Dark, and responded to by Mr. Gilbert; Mr. T. McDonald Rendle will toast "The Savoyards," to which Miss Rosina Brandram and Mr. George Grossmith will reply; and Mr. Rutland Barrington will give "The Savoy Lovers," which will be acknowledged by the hon. treasurer, Mr. Carl Hentschel.

A meeting of the executive of the Shakespeare Memorial Fund for the further consideration of a site for the memorial took place at the Mansion House on the 14th inst., under the presidency of Lord Reay. Several proposed sites were considered, and ultimately the meeting was adjourned for an early conference with the members of the Advisory Committee of experts. Upon the decision then come to will depend the form which the memorial will take. The Lord Mayor was elected a member of the committee. A letter was received from the municipality of Venice enclosing a subscription of 1,000 lire to the Fund.

The usual weekly meeting of the Council of the Actors' Association was held on Tuesday last, when there were present Mr. C. Aubrey Smith (chairman), Mr. A. E. Drinkwater (deputy chairman), Mrs. Cecil Raleigh, Messrs. Cecil Barth, Acton Bond, F. Cremlin, A. E. George, Brandon Thomas, and Charles Cruikshanks (secretary).

The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, the council adjourned their sitting in order to attend the Irving Memorial meeting at the Garrick Theatre. Later on, the council reassembled for the despatch of business, Mary Weigall, Rose Lemoine, Matheson Lang, (Miss) Gordon Walker, and Sadie Jerome were nominated for election. One former member was reinstated, and three former members were nominated for reinstatement. The hon. solicitors reported progress in an action pending, and also that they had advised several members on points submitted.

The secretary reported that the seventh bi-monthly meeting of the members would be held in the saloon at 10, King-street on Thursday, the 10th prox.; he also reported that on the same day a meeting of members of the profession would be held at the St. James's Theatre to receive the report of the "Actors' Day" organising committee, and confirm the appointments of the members of the advisory board.

The secretary received instructions to sign the contracts for the insurance of members whose subscriptions are paid against loss of luggage and loss of salary owing to loss of luggage, in addition to the life and accident insurance now in vogue, and the necessary cheques for payment of the premiums for the year 1907 were authorised. Dr. W. M. Hotten George, 28, Weymouth-street, W., was elected as an hon. medical officer to the A.A. Two cases of alleged insanitation at two provincial theatres were under consideration, and the explanations given by the managers of each theatre were deemed satisfactory. A case of alleged bogus management was under consideration, and the secretary received instructions to file the information for future reference. The council decided that next Tuesday being Christmas Day, the next meeting of its members should be held on Tuesday, the 1st prox., at the usual hour. The council also decided that the premises should be closed on Boxing Day.

The Finance and General Purposes Committee held a meeting on Tuesday last. There were present Messrs. Acton Bond (chairman), A. E. Drinkwater, C. Aubrey Smith, and Chas. Cruikshanks (secretary). Several matters of finance were discussed, and the secretary received instructions as to the payment of current accounts, and also in connection with the preparation of the balance-sheet and record of assets and liabilities for the year ending Dec. 31, 1906.

Her Majesty's Theatre, Carlisle, reopens on Boxing Day, under the joint lesseeship of Mrs. R. S. McKim and Mr. Thos. Courtice, this gentleman having taken up his residence in the town. Mr. Courtice is very popular with the playgoing public of Carlisle, having acted as resident-manager there for Mr. Milton Bode a few years ago.

Great interest will be aroused in the company, headed by Miss F. Glossop Harris and Mr. Frank Cellier, jun., about to start on tour. An extensive répertoire is to be undertaken, Carmen being the first play to be produced. Mr. Percy H. Vernon has charge of the productions, and Mr. Max Jerome is acting-manager.

Miss Connie Ediss will in a few weeks take temporary leave of the Gaiety Theatre, which her genial presence has so long brightened. The popular comedienne has arranged to go on a tour in South Africa, where she will appear in a number of song-scenas, supported by a chorus of young ladies.

An orchestral concert will be given at Queen's Hall on the afternoon of New Year's Day by the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The programme will comprise examples from Handel, Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Berlioz, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky, the selection in almost every instance being representative of the composer's happiest inspirations. The vocalist will be Miss Maria Philippi.

Few places of amusement in the world will boast at Christmas such a variety of high-class entertainments as will be witnessed at the Crystal Palace. On Christmas Eve Mr. Bannister Howard will open the theatre with the pantomime of Aladdin, written by Mr. Fred Bowyer. Mr. Howard has worked the Palace theatre into a very successful undertaking, and in the splendid Christmas feast he is now arranging he has shown no falling-off in his determination to give his patrons the finest entertainment that money and good judgment can procure. It is a pantomime of the old-fashioned kind, full of rollicking fun, and designed to please both young and old.

The first act of the pantomime opens with a scene representing the Magic Crystal. After chorus and dance by "earthmen" and the usual consultation by the various fairies, we come to a delightful scene representing the Market-place of Pekin, where we meet the chief characters of the play. The story of Aladdin's adventures is then worked out in an amusing manner, and we visit the Imperial Bath, the Entrance of the Cave, and the Inside of the Cave—all masterpieces of scenery. The second act opens in Widow Twankey's Laundry, and the fun becomes fast and furious. The Palm Grove, the Interior of the Pavilion, the Exterior of the Palace, the Desert of Despair, the Boudoir of Badroulbadour in the Flying Palace are all represented, and, finally, the Throne Room of the Emperor's Palace, where Aladdin is triumphantly proclaimed ruler, is revealed.

A first-class company has been engaged, and no expense will be spared in supplying the best scenery, dresses, and music. Miss Lillie Lassah will be the Aladdin and Miss Lillie Gullick the Princess; Widow Twankey will be entrusted to Mr. A. E. Passmore and Abanazar to Mr. Arthur Poole. Amongst the clever combination are, also, Miss Josephine Sullivan, Miss Gladys Ray, Miss Nellie Barnwell, Mr. J. D. Cawdery, Mr. E. Oxloe, Mr. Frank Weir, and the Onda Brothers, whose comic horizontal-bar act and Motor Maniac sketch should alone be worth seeing. Miss Lottie Stone's troupe of acrobats and speciality dancers and the London Quartette of Glee Singers have also been engaged. In the harlequinade, Mr. Cawdery is the clown, and the comic shadowgraph and demon trap acts are sure to be popular. Mr. Joseph Sainton is the musical director and Mr. Charles Lake the producer.

Messrs Milton Bode and Edward Compton, of the Royal Opera House and Theatre Royal, Leicester, have closed both theatres this week. They will reopen on Boxing Day, when Mr. Chas. Macdona's chief company, in Mr. Popple (of Ippleton), will start their tour at the Royal Opera House, and at the Theatre Royal will be produced Mr. Milton Bode's pantomime of Aladdin, his first in Leicester.

Miss Maude Stewart Drewry, who is returning to England by the Armadale Castle from South Africa, has successfully sustained a varied répertoire as leading lady in Mr. Leonard Rayne's company. Among the parts taken by her were those of Countess, in Brigadier Gerard; Kate in The Manxman, Dick, in Two Little Vagabonds; Esther, in Caste; Lady Ethel, in Raffles; Henriette, in Two Orphans; Bess, in Lights o' London; and Calphurnia, in Julius Cæsar.

Mr. Chas. E. Machin has again engaged Mr. J. F. Elliston to bring out his pantomime this year at the Avenue Theatre, Sunderland. Dick Whittington is the subject of the annual, which is written by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and it will be produced on Boxing Day under the personal direction of Mr. Elliston and his manager, Mr. Lewis Leslie. Miss Maidie Scott will be principal boy, with Miss Veronica Brady as principal girl. Others in the cast include Mr. Tom Foy, Miss Violet Morgan, Miss Lil Hartley, Miss Flo Chevalier, Miss Clorinda Thurtell, and Miss Gertrude Lytton, the Marvellous Foys, J. C. Scatter, Tod Lowen, Mr. Bert Harrow, and the Aquamarinoff troupe of Russian singers and dancers.

Negotiations have been entered into by Mrs. Bertha Pogson, the well-known German adapter, for the German rights of Mr. Charles Hannan's successful fantastic play, The Electric Man, which she considers peculiarly likely to appeal to Continental audiences. Herr Albert Bozenhard, the celebrated star actor of the Thalia Theatre in Hamburg, who has also witnessed the play, is of the same opinion, and although nothing has been definitely settled with regard to the cast, it is practically certain that when the play is produced in Germany Herr Bozenhard will sustain the rôle of the Electric Man.

Mr. W. W. Kelly, lessee of the New Theatre Royal, Birkenhead, was returned at the top of the poll at a by-election in the local municipal council on Tuesday. Mr. Kelly, who secured 1,151 votes, takes his seat in the Conservative interest.

The Paisley Theatre has just undergone a thorough overhauling in its seating accommodation. Taking advantage of the theatre being closed last week for rehearsals of his pantomime, Mr. J. H. Savile had the dress circle and stalls replaced with more modern and up-to-date tip-up chairs. The other parts of the house were also re-seated and upholstered, and made much more comfortable for playgoers. The work, which was entrusted to the great theatre furnishers, Messrs. A. R. Dean and Sons, Birmingham, has given the greatest satisfaction. The installation of the electric light for orchestral and stage purposes was another improvement carried out at the same time.

One of the most ambitious and not least successful efforts of the Edinburgh branch of the British Empire Shakespeare Society took place on Wednesday evening of last week, when a performance of Twelfth Night was given in the Queen-street Hall. The Society has been fortunate enough to secure the services, as stage-manager, of Mr. Graeme Goring, a gentleman favourably known a few seasons ago at several of the London theatres; and under his able guidance a gratifying measure of excellence was achieved.

Mr. Allan Wilkie paid a very successful return visit to the Winter Gardens, Blackpool, last week, and has been rebooked by Mr. Huddleston for a date in the season. He is having some fine new palace sets painted by the well-known artist Mr. A. Bernasconi. A very fine tour, which will carry Mr. Wilkie right to the beginning of July, is booked.

At the conclusion of the Christmas term of the Royal College of Music on Saturday the following awards were made by the director and board of professors: Council Exhibitions—Singing: Dora Arnell, £5; Ethel Duthoit, £5. Organ: Adelaide Parker, £8. Violin: Florence Jennings, £12; Esther Capel-Cure, £5. Violoncello: Evelyn Seth-Smith, £10. Composition: Geoffrey Palmer, £5.

A competition for the Norfolk and Norwich Scholarship took place, and, subject to confirmation by the Council, was awarded to Margaret L. Prior (violin), the proxime being Beatrice B. Smith (singing), and Hilda Secrett (piano). Miss Muriel Foster having given £10 as a prize to be competed for by female singers, the amount was awarded jointly to Miss Maria Yelland and Miss Gladys Honey. The annual amount bequeathed by the late Edwin S. Dove (£13) for pupils who have distinguished themselves was awarded to James Friskin (A.R.C.M.), composition scholar.

Royal patronage was bestowed upon at least three theatres on Saturday. His Majesty the King visited the Garrick Theatre and saw The Morals of Marcus, T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales witnessed the performance of The Amateur Socialist at the Criterion, and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught honoured Peter's Mother at the Apollo.

The Theatre Royal, Plymouth, which has been closed during the past week, will reopen with Bluebeard, for which a fine company of artists has been engaged. On Wednesday Mr. Percy Williams, manager of the Grand Theatre, and son of Mr. C. F. Williams, lessee and manager of the Royal, took a well-earned annual benefit, when a lengthy programme of amateur and professional talent was presented.

Mr. Arthur H. Yolland, who represented Mr. F. R. Benson's company so long as manager in advance, and has recently been acting in the same capacity with Mr. Cyril Keightley's Miles Carew company, terminates his engagement at Glasgow. Next week he joins Messrs Lely and Mollison's company at Aberdeen for the tour of Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush and the forthcoming production of Macbeth at Manchester.

Miss Louisa Peach, who terminated last Saturday a five weeks' engagement with Messrs. Arden and Abel's Three of a Kind sketch, was wired for the same evening to take up her original part, Countess Natalie, in The Woman Who Gambles, at the Grand Theatre, Derby. Miss Peach travelled to Derby on Sunday, and opened on Monday. She will remain with Mr. Morton Powell until Jan. 12, and then returns to London, opening at Collins's on the 14th with her comedy sketch, Taming a Husband.

At Holy Trinity Church, Bow, on Sunday, the wedding took place of Mr. Fred Brown, jun., the eldest son of Mr. Fred Brown, the popular acting-manager of the Pavilion Theatre, and Miss Annie Royall. The church was crowded by a representative gathering both from the Pavilion Theatre and the Queen's Palace of Varieties, Poplar, at which place of entertainment the bridegroom holds a responsible position. Owing to illness in the bride's family the reception was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown, sen., at 63, Tredegar-square, E., and was attended by a large number of professional friends. The presents were numerous and costly, amongst them being a handsome silver biscuit-box presented by the staff of the Queen's Palace. Mr. Chas. Briggs, of the Crown Theatre, Peckham, ably officiated as "best man."

The Lady Dentist, the three-act farce by Alban Atwood (part author of Oh, Susannah! etc.) and Leopold Montague, which was successfully produced last year at the Broadway Theatre, New Cross, is having lyrics and music specially written for it by a well-known composer, and it will be sent on tour as an up-to-date musical farce.

Mr. Herbert Shelley and Little Max Darewski (Mme. Patti's protégé, aged ten) appeared at a fashionable matinée in Southampton on the 19th inst., and obtained a gratifying success. Mr. Shelley scored in his Protean Gaelic play, Dan the Outlaw, and the youthful prodigy made a hit with his marvellous pianoforte playing and conducting the overture to "William Tell" with an orchestra of over forty performers—truly a wonderful effort.

Mr. Alec F. Thompson concludes to-night a long and successful engagement with Messrs. Lely and Mollison as Posty in Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush, of which he was the original impersonator in Great Britain. Mr. Thompson was engaged by Mr. Lewis Waller to play in Robin Hood, but, owing to Messrs. Lely and Mollison being unable at the time to find another Posty, Mr. Waller was kind enough to forego any claim and to permit him to remain in the Brier Bush cast. Mr. Waller has still further extended his courtesy, and Mr. Thompson will shortly join The William Mollison Repertoire Company as principal comedian, playing Touchstone, Launcelot, Gobbo, etc. Throughout the last tour of The Brier Bush Mr. Thompson has satisfactorily combined the duties of stage management with those of his impersonation.

During the temporary absence on Monday of Mr. George Alexander, the part of Hilary Jesson in His House in Order, at the St. James's, was taken by Mr. Dawson Milward, who usually impersonates Major Maurewarde. Mr. Dawson Milward gave an artistic interpretation of the principal rôle, and at the end of the third act, when the great scene between Nina (Miss Irene Vanbrugh) and Hilary Jesson occurs, he was enthusiastically called before the curtain.

Mr. Clarence Sounes will produce his second annual pantomime, The Forty Thieves, at the Prince's Theatre, Pop'ar, on Boxing Day, when performances will be given both afternoon and evening. The pantomime will be beautifully mounted and dressed, and will boast a chorus of 100 voices. The fine cast will include Misses Lily Iris, Ruby Verdi, Margaret Radcliffe, Rosie Bartlett, Maude May Murray, Rosa Sullivan, and Messrs. Edwin Adeler, Frank Gee, Arthur Ricketts, and G. Villiers Arnold, Little Dando, the London Comedy Quartette, the Three Delaries, the Sisters Edwardes, and the Prince's Troupe of Dancers. A genuine children's harlequinade will conclude. Mr. Sounes is issuing a novel form of advertisement in the shape of a street map of Poplar, with the Prince's Theatre in the centre—all roads leading thereto.

The admirable series of photographs of the new Macbeth and Lady Macbeth, which are given as a supplement to last week's issue of the Sketch, were taken by Percy Guttenberg, of Manchester. The striking features of Mr. Arthur Bourchier and Miss Violet Vanbrugh are reproduced with life-like fidelity, and the pictures may well be termed speaking likenesses.

Miss Dorothy Sidney left London on Friday last under contract to J. C. Williamson for twelve months' engagement in Australia. If the host of telegrams and letters of good wishes from her friends could bring luck, the clever little artist should be assured of a happy and profitable tour.

Mr. Edward Chester, who completed on Easter Monday an engagement extending over four years in Florodora and The Belle of New York, and subsequently toured with The 'Varsity Belle, playing Theocritus Ward Sparkleton and stage managing, is now spending a vacation in his native town, South Shields. He is combining pleasure with business this week by supporting Miss Maud May (by permission of Mr. Henry E. Leigh), in Trilby and Moths at the Theatre Royal, South Shields, prior to rejoining The 'Varsity Belle.

The Academy of Dramatic Art has another successful term to record. Selections from A Midsummer Night's Dream, Coriolanus, His House in Order, Richard III., and Julius Cæsar have been rehearsed by the pupils of Mr. Fisher White and Mr. Lyall Swete. Special honorary classes in "The Final School" have been taken by Mr. George Alexander at the St. James's Theatre, in Act I. of The Ambassador; by Mr. Cyril Maude, in Acts II. and III. of The Manœuvres of Jane; and by Sir Squire Bancroft, in Act I. of Money. The next entrance examination will be held at the academy's premises, 62, Gower-street, on Jan. 8. Early in the New Year a public performance will be given by selected students at the St. James's Theatre.

Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry, back from their successful tour, will resume the run of Dorothy o' the Hall at the New Theatre on Monday, Dec. 31. Removed from the theatre at the height of its success, the piece has since met with such emphatic approval in the provinces that a long and prosperous run is assured.

The Duke of Connaught and Princess Patricia of Connaught witnessed the performance of The Yeomen of the Guard at the Savoy Theatre on Thursday evening.

"Miss Hook of Holland," the Dutch comedy-opera by Paul Rubens, is in active rehearsal, and will be produced by Mr. Frank Curzon in a few weeks' time at one of his West End theatres. The cast is composed of Messrs. Herbert Clayton, B. S. Foster, G. P. Huntley, George Barrett, Harry Grattan, and Morris Harvey, and Misses Ethel Cadman, Gracie Leigh, Phœbe Mercer, Gwennie Brogden, Gladys Ivery, and Eva Kelly.

The Shakespeare Theatre has, during a short vacation, undergone entire redecoration and re-upholstering, and will reopen on Christmas Eve with Mr. H. G. Dudley Bennett's eleventh annual pantomime, Aladdin, particulars of which have already appeared in our columns. The Bolinbroke Hospital benefit has been postponed in consequence of the renovations, but will take place in due course.

Messrs. Lionel Glenister and J. Wood Ingram are so gratified with the success of their autumn tour of All-of-a-Sudden Peggy, with Miss Decima Moore in the title-rôle, that they have decided to tour the play in the spring, starting in February.

Mr. H. Hamilton Stewart has every reason to congratulate himself on the success of his first tour of Sherlock Holmes, which concluded last week at Harrogate. His second tour opens to-day at the Theatre Royal, Blackburn, and runs right through until the end of April. Some excellent bookings have been made, including nearly all the principal suburban and provincial theatres.

An influential theatrical syndicate has been formed in Buenos Aires with the object of bringing to South America first-class English attractions. Mr. Edouard José, who has been for several years connected with the Wheeler-Edwardes's Gaiety Company, and will be remembered in England both as actor and manager, will visit England in January next in his capacity of managing-director of the syndicate to make arrangements for the visit of several companies to South America. The combination, which will be known as "The South American Theatrical Syndicate," has already obtained the lease of two of the best and most popular theatres in Buenos Aires, and Mr. José intends touring the companies through the whole of the country, viz., from Monte Video to Valparaiso.

"Alice in Wonderland" was revived for the fourth time on Thursday afternoon, and received a hearty welcome from a large audience at the Prince of Wales's. Miss Marie Studholme is the new Alice, and gives a performance redolent of grace and charm. Mr. Seymour Hicks was too indisposed to appear as the Mad Hatter, which part fell accordingly to Mr. Stanley Brett, who gives an amusing reproduction of his brother's antics and drollery. Mr. J. C. Buckstone and Mr. Tom Graves are comical as the Gryphon and the Mock Turtle in the first part, and Tweedledum and Tweedledee in the second. Miss Alice Barth supplies a diverting Duchess and Red Queen, Mr. Will Bishop dances very cleverly as the Lobster and the Golliwog, and Miss Margaret Fraser is an engaging Second Lobster. The youthful Miss Rita Leggerio does remarkably well in the character of the White Rabbit, Miss Carmen Sylva, as the Lily, is much applauded for her song; and Miss Phyllis Bedells, as the Cornflower, dances in finished style.

"Little Red Riding Hood" at Terry's will be produced on the afternoon of Boxing Day. The company includes Miss Lily Harold as Robin Hood, Miss Gladys Archbutt as Red Riding Hood, Mr. Fred Storey as Lawyer Slyfox, and Mr. Guy Williams as the Wolf. The book is by Mr. Newman Maurice; and six of the incidental songs will be supplied by Mr. Nation.

Mr. Leslie Carter has been engaged by Mr. Walter Maxwell to play his old part of "The Lion" in The Lion and the Mouse, Sir Jennings Pyke in Little Mary, and other rôles in Mr. Maxwell's répertoire season at Cork, commencing on Boxing Day. Mr. Carter is also re-engaged for the spring tour of The Lion and the Mouse.

Mr. Jerrold Heather, who terminated last week a long tour as Commander Noel Tregarthen in The Two Little Sailor Boys, has been engaged by Mr. Geo. Carlton-Wallace to star as Philip Carnaby in his romantic love play, The Love that Women Desire.

Mr. Norman V. Norman finished his autumn tour last Saturday at the Crystal Palace Theatre, with the production of Dennis Cleugh and Duncan Jones's new romantic play, Robin Hood. Taken all through, Mr. Norman's last tour was one of the most successful he has had. The next tour will start early in the New Year, and Mr. Norman hopes to produce at an early date a very powerful play adapted from a novel that has lately been very successful.

Miss Elspeth Dudgeon, the clever young actress of Mr. Walter Maxwell's company, who was taking a holiday at Edinburgh last week, generously gave her services, by permission of her manager, at two performances of Pinero's The Weaker Sex in the Queen's Hall, in aid of the Anti-Vivisection Society. Miss Dudgeon, who appeared in the part of Lady Vivash, compelled the enthusiastic cheers of the audience, and a handsome bouquet was handed to her before she left the stage.

At St. Mark's Church, Lewisham, on Monday, the marriage was solemnised between Mr. Cecil Klein, only son of Mr. Caspar Klein, of Maida Vale, and Miss Celestine Bertram, sister of Mr. Arthur, Frank, and Eugene Bertram. The bride was married in her travelling dress of burgundy-coloured cloth, trimmed with chiffon velvet of the same colour, and white hat, and wore a set of silver fox furs, the gift of the best man, Mr. Arthur Bertram. Later in the day the happy couple left for Paignton. The presents were numerous, including a fitted tea basket from all the members of The Breed of the Treshams company (of which the bride and bridegroom are fellow-workers), and many gifts of an appropriate character from individual members of the combination. Mr. and Mrs. Klein rejoin The Breed of the Treshams company at the Opera House, Torquay, on Boxing Day.

The harlequinade with which The Belle of Mayfair is to be embellished will be produced at the Vaudeville this afternoon. In addition to the principals of the comedy, there will be a secondary set of juvenile performers, with Miss Winnie Hall as Clown, Master Grata as Pantaloon, Miss Jessie Parke as Columbine, and Miss Nora Lennox as Harlequin.

A copyright performance was given on Thursday at the Bijou Theatre, Bayswater, of the libretto of a comic opera, entitled Dainty Dresden, written by Norah Begbie and Percival Knight.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

THE proposal to erect a statue of the late Sir Henry Irving in London reminds one of the fine work by Mr. E. Onslow Ford, now in the library of the London Guildhall, representing Irving as Hamlet. Mr. Bram Stoker, in his "Personal Reminiscences," gives an interesting account of how it was prepared. "One morning," writes Mr. Stoker, "I got a note from Irving sent down by cab from his rooms. In it he said, 'There is a certain Mr. Onslow Ford coming to the theatre this morning. Please see him for me and give him some fatherly or brotherly advice.' I left word with the hall-keeper to send for me whenever the gentleman came. I did not know who he was or what he wanted; but I did know what 'fatherly or brotherly advice' meant. At that period of his life the demands made on Irving's time were fearful. One of my functions at the theatre, as I had come to know after a year of exceedingly arduous work, was to act as a barrier.

"WHEN Mr. Onslow Ford told me that he wished to make a statuette of Henry Irving as Hamlet I felt that the time for 'advice' had come, and began to pave the way for a non possumus strong in intention though gentle in expression. The young sculptor, however, had thought the matter all over for himself. He knew the demands on Irving's time, and how vastly difficult it would be to get sittings so many and so long as would be required for the work he had projected. I listened of course, and thought better of him and his chance in that he knew his difficulties at the beginning.

"PRESENTLY he put his hand in his pocket and took out something rolled in paper—a parcel about as big as a pork pie. When he had unrolled it he held up a rough clay model of a seated figure. 'This,' said he, 'is something of the idea. I have been several times in the front row of the stalls watching as closely as I could. One cannot well model clay in the stalls of a theatre. But I did this after the first time, and I have had it with me on each other occasion. I compared it on such opportunities as I had—you do keep the Lyceum dark all but the stage; and I think I can see my way. I don't want to waste Irving's time or my own opportunities if I am so fortunate as to get sittings.' That was the sort of artist that needed none of my 'advice'—fatherly, brotherly, or otherwise. Irving gave many sittings for the statue."

SIR HENRY on one occasion sat for his bust to Count Gleichen, who was also doing a bust of Lord Beaconsfield. One day when he came the sculptor, looking at his watch, said, "I'm afraid our sitting to-day must be a short one—indeed, it may be interrupted at any moment. You won't mind, I hope?" "Not at all!" said Irving. "What is it?" "The Premier has sent me word that he must come at an earlier hour than he fixed as he has a Cabinet meeting." He had already unswathed the clay so as not to waste in preparation the time of the statesman when he should come. Irving was looking at it when something struck him. Turning to Count Gleichen he said, "That seems something like myself—you know we actors have to study our own faces a good deal, so that we come to know them."

JUST then Disraeli came in. When they had all shaken hands, the sculptor said to the newcomer, "Mr. Irving says that he sees in your bust a resemblance to himself!" Disraeli looked at Irving a moment with a pleased expression. Then he walked over to where Irving's bust was still uncovered. He examined it critically for a few moments; and then, turning to Count Gleichen, said, "What a striking and distinguished physiognomy!"

"MANY, still with us," writes Mr. E. Edmunds, "will remember 'Jimmy' Stoyle, the baritone buffo of the Gaiety and other London theatres, who, in his younger days, was attached to the stock company of the Theatre Royal, Birmingham. While there, he, on a certain Saturday, to his great joy, found that he was out of the bill for that night, the piece being Pizarro. But his happiness was of short duration, for the management, unwilling to pay him his salary for nothing, recast the small part of the High Priest of the Temple of the Sun, and assigned it to poor Stoyle. Smarting under a sense of injustice, he determined on revenge; and in the big Temple scene, wherein the High Priest has to advance to the altar and sing to the sun:—

"Oh! Power supreme! In mercy smile
With favour on thy servant's toil!"

Jimmy, to the horror of the management and the delight of the gallery, advanced to the centre of the centre of the footlights, and, bowing low, sang to the audience:—

"Oh! Power supreme! In mercy smile
With favour on thy (bowing very low, with his right-hand fingers extended on his breast) servant STOYLE!"

He was rewarded with a tremendous round of applause; and his notice.

THE same correspondent thinks that the three most careless caligraphists of his theatre experience were Charles Dillon, John Coleman, and William Sidney. John, it is said, once wrote an order for the theatre: "Admit two, dress circle, J. C." But the order having been dropped in the street, was picked up by an old lady, who took it to a chemist's and had it made up for her cold. Fred Sidney tells how that he received a letter from his father; but, not being able to read it, sent it back, with "Dear Governor, whatever is your letter about?" To which came the reply, "Dear Fred, hanged if I know!"

MR. TREE'S mounting of the banquet on board ship in Antony and Cleopatra on Thursday is certain to differ widely from that of a repast in a dramatised version of Lytton's Last Days of Pompeii, at the Queen's Theatre in the last generation. John Ryder, the veteran stage-manager and tragedian, had engaged a clever tight-rope walker for the banquet scene; but, from motives of economy, a cheaper and less reliable substitute took his place. The consequence was that when this gentleman was performing above the tables, he missed his footing, and fell among the plates, dishes, and guests, and the act drop had to be lowered in the middle of the scene to clear away the débris. This being done, the scene was again "discovered," with the guests carousing as though no untoward event had marred their festivity. But, alas, for the vanity of stage-managerial hopes! One of the budding histrions at the table had had only one speech apportioned to him, and speak that speech he was determined to. So, immediately the drop arose, he said, alluding to the unfortunate tight-rope (non) equilibrist, "A very clever fellow, indeed! Do you not think so?" That settled it, and laughter loud and long lasted until the drop again descended. For the Arena scene, in which Mr. George Rignold, as Glaucus, had to fight with lions, two powerfully-built mastiff dogs had been provided, with lion masks, manes, and caudal appendages complete. Rignold had been at great pains to bring up these canines in the way they should go on the night of performance by various gifts of lump sugar. The Arena scene was discovered, the combats were gone through, the spectators shouted, the lions roared until the prompter's voice was hoarse with shouting into his speaking trumpet, and the dread moment arrived. Glaucus was face to face with death—and the lions; when, unfortunately, the animals, anxious for their saccharine encouragement, raised each one his right paw, forced off each canine mask, and, leaving it hanging by the collar, wagged his false tail, and said in dog-gese language, "Sugar, please, George!"

Mr. J. M. Barrie tells us in his delightful story, "The Little White Bird," on which the stage adventures of Peter Pan and his friends and enemies are founded, that all kiddies have a desire to imitate bird life. If they would only press their hands to their temples they would have recollections of being birds before they were human, and they are naturally "very itchy at the shoulders." This is only Mr. Barrie's fun, of course; but there will be thousands of children during Christmas and the New Year—all the happier, all the brighter, for their visit to the Duke of York's—who will positively long to fly through the nursery window with Peter Pan, Wendy, and the younger Darlings to the Never-Never Land, to have glorious pillow fights, and to engage in fierce combats with that most delightful pirate, Mr. James Hook—he never stoops so low as Jim—and his companions. We metaphorically shook hands with James on Tuesday—the first night of the second London revival by Mr. Charles Frohman, of the Barrie nursery classic—in spite of the warning chant—

"Yo ho, yo ho, when I say paw,
By fear they're undertook,
Naught's left upon your bones when you
Have shaken hands with Hook."

Hook has a choice derangement of "epitaphs," and, instead of such a phrase as "Shiver my timbers!" he prefaces his chiding with "Split my infinitives!" Mr. Gerald du Maurier is again at hand fortunately to extract every ounce of fun from the quaint lines of this fierce tyrant of the black flag brigade. On land and on sea he is once more pursued by the predatory amphibian anxious for another morsel of "uncooked pirate," and his ratings and pratings, his whinings and pinings, are invariably in the best spirit of travesty. Mr. du Maurier had the warmest of welcomes on being recognised on Tuesday, and for Miss Pauline Chase—the latest of the Duke of York's Peter Pans—there were many cheers of encouragement, not only on her first appearance at the nursery window, but at the conclusion of every division of the story. The part is not new to her. She understudied Miss Cecilia Loftus, and played it several times in the provinces during the early part of the year. It is perhaps a less reflective rendering that Miss Chase gives us, and the joyousness of the rôle is more insisted on than in the Loftus interpretation. We miss the tender note in the incident of the hurt of Wendy from the arrow; but there is no lack of pathos later when Peter despairs of saving "the little mother." Miss Chase does not hint ever at the supernatural, but is an intensely human boy, full of frank jollity, and very graceful withal.

Miss Hilda Trevelyan is again unapproachable as Wendy—simple, childlike, lovable. An impersonation that enchants one. The author is, indeed, fortunate in lighting upon such an ideal interpreter. Mr. George Shelton is another member of the original cast, whom it does one good to hear in the part of Smee—the Job's comforter of the redoubtable Hook; Mr. Marsh Allen is easy and natural as Mr. Darling; and Miss Sybil Carlisle, of course, makes an irreproachable Mrs. Darling. Mr. E. Sillward—an animal impersonator of the first rank—is now the Nana, in succession to Mr. Arthur Lupino, and presents a very natural study of the clever and faithful dog. Master George Hersee's John Napoleon is as frank and boyish as ever; Miss Joan Burnett's Tootles and Miss Nellie Bowman's Nibbs are portraits of very great merit; Mr. A. W. Baskcomb as Slightly returns to the part with evident enjoyment, an enjoyment that he communicates to the audience; Miss Maie Ash, who succeeds to Miss Chase's original part of the first twin, is an acquisition to the cast. Miss Mary Mayfren is a picturesque Tiger Lily; Miss Gladys Herries, who looks charming as the Mermaid, sings artistically; and Liza (the author) is demurely played by Miss Dorothy Le Marchant. Other parts are more than adequately filled by Messrs. Charles Trevor, Charles Medwin, Chris Walker, James Annerley, James English, John Kelt, and Douglas Vigors. The incident of Peter's escape from the lonely rock in the lagoon is now more in harmony with everyone's love of birds. The large white bird—a fairy gull—vacates her nest, which Peter promptly utilises as a little bark to take him to safety and Wendy. Before his departure he puts the eggs carefully into one of the pirate's hats, whereon the parent bird sits quite contentedly, and sails away as the curtain falls. It is with regret that we leave Peter and Wendy in their home high on the tree tops, which "are soft as velvet." The still air "is filled with the singing of birds and the ringing of fairy bells; but the sweetest sound of all is the fluting of Peter Pan's pipe as he sits outside the little house and calls to the spring to make haste, because with the spring comes Wendy."

MISS CONSTANCE COLLIER, who is to play Cleopatra in Mr. Tree's revival at His Majesty's Theatre on Thursday next, made a magnificent appearance at the Empire on one occasion, representing the Egyptian Queen. She began stage-work in the chorus of musical comedy, but her ability was soon recognised when she took part in One Summer's Day at the Comedy in 1898, and played Lady Alexandra Pink in The Cuckoo at the Avenue in 1899. She also sustained, at a matinée, the leading female part in the late Wilson Barrett's Daughters of Babylon. Her excellent work in Mr. Tree's company, which she joined in 1901, has established her reputation as an actress of sterling ability.

THE Belfast branch of the British Empire Shakespeare Society gave a reading of The Comedy of Errors in the Ulster Medical Institute, College-square North, Belfast, recently. The various parts were admirably sustained by Miss Boas, Miss Florence MacNaughten, Miss Margery Pike, Messrs. P. Donnelly, Dr. W. Clarke Robinson, Mr. David Hanna, Mr. J. C. Lowenthal, Mr. R. Leighton, Mr. S. Bulloch, Mr. H. C. Kennedy, and Mr. C. D. Tinsley.

THE IRVING MEMORIAL.

Leaders of the profession, as well as the rank and file, assembled in large numbers at the Garrick Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, when the plans designed by the Irving Memorial Committee to perpetuate the name of the great actor were laid before a truly representative gathering, worthy of the object for which it was organised. On the stage sat eminent actors and actresses in formidable array, while the members of their calling who crowded the auditorium applauded their utterances to the echo. It was a splendid demonstration of the enduring place which the great actor occupies in the hearts of his comrades and reflected creditably on the way in which the meeting was promoted.

Mr. John Hare occupied the chair, and among his supporters were Mr. Laurence Irving, Miss Ellen Terry, Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Marion Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Lewis Waller, Mr. Edward Terry, Mr. Martin Harvey, Mr. Cecil Raleigh, Mr. Gerald Du Maurier, Mr. F. R. Benson, Mr. Harry Nicholls, Mr. Brandon Thomas, Mr. Arthur Chudleigh, Mr. Acton Bond, Mr. Aubrey Smith, Mr. Fred Kerr, Mr. S. Valentine, Mr. Hayden Coffin, and Mr. Chas. Cruikshanks (secretary).

Enthusiastic applause, which marked the whole of the proceedings, greeted Mr. Hare when he rose to open the meeting. He selected from among many telegrams one from Mme. Sara Bernhardt, which read: "Impossible come, but am with you. Accept all you and other friends and comrades decide with all my heart." M. Coquelin wired: "Join my name with the others for all that is best for the memory of Henry Irving." From Mr. Charles Frohman came the message: "My great regret that I cannot be with you to-day, and my thanks for asking me to come. I heartily sympathise with your scheme for the erection of a statue to the memory of Henry Irving, and am most eager to be permitted at this moment to subscribe £50. I am sure that the actors and actresses over the sea will be glad to express through me to you their desire to be given the privilege of participating in this great scheme, and one which they will enthusiastically support if permitted."

MR. HARE, in moving the first resolution, made a stirring speech, impressively delivered. He said, "Ladies and Gentlemen,—I feel it a very great privilege and a very great honour to have been invited to preside over so large and distinguished an assemblage of my brother and sister actors and actresses as are gathered together this afternoon. But at the same time I feel a very great responsibility is thrust upon me. I dread to say those things I ought LOT to say, to leave unsaid those things I ought to say; indeed, I fear my powers are hardly equal to the task I am undertaking, that of worthily placing before you the object of this meeting, which is to consider the best ways and means of our profession initiating from themselves a tribute to the memory of their late beloved chief, friend, and comrade, Henry Irving. I am sure it is unnecessary for me to remind you of the debt of gratitude we owe to the great manager and actor who is gone. We owe to him not only a splendid example of courage and high endeavour, but that of a long life devoted to obtaining recognition and honour for the art which he loved and to which the energies of his life were devoted. By his genius as an actor, by his consistently dignified and lofty policy as a manager, by his persistent advocacy and pleading that his profession should rank on an equality with the sister arts and professions, he won for it recognition for the first time by the State, and by the great academic bodies of the United Kingdom. Some time since there was a good deal of nonsense written and spoken about the "mantle" of Henry Irving, and speculation as to on whose shoulders it should fall. Without any disrespect to distinguished actors of the past, the present, or of the future, I may say that the "mantle" of Henry Irving was a garment woven by himself, and fitted only for his own proportions. It was composed of a mixture of power, of genius, subtlety, large-hearted charity, gentleness, and simplicity, which we can hardly hope ever again to see united in one. These were the materials of which his mantle was composed, and enveloped in its folds his body rests in the Abbey, side by side with England's greatest dead. Well might Shakespeare himself have intended the words for his epitaph when he wrote:

"His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world this was a man."

But there was one other distinctive quality in Irving to which I have made no allusion, and yet was, perhaps, his greatest—it was dignity, dignity in his work, dignity in all the actions of his life, and, above all, dignity in his tragic and pathetic death. Therefore, it specially behoves us who would honour his memory, to see that that dignity should be preserved intact, and that any steps we may take to perpetuate his memory, and show to the world the respect and love we feel for him, should be conducted with tact, good taste, and, above all, without a possibility of failure—should, in fact, be a dignified tribute to initiated by a great profession to him they honoured as its head. Now, there are many of the most important members of our body, who, sharing to the utmost the respect and affection we all feel towards the memory of Henry Irving, are opposed to the memorial scheme at first suggested, namely, that of inviting a vast public subscription with a view to raising enough money to endow a theatre to bear his name. In their opposition I fully agree, nor, indeed, should I have been in the chair this afternoon if that had been the object or purpose of this meeting. It is true nothing could be finer than such a project—in theory—no memorial so fitting to the memory of one whose greatest desire in life was to see the establishment of a National Endowed Theatre; but it is utterly impracticable. To accomplish such an object a sum of half a million sterling would be necessary, and that is impossible. Therefore we have to be content with a less ambitious scheme, but not on that account less worthy. The suggestion before you is this, and for your approval of it, and unanimous vote, I plead with all the earnestness I can command. It is that the memorial should be raised and subscribed for by the theatrical profession, and by the theatrical profession alone. That having the reasonable hope of a suitable and dignified site in the centre of London, a statue of Henry Irving should be raised as 'an affectionate tribute from the managers, actors and actresses, and dramatic authors of the United Kingdom and America. The sum of £3000 would more than cover the cost, and surely it would be a discredit to our calling, and a reflection on the affection we profess for his memory, should not such a sum be readily raised. Such a statue, subscribed for by all ranks of the profession, would mark our gratitude for the immense services he has rendered to the stage, mark our affection and respect for him as a man, and be an honourable landmark throughout the ages of our own loyalty and the dignity of our calling. Such, ladies and gentlemen, is broadly the scheme I place before you; it is a simple scheme, one comparatively easy of accomplishment; it is for you, the representatives of the theatrical profession, to say 'yes' or 'no." But unless I am greatly mistaken in my estimate of their feelings the 'ayes' will carry the day, and the proposition before you meet with your unanimous approval and support, for there can be no doubt that such a memorial would be an honour to the living as well as to the dead. And should he who has left us have knowledge of what is passing on earth, happy indeed would he be to know that though the glamour of his living presence has passed from us, his memory is, and ever will be, held in affectionate remembrance by those of his comrades who in life he loved and served so well."

It had been arranged that Mr. A. W. Pinero should second the resolution, but it was announced that under doctor's orders he was precluded from attending. In a letter which was read to the meeting Mr. Pinero expressed himself in favour of erecting a full-length portrait statue of Sir Henry in a busy part of theatreland as an actors' memorial simply.

MR. BEERBOHM TREE stepped into the breach, and seconded the resolution. He said: The absence of Mr. Pinero gives me the opportunity of seconding the proposition of Mr. Hare, which I do with all my heart. I must be very brief, for all that I had to say has been said by Mr. Hare. I did not know before this morning whether we should be in agreement, but I can say "Aye" to every statement made by Mr. Hare. We have met here to-day to do the highest honour we can to the memory of our late chief. There are those here who stood very near to Sir Henry Irving, and I think that it is their feeling that it would be a mistake to make an appeal to the general public. Surely we are strong enough in ourselves to pay this great tribute to him—one which will not detract in any way from the great and lasting honour which is paid to him who lies in Westminster Abbey. I knew Sir Henry Irving sufficiently well to say that I am sure he would have appreciated nothing in the world so highly as to be remembered by his brother and sister artists as he has been remembered to-day.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER, in supporting the resolution, said: I am sure no words of mine are needed to influence you to carry out the suggestion which has been made by Mr. Hare. We, I am sure, are entirely of one view that the actors and actresses of this country and of America are anxious to raise a monument to the memory of the late Sir Henry Irving. It may be that some actors and actresses have one idea of what that memorial should be, and other actors and actresses have other ideas. But let nothing slip through our fingers to-day in discussion. Let us carry this resolution that the memorial shall be a living thing at once, without delay, and so save any further discussion as to whether there is to be a memorial or not. All the members of Sir Henry Irving's company who are here to-day will support Mr. Hare. I earnestly beg that every actor and actress in this theatre will cry "Aye!" very loudly, and that they will not leave without coming to the table and writing their names and pledging themselves to subscribe to this memorial.

Before putting the resolution, the chairman invited alternative schemes from those present, whereupon MISS ELLEN TERRY, whose rising was greeted with loud and continued cheers, said: Ladies and gentlemen, my sisters and brothers, I must beg you in the first place not to look upon me as an obstructionist. I am not an obstructionist. On the contrary, I think it is lovely of you to want to make this memorial an expression of the loving remembrance in which all actors must hold the name of Sir Henry Irving. I oppose such a scheme? No! But if a rich donor, or the public, came and said, "I will help you," you would not surely refuse that favour? You would not surely refuse to allow this memorial to be made a bigger and a finer thing than it is in our power to make it, with all the goodwill in the world? It seems to me that this is not a case in which we can fold our hands meekly and say:

"Never anything can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it."

No, it seems to me rather:

"Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!"

The thing to consider in raising a memorial to such a man is the best means to secure the greatest end. With this motive and this alone I ask the meeting to approve a scheme which includes the co-operation of the public, and consider its amalgamation with the scheme which has already been submitted. The details will be explained by my seconder.

MR. F. R. BENSON seconded Miss Terry's proposition. He was sure, from the way in which Miss Terry's remarks were received, that they were all agreed that no one had a greater right to propose a scheme than Miss Terry. That right was hers in virtue of her position as an artist and a colleague of their late beloved chief, a sharer in some of the greatest of his triumphs. He could not too strongly lay stress on the fact that Miss Terry's scheme was in no way in opposition to the one put before them. Miss Terry wished to consult them as to her scheme, and desired to know whether or not it was possible to amalgamate it with that of the committee, with whose efforts she was in entire accord and to whose proposal she was anxious to subscribe. There was one word, and only one word, in the eloquent address from the chairman with which, in all humility, he differed, and that was when he a little under-estimated the enormous hold which their late chief had on the public mind. He agreed, and everyone there agreed, with Miss Terry that a statue erected by actors to one of the greatest of actors was an altogether admirable project, but did the adoption of such an undertaking altogether preclude an effort, in which actors should take a leading part, in erecting a national memorial to a national genius? When they had heard Miss Terry's scheme in detail, and learned the result of Miss Terry's efforts during two weeks, they would agree that the chairman had under-rated the willingness of the public to take part in a national memorial to their late chief. He would ask them to remember that Irving's greatness consisted as well in those qualities put before them by Mr. Hare as to that boast of Irving that he was the servant of the public. Irving was great enough to know that the secret of his power was the excellence of his service. "Let him who would be chief among you be your minister." Miss Terry and her supporters had evidence that there were many of the public connected with Irving's work who would feel a little hurt if they were not allowed to share in this effort to perpetuate his memory and to honour the mighty dead. There were many, of course, with whom Miss Terry would wish to co-operate, but she had not done so because she wished to avoid the least semblance of antagonism to the noble scheme of an actors' memorial. Miss Terry wished to ask them that day to consider whether it was possible to amalgamate the two schemes, and empower the committee to consider the question. She came before them with definite promises of £3000 and a list thoroughly representative of the greatest living public men in the land, among them the recent Prime Minister, the Bishops of London and Ripon, and many members of the present Cabinet. Miss Terry's scheme, towards the successful realisation of which considerable progress had already been made, so that Miss Terry and her friends had no fear of falling short of the high standard set before them by Mr. Hare, consisted of an effort to erect what, for want of a better term, might be called a museum—something on the lines of the Stratford Memorial Gallery. That museum would contain a gallery, which might serve also as a kind of Pantheon—pictures and statues of eminent artists whose work was connected with the stage, a library of dramatic literature, MSS. of illustrious authors, and mementoes of great actors. In this way they would serve to keep before them the high standard Henry Irving reached; it would help to make it easier for the young to attain to that high standard, and it would also serve to confer that recognition of the stage for which Sir Henry Irving always longed.

At the request of the meeting Mr. Lewis Waller read a list of the names of many distinguished persons who had promised support to Miss Terry's proposal, after which Mr. Benson begged leave to withdraw the amendment, as Miss Terry's purpose had been served by putting her scheme before the meeting. She would support the committee's project in a whole-hearted manner, but would continue with her own scheme, and hoped that it would be regarded as an auxiliary.

MR. CECIL RALEIGH said it gave him the greatest satisfaction to urge the adoption of the memorial as suggested by the committee. He could only re-echo what Mr. Alexander had said. Let them be unanimous in doing one thing, and let them do it well. The committee had before them various proposals, formal and informal. Some might be called "wild-cat" schemes, and some might have emanated from more strenuous and more docile quadrupeds. There was no site too good for a statue of Sir Henry Irving, and anything they did would receive favourable consideration from every public body. He felt that the memorial should come from the profession, and if the public would like to do something else, let them do so, but let them (the actors) do their little job by themselves. He asked them to vote for the statue with one unanimous voice, and do something worthy of so great an actor.

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM, who had a most cordial reception, said,—If there should be any dissentient voice I would like just to call to your mind the fact that any honour that Henry Irving achieved in life, any honour that has come to him in death, accrues to the profession he so much adorned. For us to hold out our hats to the public for our own glorification would be a serious mistake. We have to deal with a great memory which, like most memories, is surrounded with dignity, and our endeavour should be to keep that memory clear and sustain that dignity.

The announcement that Mr. Laurence Irving would speak aroused a hearty cheer. MR. IRVING said: My brother, as you know, is unfortunately in America, or it would have devolved upon him to speak for me. Since you wish to hear one of us say something, I must try and say a few words on his behalf, and I think I can very fairly assume to do so. I know very well that, apart from its intrinsic merits, my brother would have been in accordance with any scheme that had been brought forward and so eloquently urged as Mr. Hare's project. Mr. Hare was one of my father's most trusted friends. He spent the greater part of his last summer with Mr. Hare, who is an actor that we all look up to and a man whom we all respect. I know that were my brother here he would feel the same pride that I now feel in seeing this gathering of all who are most famous on the stage—Mr. Hare, Miss Terry, and all his great brother and sister artists—and I know that he would feel, as I do, that this was a very noble tribute to the memory of our father. No tribute to his memory would be so vivid, so inspiring, and so enduring as a statue. It seems to me that what we want to see are his features—those features that have given us all encouragement, helped us to persevere, stirred in us all emotions deep and noble, and sometimes administered salutary chiding. I think that what we wish to see is a statue set up in a public place for all men to gaze on amidst the noise and tumult of the streets, so that we may remember, as his example showed us, that there is in our profession an ideal above high salaries, above paragraphs, and above all small aims. My father suffered every hardship and every disappointment of an actor's life, as Sir Charles Wyndham no doubt could affirm. Few suffered more cruelly or more harshly; but I think I may say he attained to a position such as no other actor has reached. I think that one can see all that if one will look in his face. Therefore may I say, not as his son, but as an actor, let us see Irving's face and figure. It does not matter whether it is in bronze or marble; let us see him as he was, he who epitomised in himself all that is noblest in the art that we all, in however humble a way, are striving to serve.

The chairman then put the resolution, the terms of which were as follows: "That a statue should be erected by members of the dramatic profession as an affectionate tribute in memory of our late chief and friend, Sir Henry Irving, and that the statue should be subscribed for by the managers, actors, and actresses, and dramatic authors of the United Kingdom and America who are anxious to join in this scheme."

The resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. Gerald Du Maurier proposed and Mr. Lewis Waller seconded that Messrs. Cyril Maude, Cecil Raleigh, Acton Bond, and Lewis Casson be re-elected on the committee, and that Messrs. John Hare, H. Beerbohm Tree, George Alexander, Forbes Robertson, Martin Harvey, and Alfred Kendrick, with Mr. Charles Cruikshanks as secretary, be elected in addition. The proposition was agreed to nem. con.

Mr. Alexander,—I propose that one name, which I am sure will be received with acclamation, be added, and that is the name of Miss Ellen Terry. It must be apparent to you that Miss Terry's intentions to-day were solely directed in the channel of adding, if possible, greater lustre to our dear dead friend, and I am sure her efforts ought to be—and will be—supported with still greater enthusiasm by the public when they learn what the actors are going to do.

The proposal was seconded by Mr. Cecil Raleigh, and enthusiastically adopted.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Hare for presiding and to Mr. Arthur Bourchier for the loan of the theatre, proposed by Mr. Cyril Maude and seconded by Mr. George Alexander, was passed by acclamation.

Before leaving the theatre every person present was invited to sign his or her name in support of the movement, and the suggestion was carried out apparently without exception.

THE IRVING MEMORIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—It was not without a sense of keen regret and deep disappointment that I learnt that the decision arrived at as the result of yesterday's meeting at the Garrick Theatre re the Irving Memorial was to the effect that a statue should be erected, at a cost of £3000, to perpetuate Sir Henry's memory. May I be allowed to express the opinion that the late Sir Henry Irving would have much preferred his memory to be perpetuated in some more practical way—by some scheme which might benefit those who were so dear to him, his brother actors; a scheme which might assist an actor when out of work, and when in work encourage him to be provident. The idea I have in my mind as I pen these lines is this: that the sum mentioned of £3000, together with the Actors' Day Fund, would have formed an excellent basis upon which to have started a Provident Fund, with an entrance-fee of 2s. 6d. and a weekly subscription of, say, 6d. A membership of 4000 would mean £500 more from the entrance-fees, and £100 per week in the way of weekly subscriptions. Two shillings and sixpence at joining and 6d. a week is not a great tax upon the resources of the actor; and yet imagine the amount of good that could be done with this money. In the event of a member of the Fund dying, so much would be paid—for argument's sake, £20 or £25—to his widow or next-of-kin; in case of illness or accident, so much per week or so much down, as might be arranged hereafter. In the case of the unemployed, I believe it would be quite possible to make some arrangement. These would not be acts of charity, but every member would be entitled to same. Such a scheme is being carried out by our brothers and sisters in the other branch of the profession; why should we not do the same?—Yours faithfully, ARTHUR RAWTREE.

FIFTY YEARS OF THE DRAMA. 1850—1900.

(COPYRIGHT.)

In these columns it is proposed to give a strictly alphabetical arrangement of the titles of plays produced during the last fifty years. It will be the most complete list ever published, and should prove invaluable to authors desiring to discover whether a certain title has ever been used, and when. To members of the dramatic profession it will be useful in determining the dates of plays in which they have achieved successes. Our readers are politely requested to advise us of any omission or inaccuracy which they may notice.

This list as soon as complete will be published in cheap book form.

MR. J. H. TOMKINSON, proprietor of the Royal Gipsy Companies, was married on Thursday, Dec. 13, to Miss Lizzie Fernandez, of the Lizette Troupe of lady acrobats. The ceremony took place at St. Mary's Church, Edge Hill, Liverpool, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives of the bride and bridegroom. The bride was the recipient of many presents. The guests were entertained at the house of the bride's parents, 36, Albany-road, Kensington, Liverpool. His artists presented Mr. Tomkinson with a handsome gold watch and the bride with a case of cutlery. The presentation was made by Mr. Fred McLean, who spoke of the amicable relations which had always existed between Mr. Tomkinson and his company. Mr. Tomkinson, in reply, expressed the keen pleasure he felt in accepting such handsome tokens of appreciation and good wishes for himself and wife.

A WORLD-WIDE reputation is enjoyed by Raphael Tuck and Sons, who have this year surpassed themselves in the excellence and extent of their novelties. A peep into their extensive catalogue reveals a wealth of variety in toys, book, date calendars, and Christmas and New Year cards. A prominent place is given to several series of coloured mechanical animals, domestic and otherwise—all the species from rabbit to rhinoceros being included. They are made in an original manner (duly patented), which enables the animal to stand on all four legs, in every possible position, the joints moving in a natural manner, and securing a thoroughly lifelike attitude. On the back of each model is an instructive description of the animal. Toy books of all descriptions are contained in the collection, and for gift-books and calendars no better choice could be wished. The Christmas and New Year cards are exceedingly tasteful, the expanding flower, the oilette parchment, and the modern art series being particularly charming. It may truly be said that from Raphael House this Christmas has issued its most exquisite productions.

WE regret to announce that Mr. Charles Webb, an actor and scenic artist with Messrs. Beale and Davis's company, has died suddenly at Swadlincote. He had a seizure from which he never recovered, passing away some hours later in the Burton-on-Trent Infirmary.

THE latest quotations of music hall shares are as follow:—Alhambra, 1⅛; Canterbury, ⅜; Drury Lane, 11-16; Empire (15s. pd), 1; ditto, (10s. pd), ⅞; Gaiety, 1; London Pavilion Ord., 4½; ditto Pref, 5; London Coliseum, ⅛; Metropolitan, ⅜; Moss Empire, 5; ditto, 5 p.c. Pref., 3⅞; Oxford, 6⅜; Palace, 19-32; Tivoli, 6⅜; Var. Cons. Theatres, 13s.

THE many friends of Mr. Isidore Witmark and his brothers will be grieved to learn of the death of their mother in New York on Friday, Dec. 14.

MISS RACHEL LOWE, who is not appearing in pantomime this Christmas, will spend the holidays at her London home, and then fulfil an engagement in Paris, where she is producing a great novelty.

MESSRS. HARRINGTON AND TATE have in hand a new musical comedietta of a most novel character, for Mr. Alec Hurley, which the coster king purposes producing at a very early date. His "Coster's Beano," by the first-named gentleman and the late George Le Brunn, is still going strong and well, and will do yeoman service for Mr. Hurley for many a long day to come yet.

THE Leslie Brothers are spending their Christmas and New Year at the Scala Theatre, Antwerp, after just finishing a most successful engagement on the Moss and Stoll tours.

MISS MILLIE LINDON, we regret to hear, is very indisposed, and will be unable to appear at the opening of the pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, where she is engaged as principal boy.

MISS DOT STEPHENS' SAD CASE.

We have received a cheque for £1 12s., per the Referee, from Mrs. de Courcy Laffan, as a contribution to the fund being raised for the benefit of Miss Dot Stephens, who was so grievously injured in a railway accident last June. The cheque is the result of the sale of Mrs. de Courcy Laffan's "In Memoriam" poem to the late Sir Henry Irving.

A CONTRADICTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—Through an error on my part your last week's Variety Gossip announced that in my forthcoming reproduction of Muir and Bartlett's A Clerical Complication I should be assisted by Miss Clare Nicholls. This lady is fully engaged for some time to come, and I have secured the services of another equally well-known West End comedienne.—Yours faithfully,

VERNON WILLOX CADOGAN.
(Cadogan and Wingrove.)

MISS GWENNIE HASTO has scored a great success at the King's Theatre, Edinburgh, with the pretty song, "In the shadow of the Pyramid." "Moon dear" and "Will you love me in December as you do in May?" are pronounced successes at all the theatres in Glasgow.

"QUEEN OF OLD SAMARA," the successful song written and composed by J. F. Lambe, was first introduced at the Tivoli, Manchester, by Miss Lilian Doreen on Sept. 17 last, and afterwards featured in London by the same artist and by Miss Alice Lloyd. It was disposed of to publishers on May 25, 1906.

MR. HERBERT SHELLEY has been engaged by Sir Edward Moss and Mr. Oswald Stoll to present his protean Gaelic play, Dan the Outlaw, on their circuit in 1907. A starring tour offered by Mr. Thomas Barrasford has had to be reluctantly refused.

MESSRS. RAPO AND ELLA, equilibrists, through their success, have been engaged by Mr. Alfred Butt, for the Palace Theatre, and have placed their bookings in the hands of Fred Neiman and Co., 108, Strand.

THE members of the Canonbury Club held their first "smoker" and supper of the season on Saturday night, at ancient Canonbury Tower, under the genial presidency of Mr. Councillor Davis, chairman of the club, and Mr. Councillor Andrew-Marshall was the vice-chairman. An excellent entertainment followed the supper, many of the items being supplied by a concert party under the able direction of Mr. Ronald Bagnall, a clever, high-class comedian, who, seated at the piano, gave, in admirable style, some capital songs, including "The happy garden," "The street music pirate," and "A musical story." Mr. Robert Stokes, a fine baritone, sang "Nirvana," "The Yeoman's Wedding," and "Drinking" with good effect. Mr. Fred Edwards scored as a comic singer, his amusing contributions including "The patchwork garden" and "It must have been the lobster." Mr. Charles Gellett recited Kipling's "The Ballad of East and West," followed by Mr. Frank Desprez's thrilling poem, "Laska," and to both these selections this admirable elocutionist did full justice. Mr. Rex Kempton, an old favourite at these functions, was again well to the front with his humorous ditties, which, of course, included "He was a married man," a warning to all bachelors, given in his best style. Valuable services were rendered by Mr. Lovett King as accompanist and Mr. Will Clinch as stage manager.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An interesting orchestral concert, and one that reflected the greatest credit on the training staff of the Tenterden-street institution, was given at Queen's Hall on the afternoon of the 14th inst., under the conductorship of Sir Alexander Mackenzie. Two new works by students were produced, the first being a Symphonic Scherzo in G for orchestra by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, which proved bright, attractive, and original, melodious in style, and containing much clever writing for the orchestra, both wind and string. In answer to the warm applause with which the work was greeted Sir Alexander Mackenzie stated that the young composer was not in the hall, being unfortunately indisposed, but he would convey to him their expressions of approval. The other new work heard was "Songs of Love and War," written by Mr. Hubert Bath, and cleverly sung by Mr. David Evans. The first of the two songs was entitled "Longing," a musical setting of a poem by Matthew Arnold; and the other, and by far the more striking, a "Viking's War Song," a composition ably scored for the orchestra and full of martial spirit. The young composer was recalled to the platform amidst loud applause. Mr. Sydney Rosenbloom gave a brilliant performance on the solo instrument in Saint-Saëns' delightful Scherzo and Finale from "Concerto in G Minor" for piano and orchestra; and Miss Juliet Capron displayed great ability in her violin solo, "Concerto in D," by Paganini, the difficult cadenza being played with much technical skill. In Boëllmann's beautiful "Variations Symphoniques" for violoncello Mr. John Mundy produced a rich and expressive tone, and the orchestral parts were also admirably rendered. Included in the programme were Sir A. C. Mackenzie's genial "Scottish" Pianoforte Concerto, cleverly interpreted by Miss Dorothy Grinstead and the orchestra; and Coleridge-Taylor's "Symphonic Variations on an African Air" for orchestra. In the vocal portion of the concert Miss Grace Hazelhurst was heartily greeted for her song "Fair spring is returning," from Saint-Saëns' Samson and Delilah; and Miss Aileen Hodgson was fairly successful in Verdi's aria "Ah fors è lui" (La Traviata).

MR. THOMAS HARRIS, the energetic and go-ahead manager of the Chemical Cleaning Co., has just published a handsome card calendar with a pair of beautiful tableau curtains in relief on the front of the card. All customers should immediately write in for one of these useful reminders.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL.—Theatre Royal, Worcester, Dec. 18, '06. Dear Mr. Harris,—My white satin dress arrived quite safely yesterday, and in good time for the evening performance, and really looks beautiful. Many thanks for the promptitude with which you executed my order, and also the excellence of the work.—Believe me to remain, very faithfully yours, BEATRICE SHIRLEY. T. Harris, Esq., Chemical Cleaning and Dyeing Co., 6, Argyll street, W.—ADVT.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER,
BY

COPYRIGHT AS OPPOSED TO PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.
Chapter V.
INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. A. A. Strong has published a book on "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," which should be in the hands of everyone who is obliged to know about this perplexing subject. Dramatic copyright in England is in a particularly unsatisfactory state, and it is much to be hoped that ere long some more rational method of securing protection for a play may be devised than the slovenly and sometimes costly "production for copyright purposes," which is at present required.—St. James's Gazette.

Copyright confusion is, like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his text-book on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" Office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases, what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.

SHAKESPEARE AND CHRISTMAS.

Threatened men, it used to be said, live long; and established institutions can stand a great amount of attack. Indeed, as ridicule is the test of truth, so criticism, if ineffective, is the best proof of merit. There are fashions in these things; and, of late, the practice of belittling SHAKESPEARE has been much in vogue. As a reaction against the blind adoration which accepts all the Bard's work as sacred and perfect, and will not hear of even reasonable detraction from the reputation of his plays, these symptoms cannot be regarded as unhealthy. SHAKESPEARE'S work is so strong that we can afford to admit imperfections. It is only when a critic claims the right to give his opinions as obiter dicta that we are entitled to ask for credentials. These certainly were not possessed by Dr. JOHNSON, the first severe commentator on the plays. JOHNSON obviously did not know a good play when he read one, or he would have put the MS. of Irene where the much-occupied author was advised to put his productions. JOHNSON could never be said to have seen a drama owing to his imperfect vision, and this spoilt all his playgoing. So he was out of court as an estimator of an acting play. His prefaces to the different dramas can only be described as elephantine; but they were evidently conscientious, and never what he described VOLTAIRE'S remarks on the same subject as being, viz., "the petty cavils of a petty mind." It is impossible to argue with the shade of JOHNSON, and not very easy to do so, in the space at our disposal, with Mr. BERNARD SHAW. Mr. SHAW'S line of attack is a characteristic mixture of shallowness and acuteness. He misapprehends the purport of a play, and then finds fault with it on the grounds of his own misinterpretation. For instance, in belittling Antony and Cleopatra—in the interest of his Cæsar and Cleopatra—he takes the superficial view that Antony's defeat was due to his being "broken down by debauchery." But, Cleopatra or no Cleopatra, Antony was doomed from the moment that he became the "competitor" of Octavius. PLUTARCH refers to Antony's infatuation for Cleopatra as only the "last and extremest mischief" of his waning career. The soldierly breadth of Antony's character, his magnanimity, and his capacity for human affection, placed him at absolute disadvantage with respect to the specious, calculating, cool, and cunning Octavius, who afterwards, under the title of Augustus, kept the smug face of a good citizen while he absorbed into himself the last vestiges of Roman republicanism. Antony had no more chance against Octavius than DANTON had against ROBESPIERRE.

It is the consciousness that he is overmatched that weighs upon Antony, and, at each attempt of his at reform, drives him back to the compensations of sexual passion (see Act ii., Scene iii., of Antony and Cleopatra). With similar obliquity of vision Mr. SHAW infers that the latter speeches of the pair are attempts on the part of the author to "persuade foolish spectators that the world was well lost" by them; whereas the speeches are what SHAKESPEARE felt the personages would have said in the circumstances. "SHAKESPEARE'S Cæsar," says Mr. SHAW, "is an admitted failure." It costs little to make such a statement, but it is worth just as little when made. If SHAKESPEARE'S Cæsar was a "failure," so was PLUTARCH'S, on which it is practically based. For the purposes of the play, and with the limits of its boundaries, the Cæsar of Julius Cæsar could not be bettered. At all events, we should like to see Mr. SHAW or anybody else exhibit the power of re-writing the character so as to improve the drama.

It is cheering to find that the anti-SHAKESPEAREANS cancel one another completely. TOLSTOY recently devoted a long article in a monthly review to an elaborate attack on King Lear. He could see no good in the play, which he turned into bitter ridicule. Mr. SHAW—perhaps because he has never written a piece around the old British King—says, "No man will ever write a better tragedy than King Lear. . . . SHAKESPEARE'S Lear is a masterpiece." We may well leave Mr. SHAW and the Russian essayist to settle their differences. SHAKESPEARE'S plays will outlive many generations of such critics, because the dramas deal with passions and instincts that are eternal, however they may be masked by superficial and transient appearances.

And it is the same with the institution of Christmas. As everybody knows, the religious festival replaced a primitive festivity connected with the changes of the seasons. If Yuletide were to be abolished we should miss the old institution very much. The instinct of general congratulation that the shortest day is over, and that we have the Spring to look forward to; the convenient excuse for the expression of feelings which our reticent race usually conceals; the opportunity for the gathering together of families under the influence of good cheer, and the strong restraint of charitable custom—all these things make Christmas indispensable, permanent, and very valuable. We, at any rate, welcome the chance of expressing our gratitude for the general appreciation of our efforts in support of the interests of every branch of the profession of amusement. Actors, music-hall artists, and showmen share our solicitude, and reward our attention by making The Era more prosperous annually. Year after year shows an increase both in our editorial matter and in our advertisements; year after year we have the same story to tell of mutual satisfaction and goodwill. And so it is that, once again, from the bottom of our hearts, we wish our readers

NEW MUSIC.

"Cupid's Motor Car" is written by Mr. Percy Greenbank and composed by Miss Carlotta Rowe. Messrs. Metzler and Co. are the publishers, and being a fanciful idea, and lively in its character, "Cupid's Motor Car" stands a very good chance of winning popularity. All that is needed to secure public favour is for a genial vocalist to take it up and sing it at one of our principal music halls, or it will possibly find its way into one of the pantomimes, when it would not fail to be welcomed by a Christmas audience. It would not be a bad idea for a motor car of Cupid's pattern to cross the stage with a couple of lovers inside, and the author assures us "lovers in Cupid's Car never fall out."

THE Post Office London Directory for 1907 contains no new features, but every division of the volume has been corrected down to the latest date, compatible with its appearance about the middle of the present month. The excellence of the method adopted in the arrangement of the contents of this massive work is one of the distinguishing features of a publication which should, above all things, be easy of reference. Any person of the most ordinary intelligence can expeditiously find the information he requires in this volume, as the classification of the streets, both central and suburban, and the various professions and trades, is so simple and yet so comprehensive. The scope of this really wonderful publication is perhaps best illustrated by the bare statement that the street directory (pages 181 to 866) contains the principal streets in London, with a selection of the inhabitants, whether in business or not, at their respective houses, with the terminals of each street and the intersection of other streets marked. This portion of the work, it is pointed out, besides the more obvious uses, serves occasionally to recall the name of a person which has escaped the memory, but whose residence is recollected, and also to assist in the deciphering of illegible signatures, often a difficult task, as many people have discovered from experience. The present is the 108th edition of this monarch of reference publications; and the claim that is made in the brief preface to accuracy, comprehensiveness, and genera ultility is fully borne out by a careful examination of the multitudinous contents. It may be added that the accompanying map of London is quite up to date.

M. WITMARK AND SONS, the popular American publishers, have again been fortunate in "striking lucky" with their pantomime numbers. The pantomimes produced in Scotland usually give the key-note for the song successes of the year, and the gems from the Witmark catalogue again shine refulgent.

BILL SIMMONDS in "I've got to dance till the band gets through" simply delighted the audiences at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh. Miss Fannie Fields will make an especial feature of this song at the Court Theatre, Liverpool. "In Dreamland" will be given a special production at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, and will be heard in every principal pantomime.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, DEC. 20.—The event of the week has been the opening of the Théâtre Réjane. Visitors to Paris who have been to the Casino de Paris will be amazed when they see the transformation the place has undergone. From the Rue Blanche we get into a spacious hall, whence a flight of stairs leads to the lounge, where a Tsigane band, hidden behind a mass of plants, plays the latest waltzes, with apparent instructions not to make more noise than strictly necessary. In fact, a discreet tone reigns everywhere: in the neutral tints of the draperies, in the decorations, in the colour of the coverings, in the huge curtain, &c. The tone is even a little too discreet, imparting a rather cold look to the ensemble; and we cannot help noticing that the subtle, graceful ornamentation is not in proportion to the vast dimensions of the place. For all that, the Théâtre Réjane is a treat to the eye, and does credit to the taste of the gifted artist.

As regards La Savelli, the work produced there, founded on a novel by Augustin Thierry, we cannot see what tempted M. Max Maurey to write the play, nor what induced Mme. Réjane to accept it. Both, possibly, were attracted by the crinolines, the décolleté, the scepticism of that frivolous period the Second Empire. They no doubt thought that the conspiracy of the carbonari formed a fitting sombre background to the light scenes that followed; and if the piece had been acted rapidly, without interruption, a greater effect certainly would have been produced. Unfortunately the long entr'actes prevented this. During the intervals we walked along the spacious lobbies, listened to the before-mentioned band, and—forgot all about the plot. Yet the story is not uninteresting. In London, at the house of the restaurant-keeper Ardiotti, the carbonari meet, and decide to assassinate Napoleon III., the oppressor of liberty. Prince Carpena, a man of about sixty, is the head of the party. It is he who directs all their movements, and, with his money, assists those who, like him, have been compelled to take refuge in England. But all their attempts have failed. Orsini, the bomb-thrower, did not succeed, and the police in Paris arrest all suspected persons. The carbonari are losing heart, when they receive aid from an unexpected quarter. La Savelli, a courtesan—a lovely woman—offers her services. She is the daughter of an Italian professor, who, having taken part in the Marseilles riots, was sentenced to death by a tribunal presided over by the judge Besnard. La Savelli now wants to avenge her father's death. The Prince does not hesitate a minute. He marries La Savelli, and returns to Paris, pretending to accept the existing régime. He and his wife attend the Tuileries balls, where the latter charms everybody by her beauty. And she is particularly attentive to a young diplomat, Marcel Besnard, the son of the terrible judge, for she will also be avenged on him. To the Prince's delight, the Emperor, too, is drawn towards La Savelli, and it now will be easy to manage a rendezvous between the woman and the Emperor and then murder him. But "l'homme propose et la femme dispose!" La Savelli loses her heart to Marcel Besnard, and does not want to trouble herself about politics.

The author has not sufficiently taken advantage of La Savelli's change of attitude, for our interest in the story now begins to flag. The Prince threatens his wife that unless she forgets Marcel he will kill her. Not that he is jealous; but he is afraid that this foolish love affair may interfere with his plans. In order not to jeopardise her lover's life, La Savelli promises everything, and even consents to grant the Emperor a secret meeting. Nothing would have been easier for the conspirators than to rush into the room and strike their defenceless victim. Instead of this they inform Marcel that his ex-mistress has a lover; and they give him the key of the apartment where he will find his rival. Marcel surprises their tête-a-tête, and fires, without knowing it is the Emperor. He is at once arrested, and La Savelli, mad with rage, calls out: "The scoundrels! They have sent Marcel!" Called upon to explain these imprudent words, she at first hesitates for fear of compromising her husband; but when she learns that Marcel has committed suicide she reveals the whole of the carbonari plot. The Prince seizes her by the throat and strangles her; but as he declares that his wife told lies, and that he killed her to avenge his honour, he is not arrested as a conspirator; and, to avoid a public scandal, the authorities do not prosecute him for murder, but send him out of the country. It is the unsatisfactory ending to an unsatisfactory play. But the worst feature in it is that Mme. Réjane does not have a rôle worthy of her. A second-rate actress could have impersonated La Savelli. Mme. Réjane excels in passionate love scenes. The author had splendid opportunities, yet he idd not avail himself of them.

But if the play is defective, the mounting is really superb and worthy of a visit to the new playhouse. La Savelli was also very well acted. M. Tarride gave a masterly impersonation of the revengeful Prince. Cold and cruel, he rendered that rôle to perfection. Mme. Daynes-Grassot, always shriekingly funny, imparted the amusing note to the work. She was ably assisted by M. Noiseux, who, as the Emperor's love's messenger and charade writer, roused much laughter. In the dumb part of the Emperor, M. Burguet scored much success; and as Mme. Durand, who feels herself somewhat out of place at the Tuileries soirée, Mlle. Lantelme was inimitable. The scenery is magnificent; the toilettes are gorgeous; there are dozens of pretty women. It, therefore, is probable that for a long time to come people will flock to the Réjane Theatre.

The dress rehearsal of La Savelli was marked by an unpleasant incident. A Mlle. Astral obtained an order from the Court to take possession of the original MS. because, as she said, she had already collaborated with M. Thierry at a dramatisation of his novel, and he was bound under contract to produce it under their joint signatures. She asserts that the adaptation signed by M. Maurey is in every respect similar to her work, which has been successfully produced in Italy. M. Thierry asserts that it is in every respect "dissimilar." Who is right? It will be a question for the tribunal to decide, unless, what is more likely, the great Authors' Society takes the mater in hand, and renders one of those judgments from which common sense is generally excluded.

MR. FREDERICK MOUILLOT'S tour of the pantomime Dick Whittington will start at the Grand Theatre, Southampton, on Boxing Day. Mr. Guyton Heath is general-manager, and Mr. E. E. Cutler acting-manager.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BERLIN, THURSDAY, DEC. 20.—This delightful little work came in the light of an absolute novelty to most of its hearers, and the thanks of the public are due to Herr Gregor for producing it. The music cannot be compared to that of Hoffmann's Erzählungen, nor to that of some other of Offenbach's works, while the book is not by any means original; but it is just the kind of piece for the holidays, and will probably have a lengthy run. To describe the plot would certainly be a superfluous task. The story of the man from the country who shakes a loose leg in the metropolis, and that of the would-be Don Juan who falls into the trap he has laid, are familiar to us all. As to the interpretation, it came very short of the high standard Director Gregor has set himself, and to which we have grown accustomed at this theatre. It was the poorest singing heard as yet at the Komische Oper, the whole performance conveying the impression that too few rehearsals had taken place. The mounting, on the other hand, was magnificent, scene after scene disclosing fresh beauties of colour and harmony. Professor Lefler was responsible for the effective pictures.

The Komische Oper, by the way, in its entirety, goes over to London the middle of April for a season of two months' duration at the Adelphi. In the company and orchestra there are nearly 150 persons. Hoffmann's Erzählungen—which has enjoyed such a long spell of popularity here—will be the chief work given, and will be played by the original cast and orchestra. Herr Gregor, as a matter of course, accompanies his company.

THE Royal Opera is still eagerly bent on finding successors to Miss Farrar and Fräulein Destinn, and "guests" are continually making their bow to the public. Die Meistersinger was put in the bill on Monday, Fräulein Irma Koboth, of Munich, singing the rôle of Eva. Her voice is sweet and well trained, but quite inadequate to the demands of our exacting Opera House. Herr Bischof, of Hanover, sang the part of Hans Sachs very finely, being frequently applauded by open stage. The rest of the cast was good, and Herr Blech conducted splendidly.

BEING holiday-time, the characteristic German fairy play is much in evidence, almost every theatre of importance being furnished with one for Saturday, Sunday, and Wednesday afternoons. These plays are not pantomimes, as understood in the English sense, although they frequently have a well-known nursery tale for their theme. They are rather poetic than comic, and may be enjoyed by children and adults alike; while, needless to say, the huge Christmas tree—which appeals to every German heart as the hall-mark of Yuletide—is accorded a conspicuous place in the apotheosis. Neither is the singing of that most beautiful Christmas carol, "Stille nacht, heilige nacht," ever omitted, the audience usually joining in the singing. Thus at the Central Snow White and Rose Red is running; at the Thalia Hansel and Gretel (not by Humperdinck) and Red Riding Hood, and at the New Schauspielhaus Cinderella, are being given. The last-mentioned, by C. A. Goerner, is admirably acted and staged, the name-part being most charmingly played by Fräulein Käthe Ehren. A particularly pretty ballet at the King's Palace takes place, and the incidental music is pleasing and appropriate.

AT the Theatre des Westens a musical Christmas play, by Herren Adolf Philipp and Cossmann, entitled Kindertreue und Weihnachtssegen is drawing well, and thoroughly merits its success. The two little heroes set out to find their father and bring him home for Christmas, he having been supposed to be the victim of an earthquake while following his calling of a miner. The children—brother and sister—are quite sure "vaterchen" is alive, and that they will find him, and their loving trust is of course rewarded. They go through exciting adventures, but Rupprecht—a version of Santa Claus—befriends them, as he does all good German youngsters. At length they come to the kingdom of the Monarch of the Mountains, Presarus, who is detaining the poor miner a prisoner. The brave children, aided by Rupprecht, succeed in freeing their father, and all ends—as may be anticipated—very happily. The pretty nonsense is set to equally pretty music; the cast is unusually good.

A VERY superior fairy play is Gänseliesel, in five tableaux, by Rosa Dodillet, which is attracting large audiences of children and "grown-ups" at the Lustspielhaus. It is full of refined fun, and a thread of genuine poetry runs through the whole. This, too, is the story of two children—boys, who go out into the world to seek their fortune. In the wood they meet a good fairy, who gives them the means of setting the Princess—transformed into a goose-girl—at liberty. After vanquishing many enemies, including wild beasts, wicked little imps, and even the forest witch herself, they find the beautiful Princess tending the geese, and bring her safely back to her Royal father. Laden with treasures, the heroes return to their cottage, where mother and sister welcome them with joy. Curious to say, it is just Christmas Eve, so that the rejoicings all fit in beautifully. The author has excelled herself this time in writing an ideal children's play; Herr Neumann has supplied bright and fanciful music, and both acting and mounting are excellent. Fräulein Dodillet was called before the curtain and very cordially applauded.

THE Luisen Theatre—always enterprising—has produced Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing, with the most favourable results. The interpretation was worthy of unstinted commendation, the rôles of Beatrice and Benedick being specially well portrayed by Fräulein Allano and Herr Kiedaisch.

FRAULEIN TRIESCH—who has just returned from a successful tour in the provinces—is again playing Hedda Gabler at the Lessing. One evening last week the famous actress gave one of her highly original readings and recitations at the Bechstein Hall. The items were, as usual, excerpts from the Old Testament, which, delivered with great expression in Fräulein Triesch's beautiful voice, held the audience enthralled.

HERR HEINRICH VON POSCHINGER, the so-called Homer of Bismarck, has just completed a three-act drama, entitled Fesseln (fetters), which will be produced here before long.

TO-MORROW evening the Neues produces a new play by Herr Misch. The title is Kinder. This evening a new piece, Ringelspiel, is to see the light for the first time at the Deutsches; and yet another novelty is announced for Saturday at the New Schauspielhaus.

MR. HERBERT RULE, comedian, is the latest to join the ranks of the Terriers' Association. He was initiated on Sunday last, Terrier Tom Burnett being in the chair.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

THE spirit of conciliation has settled down on the variety world; strife is silenced; Christmas dawns on a cordial understanding between artist and proprietor; and the bond of peace has been signed. In true unity and concord will they therefore welcome the festival of Santa Claus, and forget entirely for the nonce another clause that has been less eloquent of good feeling. That a spirit of complete amity prevails is indeed glad tidings, and none rejoices thereat more than The Era, which has represented for forty years both artist and caterer. Entente cordiale should be the only motto of each, as the interests of one are inextricably bound up with the other. To both, in all parts of the world, we send our heartiest Yuletide greetings, and wish them a happy Christmas.

IN the delicate negotiations between Mr. Gibbons and the Federation, that genial Irishman and born diplomat, Mr. Joe O'Gorman, was agreeably prominent, and side by side with Mr. Frank Gerald, did excellent work. The speech of The O'Gorman at the Brixton Empress likewise did credit to his head and heart. He said: "Mr. Gibbons has met us in a way that only a gentleman could meet a body of men, and the solution arrived at to-day is the forerunner of brighter times for the artist and the proprietor."

THE new working agreement between Mr. Walter Gibbons and the V.A.F. will come into force on and from Monday, January 14th next. Mr. G. Adney Payne has also arranged to consider the questions raised on behalf of the companies in which he is so largely interested.

MR. WALTER GIBBONS entertained a party of artists, including Mr. Joe O'Gorman and Mr. Frank Gerald, the secretary of the V.A.F., to lunch at the Café Royal on Wednesday. The happiest spirit prevailed throughout.

MISS MARIE LLOYD, who has been recuperating amid the pines at Bournemouth, has deferred her return to the variety stage for a week in accordance with the advice of her medical man, and will return to the Tivoli and the Metropolitan on the 31st inst. with new songs. She may be assured of a hearty New Year welcome from her legion of admirers.

THE Crouch End Opera House is to become the Hippodrome, Crouch End, on Christmas Eve, when Mr. W. H. Burney, a director of Collins's and the London, will open it with one full performance nightly. Mr. Burney hopes to make the new nighmtly. Mr. Burney hopes to make the new variety house a popular family rendezvous, and patrons are to witness a refined performance of a character combining amusement and instruction.

THE Palace Theatre, Stoke Newington, will open as a two-houses-a-night music hall on Christmas Eve. Mr. Albert Gilmer, formerly manager of the Oxford, will have complete control, and no effort will be spared by him to make the house the popular resort of the locality. Mr. Norfolk Megone has been engaged to preside over the orchestra, every member of which will be a picked musician. Mr. Gilmer's endeavour will be to make the Palace, both as regards the quality of the programme, and the comfort of patrons, second to none in the Kingdom.

WHEN Mr. Clarence C. Corri relinquishes his position at the London Hippodrome his place will be filled by Herr Henry Erhorn. Herr Erhorn has been sub-conductor of the orchestra at that house since its opening, and is a famous 'cellist. He has had the honour of playing under Strauss and Gung'l at Munich, was chef d'orchestre of Woolf's Circus for a period of four years prior to coming to the London Hippodrome, and was also musical director at the Glasgow Exhibition in 1901. He has appeared as a 'cellist before most of the crowned heads of Europe, and is a noted composer.

AN unusual development of the entente cordiale is the action of Harry Fragson, who, leaving his rehearsals of pantomime at old Drury Lane on Tuesday, travelled to Paris, and was due at the Théâtre de la Gaîté in La Ville Lumière on Wednesday afternoon, for the benefit of M. Paulus. Paulus, the veteran French vocalist, who had much to do with the making of General Boulanger, made his first appearance in London at the opening of the Empire in 1884 in Chilpéric, when he sang, among other numbers, "Petit Bleu," a composition by M. Leopold Wenzel.

"You have amazed and delighted me. I assure you both it is the most marvellous exhibition of psychical powers I have ever witnessed." These are the words of King Edward, who cordially shook hands with Mr. and Mrs. Zancig as he said good-bye to them at the conclusion of the wonderful exhibition of their powers, at Mr. Cavendish-Bentinck's house in Richmond-terrace, Whitehall, on Tuesday night.

JUST previously Mme. Melba, with a large party had witnessed the wonderful performance of the Zancigs at the Alhambra. The book test was given in her box, and a passage selected by the famous singer was at once promptly repeated by Mrs. Zancig from the stage. The Duke of Connaught has also seen them at the Alhambra.

MR. HERMAN FINCK, the popular and gifted musical director of the Palace Theatre, has arranged a mélange of fascinating airs that have haunted the recollection of lovers of good music. These will be selected from all grades of melodists during the past fifty years. The idea is to include the hundred best musical "stories," and these will be cleverly contrasted so that solemnity and sentimentality will tread on the heels of gaiety, and vice versâ. We shall be regaled with tunes from the period of "I'll hang up my harp on the willow tree," "Ever of thee" and "Ole Bob Ridley" to the most haunting melodies of the moment.

THE Empire management will stage something new in the way of living pictures and statuary soon after the advent of the new year. Mr. Wilhelm is arranging these pictures, and if they are as good as the old series, in which Miss Hetty Hamer and Miss Constance Collier appeared some years since, they should be popular.

IT is a significant fact, and one that conclusively shows the growing popularity of English music with our American cousins, that at a recent concert and dramatic entertainment given by the members of that well-known New York Masonic Lodge, "The Star," every item on the lengthy programme was taken from the publications of Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter.

MESSRS. MASKELYNE AND DEVANT promise a novel attraction at St. George's Hall for the Christmas holidays. They will produce a fairy play in [illegible] acts by E. Nesbit, the well-known writer The Magic stories. The title of the play is effects and trickery, and even without magical teresting play. Without would be a complete, in- Devant's aid the various work Maskelyne and children's story will be shown on the events of a play tells of the adventures of a wicked ma[illegible] The who cast a spell over a beautiful princess and made her ugly. Mr. Nesbit has superintended the rehearsals of the play, and Messrs. Maskelyne and Devant has produced new tricks, illusions, and magical effects to accompany it. The Magician's Heart will no doubt serve to amuse [illegible]en of all ages for many months to come.

THE kiddies will be especially pleased to hear that their favourite clown, Whimsical Walker, is progressing favourably, and that he hopes to be about in a week's time.

A NEW place of amusement will be opened on Monday at Heeley (a suburb of Sheffield) by Mr. Victor Sampson, the genial proprietor of Sheffield Wonderland, to be known as the Criterion Hall of Varieties. The programme will be composed of variety turns and animated pictures.

MR. P. D. ELBOURNE, the young and energetic resident-manager of the Birmingham Hippodrome, has just received most signal praise from the Birmingham Daily Mail for his efforts on behalf of its Poor Children's Christmas Fund. Mr. Elbourne, as the result of a matinée (at which he gained the assistance of the artists engaged at all the local halls), together with weekly contributions which he has sent, is responsible for no less than £145 5s. 3d., a truly substantial and gratifying help, and which we are glad to see is so handsomely appreciated. The matinée alone (last Saturday) realised £101 3s. 3d.

THE directors of the Weston-super-Mare Grand Pier Company have appointed Mr. J. H. Stevenson (late manager of the Pavilion, Kingstown, and now of the Entertainment Department at Whiteley's) manager of that well-known place of amusement. Mr. Stevenson commences his duties on Feb. 1.

LORD BOLTON has been royally entertaining Serpentello, Princess Pauline, and Baroni and Kemp, who have spent a most enjoyable week on the magnificent Hollingworth estate, in Lancashire, Harry Baroni, who was an Australian rough-rider, was in his element on a good hunter with the hounds, and together with Serpentello secured one of the finest bags of the year—grouse, rabbits, and wild ducks by the score falling to their surprisingly capable guns. This most agreeable experience and healthful change has come at an opportune moment, as the artists mentioned are on the eve of some hard New Year work on the halls.

MISS LIL HAWTHORNE finishes her starring engagements for 1906 at the Empire, Birmingham, and sails for New York on the White Star liner Celtic on January 2.

MR. CLIVE WATTS, a wonderful dancer, has been engaged for America, and sails on Wednesday, January 3rd, from Liverpool. He has appointed Mr. Ernest de Vere his sole agent to act for him during his absence.

AFTER only a week's illness of pneumonia, Paul Courtney, sketch artist, died at Norwich on Wednesday. He had, however, been ailing for some time. In comedy and farce the deceased gentleman was a great favourite at halls both in London and the provinces, and his principal successes were won when but little attention was paid to mounting.

MR. ARTHUR JEFFERSON'S sketch, Home from the Honeymoon, has received contracts for thirty weeks on the Moss and Stoll tour as the result of a three weeks' trial-trip engagement. Mr. Jefferson, who is the author of the plays The Orphan Heiress and The World's Verdict, is certain that his dramatic sketch, Her Convict Lover, will cause a sensation.

MISS VIOLET WILTON (Mrs. Frank Coyle), since leaving the profession three years ago, has been doing excellent business as a milliner, and is always pleased to see friends at Burlington House, Woodhouse-street, Leeds.

MR. LEONARD YORKE and Miss Mary Hardacre were seen in a new sketch, A Game of Spoof, at the Palace, Manchester, on Saturday afternoon last. The story tells how a Captain, masquerading as a chauffeur, makes love to a person whom he takes to be a housemaid, the latter being, in fact, the lady of the house, who has disguised herself in order to test his affections. The assumption on both side, the misunderstandings, and the subsequent happy issue, brought about by the unerring instinct of true love, were very well rendered, and the little piece found ample favour with a large audience.

MR. MAURICE FRITZ, who has just opened offices for variety agency business at Newington Green-road, N., has been entrusted with the entire booking for several north country halls. His London office is in the care of Henri Fritz.

MISS EFFIE MORTON, who for some time has been successfully working provincial music halls as a refined male impersonator, has made her first London appearance this week at the Palace, Hammersmith, and has scored a big success. She is now rapidly booking 1907 and 1908.

SHORTLY before the commencement of the second performance on Monday at the Northampton Palace a somewhat serious accident occurred to a scene-shifter named Frank Walters, a man of middle age. He was mounted on a ladder some thirteen feet from the floor of the stage arranging the scenery when by some means he lost his foothold and fell headlong. He struck the floor with great force, and sustained a fracture of the thigh-bone, a sprained wrist, and bruises on various parts of the body. Those about the stage immediately went to his assistance, and Dr. Stone was sent for. On arrival he rendered first aid, splints being improvised out of broom handles and bandages. The unfortunate man bore the terrible agony of his injury with great fortitude, and he was removed as quickly as possible to the Northampton General Hospital.

AN interesting event has happened at Mansfield this week. A lioness, belonging to Miss Ella, now appearing at the Grand Theatre, has given birth to four cubs. The mother is doing her best for her offspring, and all are well.

MESSRS. CHARLES BEANLAND and Will Emerson have taken a lease of the Queen's Hall, Castleford, and will open on Monday, Jan. 14, on the one-house-a-night principle, with two houses on Saturday. A complete electric installation will be fitted; the interior of the building is to be entirely redecorated and the scenery renovated and overhauled. The orchestra stalls are to fitted with tip-up chairs, and everything possible will be done for the comforth and convenience of both patrons and artists. The hall will in future be known as the Queen's Theatre of Varieties.

THE principal attractions at the provincial Empires of the Moss-Stoll company are as follows:—Deane Tribune's Pantomime, Bo-Peep, at Cardiff Empire; John Leopold's House Boat at Swansea Empire; Fred Karno's Dandy Thieves at Newport Empire; The Duchess of Tooting at Nottingham; at the Leicester Palace the Dandies; at the Manchester Hippodrome the aquatic spectacle The Flood; Mme. Alice Esty at Ardwick Green; George Abel and Co. in Three of a Kind at Bradford Empire; Jake Friedman and Co. in Happy Holland at Birmingham Empire; Dare Devil Schreyer will be seen at Liverpool Olympia; Mr. J. F. Elliston's pantomime, Puss in Boots, at Liverpool Empire; The Gorilla's Revenge at Newcastle Empire; the sensational act, The Globe of Life, at [illegible]burgh Empire; Freaks at the Glasgow Coli[illegible]; [illegible]sburger's Lilliputians at Glasgow Zoo-Hippodrome; [illegible]no's Early Birds at Glasgow Empire; George [illegible] at Sheffield Empire; Mabel Bardine in sketch, Nell of the Halls, at Palace, Hull; and Miss Madge Lessing at Leeds Empire.

THE many friends of Chirgwin will be sorry to hear that he is confined to his bed with what he humorously calls "the catch of the season," or, in other words, the "flu." We sincerely hope that the good spirits which Mr. Chirgwin is known to possess will help him to throw off the attack.

MR. HARRY TATE, who has arrived, left New York on Dec. 8 per s.s. Campania to fulfil his engagement in pantomime at the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool. At his farewell performance at the Alhambra, New York, he was presented with a beautiful floral tribute representing a huge fish, over 6ft. long. It required four men to lift it on to the stage. The presentation was made amidst tremendous cheering, and Mr. Tate responded in a few happy phrases.

MR. GEORGE ROBEY, just returned from a twelve weeks' trip to South Africa, had at least one amusing adventure at Johannesburg. One day he dressed up as one of the Cape Mounted Police, and arrested a negro who was in possession of assegais and knob-kerries. "Give me your arms, fellow," he cried; and the man tremblingly gave him a formidable knob-kerry, which he retains as one of the spoils of peaceable intervention.

MR. JOSEPH WILSON will "present" Mr. Arthur Roberts in a new burlesque, by Herbert Shelley and Ernest Bucalossi, entitled Robin Waller, A.O.F.; or, The Maid of the Mill-'ard By. Mr. Bruce Smith has painted the scenery, and Mr. Willie Clarkson is responsible for the dresses, which have been specially designed for this production. The skit takes us back to the time when burlesque was burlesque.

THE East Ham Palace of Varieties—the latest addition to the Syndicate Halls—was successfully opened on Monday evening with the two-house-nightly system of performances. Most attractive and well equipped, it seems to be a welcome addition to the new public buildings of the ever-growing district of East Ham, which now has a population of nearly 120,000, hitherto unprovided with any public place of entertainment of importance.

MESSRS. GREENING AND CO., LTD., have published an exceedingly amusing autobiography, entitled "Harry Lauder at Home and on Tour," in which the celebrated comedian relates his early struggles from his first appearance when, as a mill-boy at Arbroath, he won the first prize at a singing competition, to the memorable night of the 19th of March, 1900, when, at Gatti's, "in the road," he took the audience, and subsequently all London, by storm. The chapter descriptive of the singer's life in a Lanarkshire coal mine is of deep interest.

MR. WALTER DE FRECE is rapidly increasing the area of his circuit. Leeds, Portsmouth, and Liverpool have all become centres of his company's enterprise, and he has found a pied à terre in suburban London at the Palace, Stoke Newington. Now we learn that the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, will come under his sway as soon as the run of the pantomime Babes in the Wood is completed. It is to be hoped that the fine dramatic traditions of the old house will be continued in the new King's Theatre, just opened.

MISS CONNIE EDISS has been persuaded to again visit South Africa, and has accepted an engagement from the Hyman Company for the Empire, Johannesburg, and the Tivoli, Cape Town. She will start on Jan. 12, partly by permission of Mr. George Edwardes, and will fulfil a nine weeks' contract—six weeks on the Rand and three weeks at the Cape. When Miss Ediss paid her first visit to the Transvaal Krugerism was rampant, and she had not graduated at the Gaiety nor become a theatrical star. The Springboks will be her compagnons de voyage, and Mr. Aubrey Hyman, who came over to look after things during his brother Sydney's absence in the States, will also go out by the same vessel. Miss Ediss will return in May next, and it is highly probable that she will again be seen at an important West End variety house.

THE complaint of the Rev. G. C. Wilton, vicar of St. Mary's, Soho, against the exhibition of photographs of "Galatea" in statuesque pose outside the Palace came before the Westminster City Council on Thursday in a recommendation from the Watch Committee that representations should be made to the London County Council on the subject. Mr. H. J. Greenwood, chairman of the County Council Licensing Committee, said two inspectors sent to see the pictures reported that no fault could be found with either the pictures or the entertainment. The latter was really a beautiful exhibition, and such that no pure-minded man or woman could possibly find fault with.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS, Argyll-street, will open on Monday next, with as its chief feature the story of Little Red Riding Hood, presented mainly by little folk, with novel theatrical and scenic effects. The music has been specially composed by Mr. Denham Harrison, but the score includes the famous "Spring" chorus, by the late Jules Rivière, from Babil and Bijou. Some very pretty dances and groupings have been arranged by Mr. Edouard Espinosa, who will superintend the stage production. The Arabian donkey, "Domino," and Caban's highly-trained miniature ponies, dogs, and monkeys will be among the animal turns, and other attractions will include the Hanlon Troupe, Prince Fee Lung, late Court magician to the Dowager Empress of China, and Mlle. Fayette in a haut école driving act. Two performances daily will be given.

MR. DAN LENO, JUN., a son of the famous comedian, who is desirous of "following in his father's footsteps," will make his first professional appearance on the variety boards at the Holborn Empire. He will be sure of a hearty welcome for the sake of his famous sire, who loved the people, and whose genius was honoured by the King.

THE genial face of Mr. Tom Shaw, the proprietor of the International Vaudeville Agency, of 18, Adam-street, and 21, John-street, Adelphi, once more beams upon our readers, to whom he wishes the compliments of the season. Mr. Shaw's chief lieutenant is Mr. Charles Henderson, and his friends will be glad to learn that Mr. Tom Rice is another hustler for the Adam-street agency.

DR. EWING ALBINI, whose marvellous talking and singing head has excited the curiosity of the quidnuncs and puzzled thousands, is by way of producing shortly a new illusion, with two pictures, on quite new lines. To this he has given the pretty title of "Queen of the Roses."

AT the Music Hall Benevolent Fund meeting, fixed for Friday, the 14th, the attendance was so poor that a postponement was proposed and carried. The report furnishes gloomy reading. The regret of the committee that there has been a serious decrease in the income will be shared by every friend of the charity, who will also be sorry to learn that the annual dinner was not so successful as usual, that there is a falling-off in the pence-box collections, and that the sports were unremunerative. If funds are not forthcoming, indeed, the general weekly relief and the allowances to pensioners will be in jeopardy—at a time, too, when winter is upon us and the committee has to face a serious increase of poverty. The usefulness of the fund is seriously curtailed by the large deficit of £1500 on unreturned loans, and a considerable amount is owing in respect to unpaid dinner donations, tickets, and subscriptions.

MR. GEORGE BASTOW, "Varmer Giles," was to have played the King in the forthcoming Leeds edition of The Sleeping Beauty, but we much regret to learn that he has been obliged to abandon the part through serious illness.

MR. JAMES DE VOYE'S illness, reported in our columns, has had, we are sorry to hear, a fatal termination. His famous educated horse Billy is rightly considered a wonder, and, under the care of his patient master, had pleased and amused thousands. Mr. De Voye died at the Leeds infirmary on Saturday of diabetes. He was buried two days later, the funeral being from the Harrison Arms, Mr. Alf Howard, the proprietor, carrying out all arrangements, and showing great kindness to Mrs. De Voye in her bereavement.

GUS ELEN will again play the part of Santa Claus, and repeat his generosity of last Yuletide, by giving a large number of toys away to the poor children of Clapham, Battersea, and surrounding districts, from the grand stand on Clapham Common on Christmas Day. The case containing the toys stands 4ft. high, and holds 3cwt. of good cheer and fun for the little ones.

THE 493rd meeting of the executive committee of the M.H.A.R.A. was held on Wednesday, when the following members were present: Messrs. Fred Herbert, F. W. Millis, Ryder Slone, Douglas White, Harry Mountford, Fred Neiman, Harry Bancroft, John Alexander, Fred Harrison, and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary).

IT was decided to hold the dinner and dance on Sunday, Feb. 10, 1907, at the Horns, Kennington. It was agreed also to close the offices from Saturday until Thursday, and to hold the next meeting on Friday, Dec. 28, at 1 o'clock.

MR. R. T. CRAWFORD, the well-known Leicester county cricketer, and brother to Mr. V. F. S. Crawford, is billed to appear at the Palace Theatre, Southampton, on Monday. Mr. Reggie Crawford, as he is familiarly called, is a most artistic tenor vocalist, and he made a very successful, though quite unexpected début at the Southampton hall on Aug. 23 last, when the Hants and Leicester teams, who were playing at Southampton, attended the second performance.

MR. CRAWFORD, with other sporting friends, occupied a box, and as the result of a bet he volunteered to go on and sing a song. No sooner said than done, and Mr. Wm. Trussell, the enterprising and astute manager, who is a son of Fred Trussell, of the London Hippodrome, was summoned. He at once agreed to the proposal, and, being an accomplished pianist, offered to accompany the new singing star on the pianoforte. Mr. Crawford accepted with glee. "Extra turn" was switched up, and the cricketer-vocalist stepped boldly on to the stage and gave a very fine rendering of "I'll sing thee songs of Araby," from poor Fred Clay's Lallah Rookh, scoring an instantaneous success. Owing to his cordial reception Mr. Crawford again appeared the following night, and so pleased was the management that he was offered an engagement to appear at the Macnaghten halls. Hence his appearance as a professional singer on Monday next, when all sportsmen will join in wishing him success in his new rôle.

MR. FRANK LAW, whose geniality and courtesy as presiding genius of the Canterbury box-office are proverbial, is getting on well towards a quarter-century's service at the historic hall, having been attached to the staff for twenty-three years. He is a brother of the late Fred Law.

MR. FRANK GLENISTER entertained the "Springboks" at the London Pavilion after their match at Richmond against Surrey, and, to signalise the occasion, the Seldoms gave a special football tableau, called "Tackled."

GRAHAM, drollest of human marionettes, had the heartiest possible reception both at the Empire, Edinburgh, and the Zoo, Glasgow, and opens on Monday at the Granville and Islington Empire. He has also been engaged to appear at the Guildhall at Christmas by the Lord Mayor.

MR. NELSON JACKSON, now appearing with so much success at the Palace Theatre with his stories and songs at the piano, was recently in South Africa touring a "show." In accordance with the custom of that country, "Children half-price" was one of the standing advertisements. At Pretoria the Nelson Jackson company made a stand, and one evening an old Boer presented himself at the pay-box, accompanied by three middle-aged gentlemen and two ladies of questionable age. "One for me, and five children's tickets" was the request. "Where are the children?" asked the box-office clerk. "These are my children," replied the old man, "and I want half-price for them, too." And in they had to go.

AT the skating carnival on the Alexandra Palace Rink on Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Paul Valentine were the judges of the competitions for a variety of prizes for the best costumes, representing Christmastide, Toyland, Originality, and Advertisement. Alderman F. W. Lawson presented the prizes to the successful competitors.

MR. W. B. FAIR has taken out a new provisional patent for an improved sanitary sawdust, and he has also registered the trade-mark, "Santy Dust." Possessing the excellent qualities of a first-class disinfectant, the dust can be used with the utmost advantage in theatres, music halls, hotels, hospitals, butchers', oil and colourmen's, and provision shops, and a sack containing three bushels can be obtained for 1s. 3d. In an age of hygienic progress, the use of "Santy Dust" should be universal. The patentee, Mr. Fair, may be communicated with at 3, Sudeley-street, Islington, N.

STILL hale and hearty, and looking much younger than his years seem to warrant, Mr. W. B. Fair gives many interesting reminiscences of his early career. In 1866 he was apprenticed to Mr. F. B. Egan, of the old Queen's Theatre, Spring Gardens, Manchester, where he played in the pantomime of Boy Blue. After further successful engagements in Christmas productions with Charles Calvert and other managers, Mr. Fair became part proprietor, in 1871, with George Leybourne, of the East London Theatre, where Kate and Susie Vaughan appeared as members of the Vaughan Family in Charles Merion's sketches. Later came a successful engagement with the "People's Caterer," Bill Holland, for three seasons at the Surrey.

"TOMMY, make room for your uncle," which took the town, was introduced by Mr. Fair into his burlesque sketch Crusoe the Second—in which he played Man Friday—at the Surrey Gardens. Mr. F. W. Green was the author, and Mr. Alf. Lee the composer of the sketch. The Covent Garden Cinderella, a fine production by Charles Rice, of Bradford, claimed Mr. Fair's services as one of the ugly sisters, in December, 1875. At the Winchester, which he acquired a little later, he gave his first salaried engagement to Charles Godfrey, who appeared at his testimonal benefit on Dec. 20, 1878, with Chirgwin, Jenny Hill, Charlotte Russell, Herbert Campbell, Arthur Lloyd, and the veteran Walter Joyce.

IN 1887 Mr. Fair became assistant-manager and chairman at the Royal, Holborn, and, later, manager of the Standard and Marylebone Music Halls; but during his later years he has been handicapped by serious illness and money losses. He is devoting his energies, therefore, to commerce, and should command success.

TO Mr. Harry Lauder a Shetland pony was presented at the Palace Theatre, Aberdeen, on Saturday evening, at the conclusion of a most successful engagement. The presentation was made on the stage by Mr. Walter Gilbert, the manager, on behalf of Messrs. Rosen and Bliss. The pony seemed, however, to object to the whole business, and for once the "neighs" had it. It was great sport. The sight of the diminutive "gee-gee" keeping a big man at bay got absolutely the better of the risible faculties of the people. The popular manager at length laughingly discontinued the unequal contest and signalled to Mr. Lauder to have a try.

MR. LAUDER, addressing the pony as "a conterairy beast," beseeched it, with its ear tightly enclosed in his hand, "to be quiet for a minute." "If you would only do that when I want you," said Lauder, "you'd be the biggest success of anything on the stage." With that the animal gave an ear-splitting neigh such as only a wild Shetland pony can give. Turning round, Mr. Lauder abandoned the struggle with a smile. He endeavoured to lead the quadruped off the stage, but the wee creature absolutely refused to move, and had simply to be bodily carried off by Mr. Gilbert and Mr. Lauder to the huge delight of the spectators.

GEORGE GOLDING, the vocal comedian, whose death from paralysis at the age of forty-seven took place at Manchester on the 8th inst. (as announced in our obituary column last week), was a native of Hull. He worked for some time in partnership with the late Pat Geraghty (Geraghty and Gilligan), and was the original Gilligan. Later he joined his brother-in-law, the duo being known as the Brothers Golding, and developed his artistic faculties in a clever Dutch girl impersonation.

ABOUT six years since he toured with Miss Cissy Moxon's Trip to Rum-Fum company, playing the eccentric Dutchman and introducing his own speciality songs. Besides being favoured with a good stage presence, an agreeable singing voice, and a quaint phlegmatic style, Golding possessed a gift for turning out useful songs which usually caught on. His "Newsboy" song for his daughter Beatrice Bonnie (Mrs. Stylo) and "Polonies" for himself were fair specimens of his skill. He leaves a widow and a numerous family, two daughters being in the profession.

THE annual matinée at the Liverpool Royal Hippodrome in aid of the Hotpot Fund took place on Saturday, and was a pronounced success. There was a crowded audience, which included the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress and party, and Sir Alfred Jones (hon. treasurer of the fund). A pleasing feature in the auditorium was the presence of 220 nurses in uniform from the Liverpool hospitals. A colossal programme, embracing no fewer than forty-nine turns, was submitted. All appeared gratuitously. The augmented orchestra of fifty players also rendered free service.

DURING an interval the Lord Mayor moved a vote of thanks on behalf of the Hotpot Committee to Mr. Thomas Barrasford for his kindness in giving the theatre for the matinée; to Mr. Walter Hassan, the manager; to the staff of the theatre, both back and front; to the artists, to the conductor and members of the orchestra, and to the respective managers and proprietors for their kind permission for the various artists to appear. He was very much pleased at the success of that performance, which would help to provide so many hotpots for the poor.

SIR ALFRED JONES, who seconded, cordially commended the goodness of heart of the actors and actresses in giving their services. They were always, he said, as a class willing to help others in need. He was pleased to tell the audience that Mr. George Leyton had handed him a cheque for £20, the proceeds of the sale of his song-book that day. They were very grateful to Mr. Leyton for that handsome donation.

THE following well-known artists appeared:—Brilliant and Brilliant, Wild, Willie, and West, Gus Barra, Baby Boden, Ruth Moloy, Vesta Victoria, Hetty King, Harrison Brockbank, Happy Fanny Fields, Johnny Danvers, Fanny Dango, Regan and Ryan, M. R. Morand, Malcolm Scott, J. T. Macmillan, Stelling and his wonderful dog, Fred Storey, A. Maitland Stapley, Keith Fraser, Seromgton, The Delormes, Dan Crawley, Horace Wheatley, Jock Whiteford, George Leyton, Ada Twibell, Martine and Son, Sisters Tinsley.

THE French giantess and lady dwarf will be on view at the Crystal Palace at Christmas. The great interest shown by the public some time ago when Henri Cot, the French giant, and Prince Colibri, the dwarf, were on a visit to Sydenham convinced the management that these two remarkable ladies from Belgium would be welcome. The giantess, Marie Scheller, twenty years old, is just on 7ft. high, and weighs 260lbs. Her parents came to Paris from Alsace at the time of the Franco-German War, and she is the youngest of a family of twelve. Her father, though tall, was by no means an Anak, and her mother reached the average height of her sex.

MARIE was born in Langres (France), and even when very young was taller than other children of her age, and when only eleven her age was invariably guessed to be eighteen. To the surprise of everyone she continued to grow so rapidly that she had to crawl through all ordinary doorways, and special chairs, tables, and bedsteads, and other articles in daily use had to be made specially for her on account of her extraordinary height. Medical men consider that Mlle. Scheller has not yet attained anything like her full growth.

LITTLE Princess Hawas, said to be the smallest lady on earth, is eighteen years old. Her height is 32in. and she weighs 31lbs. This marvellous little woman has been nicknamed by the Parisian Press "The Living Doll," on account of her perfectly-proportioned figure, a remarkable fact in one so very small. Her father was an Italian of more than average height and her mother a French lady who stood about 4ft. 6in. The Princess enjoys extremely good health, and her vivacity and intelligence have made her a great favourite with her French audiences. Both ladies are now being shown for the first time in England.

THE working staff, &c., now out of employment on account of the closing of the Brixton Hippodrome wish to convey their heartfelt thanks to the directors of the Empress Theatre for the use of the theatre on Wednesday last, to all the subscribers for their generosity, to all the artists, musical conductors, instrumentalists, and also all the officials, for their kind assistance in helping to bring the matinée to such a successful issue.

MR. ROLLO BALMAIN, who, with Miss Sara Mignon, successfully produced their new sketch, The Old Homestead, at the Queen's, Poplar, this week, was the recipient of a letter the other evening addressed to him at the "Popular Queen's Palace, London." Surely a compliment to Mr. Jack Woolf, to whom we might say, "With U there, the Queen's, Poplar, becomes the Queen's, Popular."

MISS KATE CARNEY has just accepted from George Collins (who shares in a large degree the gift of melody possessed by his brother Charles) a most tuneful chorus number, entitled "Sweet Maggie McGee, you're just my company." Mr. Collins has deputised during the week for Mr. George Lashwood at the Holloway Empire, and has scored heavily.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

THE flowing tide of succes attendant on the production of all Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter's special pantomime songs continues to rise higher and higher, and a record "high-water" will most assuredly be reached on Boxing Night, when London takes a hand at the game of pantomime. In Mr. J. H. Savile's production at Paisley the firm's numbers, entitled "There's a man in Manitoba" and "It's a different girl again," were both enormous successes, and the same gratifying result attended the singing of "It is the scarecrow," and "Arrah Wanna," in Deane Tribune's pantomime produced at the Empire, Swansea.

"ARRAH WANNA," which may be set down as the song of the year, has caught on with a vengeance in every pantomime in which it has been included, and Miss Lily Burnand has given the fame of the song a great fillip by producing it at the Oxford. This favourite artist has never gone better in a song or sung more sweetly.

MR. FRANK LYNNE'S song, "I can't make it out, can you?" is a feather in the cap of Fred Erick, as is testified by the demands made to Messrs. Francis and Day for copies of the number. The firm has just bought a charming number, by J. F. Lambe and T. W. Thurban, entitled "My Sweet Iranian Flower"; also a song, by Vi Carlyle and Charles Hector, named "Come along, Daisy." Mr. Harry Randall's popular song, "Wicked Mr. Tootle," by Tom Wick, is also in the press.

THE following songs have been added to the list of Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter's "Sixpenny Pops," by Mr. John Smith, the firm's manager: "Mamma's boy," "Don't tell the world your troubles," "Come and make love to me," "The galloping major," "Oh, for a night in the west," "It's part of a p'liceman's duty," "I can see red roses blooming," "I want Molly, and she wants me," "Fighting for their King and Sireland," "Won't they be glad to see me?" "Come and be a soldier," "Would you mind passing the salt?" and "Just a little rocking-chair and you."

"BOY BLUE," the fine march song, by Harry Castling, which is setting the feet of audiences going in all the best pantomimes, has made a great impression on the large audiences thronging the Holborn Empire, it being sung with verve by Miss Gladys Mavius. Messrs. Francis and Day are the publishers.

THE pantomime song of the year, "Au revoir, my little Hyacinth," by A. E. Sidney Davis and H. E. Darewski, jun., is delighting the publishers (Messrs. Feldman and Co.) by the manner in which it has been taken up by the most prominent managers and artists, and by the already enormous sales. It is being sung in pantomime by over 200 artists in various parts of the country, and in addition, has made a sensational success in various Continental centres, especially Paris and Berlin. Miss Ellaline Terriss specially features it in The Beauty of Bath, and the rapid sales of the popular sixpenny edition, both inside and outside the theatre, testify to the favour with which it is received.

THE Star Music Company's "Sailing in my balloon" is to be heard at the Glasgow Grand, Princess's, and Theatre Royal. This irresistible chorus number is published by the Star Music Company, which is being bombarded with applications from all parts of the kingdom for Castling and Murphy's dainty Welsh love song, "On the Isle of Anglesey." Though coming late in the year, the quaint freshness of the song will make it popular in many Christmas productions.

MESSRS. SCOTT AND MILLS' charming song, "Somebody cares for you," has been in extraordinary requisition, both as a principal boy's song and duet for boy and girl; and the majority of this year's pantomimes are "featuring" it, both in town and country. The Monte Carlo Publishing Co. are to be congratulated on the possession of this tuneful and "catchy" number.

ONE of the biggest "sellers" in the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s "Sixpenny Successes" series just now is Mr. Ernest Shand's "Oh, dearly beloved breth-er-en," which was specially written for him by two members of the Berners-street firm, Messrs. John P. Harrington and Jas. W. Tate. These gentlemen, up to now, have only written two songs for Mr. Shand (in conjunction), and both were "winners," the other being his popular "Look at the weather we're having."

"TAKE ME BACK TO LONDON TOWN" is a most successful number, and will be in almost every suburban pantomime. The Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Co., Ltd., the publishers, have just granted permission for its introduction into the Coronet Christmas production.

THE Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Co., Ltd., have just acquired from Messrs. Arthur Chenery and J. Chas. Moore a new song, "Just a sprig of holly," which is being featured with enormous success by Misses Marie Collins and Gladys Mavius. This is the firm's eleventh hour sensation.

MISS FRANCES LETTY has "scored" tremendously in Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Newcastle with the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s song "There's a big ship sailing in the morning," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; and on Monday last this talented singer wired the publishers: "Scored another hit to-night at Hippodrome, Manchester."

DURING the past week the Monte Carlo Publishing Co. have acquired several new songs for early spring exploitation, including the following:—"A parasol for two," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; "In my heart," by Barnes and Weston; "When, when, when?" by Pelham and Rule, and "No thanks, Mr. Octopus," by Percy Edgar and Kenneth Lyle.

A STRICTLY up-to-date song, by Fred Godfrey, has been secured by Messrs. Francis and Day, entitled "In my aeroplane," and another from the same pen, called "Down on the beautiful Rhine." The same firm have during the week purchased "My Montana Maid," by Gilbert Wells and Fred Elton; "The Queen Bee's Wedding," by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford; "Te-ni-aye" (Fred Earle), by Harry Wincott; "Though absent from home" (Pat Rafferty), by F. W. Carter; and "Two little paper roses," by Barnes and Weston.

LITTLE MAX DAREWSKI'S latest song, entitled "I dreamed of a beautiful garden," and dedicated by special permission to Mme. Adelina Patti, has been secured by Mr. David Day for publication. The words are by Gordon Meggy.

THE Stavordale Quintette, who are this week appearing at the Olympia, Liverpool, deputised on Wednesday, at the Empire, for Miss Vesta Tilley, when they made a hit with "Snowflakes," Messrs. Francis and Day's latest success.

MR. T. E. DUNVILLE'S new song, "That's extra," has been secured for publication by the Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Co., Ltd., whose latest number, "You're my girl in the springtime," is being featured during her pantomime engagement at Sheffield by Miss Daisy Jerome.

SONG publishers, song writers, and singers, wishing to record the date of production of successful songs, are invited to send particulars to the editor.

A brilliant success attended the production of this tabloid musical comedy on Wednesday evening, and Mr. Arthur Watson and his really clever troupe of comedians are assured of an enthusiastic reception wherever billed to appear. The music is lively, tuneful, and spirited, the fun fast and furious, and the dancing clever, untiring, and energetic. As the story goes, H.M.S. Victory has arrived in the Solent, having on board the Admiral, Lord Teasum, who has returned from a three years' cruise, and is eager to see his wife. She, however, is mad with jealousy, for she has heard that her gay old Lord has been carrying on a flirtation at Gibraltar. She comes to Portsmouth, with the double purpose of exposing her husband and of finding a long-lost niece and heiress. She runs against some of the crew of the Victory. Among these is a sailor, Jack Marlinspike, whom she engages to find out all he can about the Admiral. At the same time, the Admiral enlists the services of another of his crew, Dick Hatchway, to find out if his wife has been true to him while he has been away. The two sailors soon discover each other's mission, and concoct two letters, which they give to the Admiral and his wife, making it appear that they have both been engaged in flirtations. After a stormy scene between the Admiral and his lady, the plotters are bowled out, and Lady Teasum also finds that the pretty waitress at the Rockingham is her long-lost niece and is in love with her sailor detective, Jack Marlinspike, everything thus ending happily.

Miss Flo Stanley has written a smart little comedy, and in the character of Polly the Waitress proved that she can act as well as she can write, her Polly being bright, chic, and distinctly clever. Mr. Arthur Watson as the irresponsible sailor, Jack Marlinspike, who adopts various disguises, was the life and soul of the production, his merry fooling keeping the audience laughing all the time. Mr. Bob Leardo was a realistic Admiral, and his singing of the rollicking sea song "I'm the Admiral," with its rousing chorus and dance, formed a striking final to the first scene. Mr. Billy Moss invested the part of Dick Hatchway with endless comedy touches. As the principal dancers, the three Sisters Dudley won vociferous applause for their energy and skill. All the other parts were well sustained, and the scenery, dresses, and effects were excellent.

The Royal Sovereign Quartette made their first appearance here in the second house on Tuesday evening, and worked so very hard for success that they well merited the warm applause bestowed on their efforts. On the deck of H.M.S. Royal Sovereign we find the captain, the lieutenant, the boatswain and his mate indulging in vocal exercises, merry jests, and knockabout business. Somewhat nervous in their opening item, the old sea song "Anchored," they soon gained confidence, and were heard to better advantage in "Alice, where art thou?" "Sally in our alley," and a medley of popular coon and other songs, while the lieutenant gave an admirable rendering of "The Midshipmite." Much of the fun was due to the boatswain's mate, who by many comical acts kept the audience amused all the time.

Others appearing in the Empire programme during the week are Miss Marcel Eirl in a song scena, entitled "A Moon Dream"; the mysterious Mr. E., pun patterer to peculiar pictures; Miss Rose Martin, vocalist; Mr. Harry Tacho, comedian; Messrs. Hahn and Schmidt in a merry burlesque, and a long series of Empire animated pictures.

MISS ELSIE EARLE is making a great success with her song-scena, "Holly and Mistletoe" from the pen of Will Letters. The scenery and properties are of the best, and she appears in a most charming white broché silk outdoor costume, with coat, fur hat, and muff all trimmed with holly and mistletoe. The chorus is a catchy refrain, and the song would be a great success in pantomime.

MR. WILL EVANS has done the trick in Glasgow. From his first striking entrance his success was never in doubt. He showed great versatility and resource, and made a distinct hit with a comic and melodious ditty entitled "Cowcaddens," specially written by George Arthurs. The enterprising Star Music Company have secured this number for immediate publication.

THE Monte Carlo Publishing Co. have this week secured another "gem" in the shape of a song from the prolific pens of Messrs. Paul Pelham and Herbert Rule, entitled "When, when, when?" which it is confidently anticipated will equal, if not excel, the success already achieved by the same author and composer's great "hit," "She didn't come from Borneo."

THE stirring march-time song, "When the band played the 'Men of Harlech,'" by Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford, has been very extensively taken up, not only by English pantomime producers, but particularly in Wales, as both the sentiment and environment of the song specially appeal to the people of that portion of the Empire. This number forms one of the Monte Carlo Publishing Co.'s "Sixpenny Successes" series.

WITH the printers working night and day just now, in an endeavour to cope with the present abnormal trade demand for their "Sixpenny Successes," the Monte Carlo Publishing Co. may fairly lay claim to being busy this Christmastide. The call for their biggest "winner," "Bamboo Bungalow," is truly phenomenal, the printer's order for copies being practically unlimited.

THE following are among the songs and dance music secured during the last few days for publication by Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter: "Hello! old man!" (Miss Victoria Monks), by Geo. A. Stevens; "I've been over the sea" (George Antill), by Percival Langley; "Come along, my little Daisy," written, composed, and sung by Miss Vi Carlyle; "Mary, Queen of Scots" (Miss Vesta Victoria), by Fred E. D'Albert and Fred Godfrey; "Maizee, my Malagasy" (introduced by Miss Daisy Dormer), by George Collins; "Tess" waltz, by Frank Brockett; "Tillietiddlum" (Jock Whiteford), by J. F. Lambe; "Ye've got the same old way wid ye," by Weston and Barnes; "The boy and the eagle" (Arthur Lennard) and "Girls, beware of the Serpentine!" (George Lashwood), both by E. W. Rogers; "Are you a mason?" and "And then we looked at each other" (Bernard Russell), the former by E. A. Searson and R. Nevitt, the latter by Fred Hastings; and last, but by no means least, Frank Leo's great chorus song for Wilkie Bard, entitled "You! you! you!"

CHAT WITH CHAS. BEECHAM.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

"As a rule," says Mr. Charles Beecham, the manager of the Paragon Theatre, "I can tell by my Monday evening's audience what sort of business we are going to have during the rest of the week. Say there is a fair house on the opening night, and they appear to be pleased with what they have seen and heard, we are pretty certain to be favoured with satisfactory congregations—from a numerical point of view, at least—even if we do not get packed during the five remaining evenings. But, of course, there is no law on the subject. Exceptional circumstances may, and do, arise, and I could give instances where our receipts have been decidedly poor for the first half of the week and we have had almost to turn money away on the last three nights.

"Judicious advertising," Mr. Beecham goes on to tell us, "counts for a great deal. You might have the finest programme that could be arranged, but if you did not advertise your attractions in an adequate manner you would derive no greater advantage from your star artists than if they were merely of the ordinary fill-in type of turn. The amount spent in bringing prominently to the notice of the public the show for the week is a considerable item in the annual expenditure of a music hall company. There must be no cheeseparing in this respect if a manager has any hope at all of attracting visitors to his establishment. And when you have got your audience you must see to it that you are prepared to carry out all the promises you have made in your poster announcements."

Mr. Charles Beecham commenced work as a lad of thirteen in the cellars of the Canterbury Music Hall, and, as he jocularly remarks, he could not have started on a lower step, unless, indeed, he had made his advent from the place of which the Florentine poet has given us such vivid pictures. For some nine years Mr. Beecham faithfully served Mr. Payne at the Westminster hall, which, during the period mentioned, was under the management respectively of Messrs. A. Thiodon, Will Lennon, Harry Lundy, and Fred Holden. On the re-opening of the South London Palace Mr. Payne offered to Mr. Beecham the post of treasurer at that house, Mr. Frank Egerton being the manager at this period. Subsequently Mr. Beecham became secretary and treasurer at the Paragon, and, after two and a half years at that establishment, he took possession of the managerial chair, a piece of furniture he still graces.

Mr. Beecham is not able to look out from his windows upon what might be termed idyllic scenery; but, then, there are other compensations, for when one's time and attention are centred wholly on one's work the fact of residing in the midst of squalid tenements and dismal-looking, grimy chimney-stacks does not count for much. At any rate, Mr. Beecham is cheerful enough; but, then, we should imagine he would make himself at home wherever his work called him, whether it were in the humid and disease-laden air of a West African settlement or under the clear sky and gentler atmosphere of the Antipodes. Since he was vested with authority in Mile End-road he has done notable work in the cause of sweet charity, and in this connection we can make special reference to the enterprise he exhibited on the occasion of the King's dinner to the poor in 1902, when he acted as the Stepney representative on the organising committee of theatre and music hall proprietors. In order to mark his services as manager of the East End district, Mr. Beecham was made a life governor of the Albert and Victoria Park Hospital, while to Mrs. Beecham fell the honour of being the first lady life governor of the Sloane-square Hospital for Women. Mr. Beecham highly appreciates the great help and generous consideration he has always experienced at the hands of his managing-director, Mr. George Adney Payne, under whom he thinks it an honour to work. Mr. Worland S. Wheeler, who spent some time as assistant secretary at the Canterbury, has, during his six years' tenure of office at the Paragon as secretary and treasurer, proved that he could quickly adapt himself to the duties of his position, in which his abilities seem to have found an appropriate channel.

Mr. Beecham has been associated with Mr. Payne for twenty-three years, and it is greatly to his credit that he should, by steady and consistent plodding, have risen from cellar-boy to manager of one of London's largest theatres of variety. Mr. Beecham's history furnishes a story of gradual advancement of which he is justified in feeling not a little proud.

HORACE WHEATLEY

AT PAVILION, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

The name of Horace Wheatley has been a household word in the music-hall world for many a year. "The Genial Irishman" is full of resource yet . . . few stories, told with his old humour, and, in response to a warm encore, Mr. Wheatley sang a ditty of "The Hearty Veteran," which went as well as anything.—Daily Journal, Dec. 18, 1906.

Horace Wheatley, the genial and versatile Irishman, with his touches of pathos and comedy, and the lightness of his dancing, was a tremendous favourite.—Northern Gossip.

MISS WINIFRED HARE is specially featuring John P. Harrington and the late George Le Brunn's melodious number "One little lonely star" (with which this charming artist has achieved such a signal success in the halls) in the Shakespeare, Clapham, pantomime, wherein she plays principal boy this year. The Monte Carlo Publishing Co. are the fortunate publishers of this successful number.

MR. GIBBONS AND THE V.A.F.

SETTLEMENT.

It was a very happy and enthusiastic little party that assembled on the stage of the Brixton Empress on Wednesday afternoon at the conclusion of the benefit performance in aid of the staff and employés of the Brixton Hippodrome, who had been thrown out of work in consequence of the closing of the latter establishment. Earlier in the afternoon certain members of the Variety Artists' Federation had, at the invitation of Mr. Walter Gibbons, lunched with him at the Café Royal, when matters in dispute were discussed, and an amicable agreement arrived at. Mr. George Adney Payne and his secretary, Mr. Harry Masters, as well as Mr. Gibbons's manager, Mr. Charles Read, were also present at the conference, and most of the company drove to the Empress after luncheon, and the happy result of the deliberations at the Café Royal was made known to the audience.

When the curtain rose upon this agreeable "extra turn," Mr. JOE O'GORMAN stepped in front of his party and said:—Ladies and gentlemen,—I have much pleasure, as chairman of the Variety Artists' Federation, to come before you, and, in the first place, to apologise to you on behalf of my brother and sister artists who have not appeared here this afternoon, and to say that this is due to the meeting we have had to-day with Mr. Walter Gibbons and Mr. George Adney Payne. I am pleased to tell you that we have arrived at the most amicable and honourable settlement that was ever arranged between a body of men and a proprietor. Mr. Gibbons, as you know, is one of the directors both of the Hippodrome and the Empress, and we of the Variety Artists' Federation recently had some difficulty with him—the same difficulty, I may mention, that is now existent between us and many other managers. And I, for the Variety Artists' Federation, as well as for the profession generally, stand here to tell you that we have arranged everything most amicably with Mr. Gibbons. Mr. Gibbons has met us in a way that only a gentleman could meet a body of men, and the solution arrived at to-day is the forerunner of brighter times for the artist and the proprietor. In a friendly and gentlemanly spirit Mr. Gibbons met us and agreed to everything he possibly could for the amelioration of our grievances and the betterment of our condition. We have also got the support of Mr. Payne. I have now the greatest pleasure in calling upon Mr. Gibbons to say a few words.

MR. WALTER GIBBONS, whose appearance before the footlights was the signal for a loud and continued outburst of applause, said: I have to thank Mr. Joe O'Gorman for the many kind things he has said concerning myself. As to the settlement that has been arrived at this afternoon, I can scarcely do more than endorse his remarks on the subject. We have come to a most amicable agreement, which, I am sure, is satisfactory to both parties. I think Mr. O'Gorman, in his modesty, has forgotten to say that as a result of the deliberations of his Federation, they have subscribed between them thirty guineas for the object of this matinée, and this sum, of course, is in addition to what has been already subscribed and paid for admission at these doors. This will prove to you how generous the artists that amuse you can be when they have a feeling in their hearts to help other people connected with this profession. I am sorry Mr. Grimes is absent to-day. He has undergone a very serious operation, but is expected to be out and about in a week's time. I hope that all of you will have a very merry Christmas and a happy New Year; and I can say to Mr. O'Gorman, "My hand in yours" (suiting the action to the word), and I am pleased all these differences are ended, and in future we shall work together to give you the best entertainment we can.

After Mr. Gibbons had finished speaking, the company on the stage joined hands and sang "For Auld Lang Syne."

As to the afternoon's programme, it contained over ninety names, but it was not, of course, possible for all to appear. The entertainment opened with a magnificent performance of Thomas's "Raymond" by the massed orchestras of the Holborn Empire, the Duchess, Balham, the Brixton Empress and Hippodrome, the Putney Hippodrome, the Grand Palace, Clapham Junction, and the Croydon Empire. Mr. James Sale, the conductor of the Holborn Empire, ably directed the operations of this unusually large band. In regard to the other items, Miss Vesta Victoria gave her inimitable rendering of "Waiting at the church," Dutch Daly delighted everybody with his concertina playing and Mr. Herbert Darnley's company created the utmost merriment with the pantomimic sketch, Muscles. Miss Lily Burnand submitted an agreeable number in the song "Picture postcards," and Mr. Sam Spira's imitations were both interesting and attractive. Miss Maud Esmond sings of "Up in the sky," Miss Therese de Silver's "Mistletoe," Mr. Harry Maynard's "Good-bye," Mr. Lew Lake and company in the burgling sketch, Miss Minnie Paget's concertina playing and singing, Mr. Eddie Noble's dancing to his own pianoforte accompaniment, the rollicking fun of Messrs. Raleigh, Abraham, and company, the smart cycling feats of the Five Derringtons, the entertaining "business" of Manley and Fairfax, the coon melodies of the Dalwoods, and the vocalism of Miss Beatrice Renee, afforded excellent contributions to the afternoon's enjoyment. The manager and treasurer for the matinée was Mr. Nelson Francis, Mr. Francis Winchcombe fulfilling the duties of acting-manager, Mr. R. L. Gaston acting as stage-manager, and Mr. Harry Goodson as hon. secretary.

MISS ROSE HAMILTON opens to-night at the Metropole, Glasgow, in the Albert and Edmunds' production of The Babes. She is featuring "There's always room for a girl," "Zuyder Zee," and "Rosie is waiting." Miss Ada Martine, who is playing second girl in the same production, will make a feature of "Bamboo Bungalow."

KARL KAPS, the well-known writer and arranger of dance music, has completed for Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. a bright and melodious valse founded on Mills and Scott's popular song, "By the side of the Zuyder Zee." This number will be played in hundreds of dancing rooms this season; the demand for copies and band parts is quite phenomenal.

MISS ANNIE MARS will on Monday next at the Alhambra appear in a new Japanese song-scena, entitled, "Home again, my cherry blossom," written by Charles Wilmott and composed by the youthful genius Hermann E. Darewski. The production will be mounted with pretty scenery by Ryan, and the costumes will be by Altas. This number is published by Francis, Day, and Hunter.

THE first large edition of the "King Pantomime" quadrilles, arranged by Karl Kaps, was bespoken by "the trade" before it was printed, and disappeared as though by magic the day it was published, but by dint of keeping presses going night and day the supply is now within measurable distance of catching up to the demand. The quadrilles embody the following choice morceaux from Messrs. Francis and Day's recent successes:—"When love comes knocking at the door," "My Irish Rosie," "Welcome home, boys! welcome home!" "Arrah Wanna!" "My Castle in Spain," "Snowflakes," "Billy Muggins," "Let me sing," "She's proud and she's beau-ti-ful," "Alice, where art thou going?" "Oysters and clams," "Nobody," "Good old Union Jack," "My cosy caravan," "Henny Klein," "Rosy's cosy bungalow," "Wouldn't you like to learn to love me?" "We parted on the shore," and "Grow, little mushroom, grow!"

THE VARIETY ARTISTS DISPUTE.

The friction which had, unhappily and unexpectedly, occurred between Mr. Gibbons and the Variety Artists' Federation has been put an end to, and friendly relations established which all parties agree should be permanently retained. The cause of the dispute and the terms on which it has been terminated are interesting to the music-hall world, and affect, in an important degree, the welfare of all concerned.

Our readers are conversant with the original grounds of the dispute between the Federation and Mr. Gibbons, and we are now in a position to say that the delay in effecting a settlement led to an alliance being formed between the Federation, the Musicians' Union, and the National Association of Theatrical Employees, and the intervention, on their behalf, of the London Trades Council, representing the whole of the organisations connected with the various occupations and industries in the Metropolitan area.

There had been frequent consultations between the Trades Council and the Committee representing the Alliance, and the Trades Council appointed Mr. B. Cooper, L.C.C., Mr. J. Gregory (chairman of the Trades Council), and Mr. James McDonald (sec.) to wait on Mr. Gibbons on Saturday last. These gentlemen were unable to meet Mr. Gibbons on that day, but secured two interviews on Monday, at which Mr. Gibbons placed his views before them, and consented to meet the representatives of the Alliance on Tuesday, at three o'clock. At a meeting of the Committee of the Alliance on Monday evening, the Trades Council representatives reported their interview with Mr. Gibbons, and the following were appointed to meet Mr. Gibbons as arranged:—Mr. Frank Gerald, secretary of the Variety Artists' Federation; Mr. William Johnson, general secretary of the National Association of Theatrical Employees; and Mr. C. Jesson, L.C.C., London secretary of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union.

At the time appointed these gentlemen met Mr. Gibbons at his offices, No. 1, Durham-street, Strand, when the views of the three societies were submitted. During the interview Mr. Adney Payne arrived, and took part in the proceedings. Mr. Gibbons expressed his willingness to grant the request of the stage employees on all points not covered by his arrangements. He also agreed to meet the wishes of the Musicians' Union in a similar manner, and an agreement was drawn up and signed by Mr. Gibbons and Mr. Frank Gerald satisfactory to both parties in relation to the claims of the artists and Mr. Gibbons. The discussion was of a most friendly nature throughout, and all parties agreed as to the desirability of a mutual understanding and the protection of all interests represented—the managers, artists, and workers in the profession. The misunderstandings which had arisen were entirely removed, and there is every reason to believe that in future the most amicable settlement will be possible in any little matter requiring consideration.

Mr. Adney Payne kindly made an appointment for an early date with the representatives of the Alliance to discuss with them various matters they expressed a wish to submit to him; and it is hoped that a friendly agreement will be arrived at in the near future between the three societies and all music hall proprietors.

The present agreement marks a new departure in the music hall world, which, if generally adopted, is sure to have most satisfactory results.

The following are the terms agreed upon between Mr. Walter Gibbons and the V.A.F.:—

(1) Matinées to be paid for; but an exception is to be made in the case of exclusive contracts at the Holborn Empire and referred, if necessary, to the Arbitration Boad.

(2) No commission to be stopped when artists book direct.

(3) No transfer of artists without their consent.

(4) No variation of times that will interfere with artists' other engagements without their consent.

(5) A Board of Arbitration, consisting of two representatives of Mr. Gibbons' and two of the V.A.F., with an independent chairman appointed by the four.

(6) Six months' notice is to be given by either party to vary or suspend this agreement.

It is assumed the Board of Arbitration will deal with the Barring Clause. The Musicians' proposals were a minimum salary of 36s. per week—matinées 6s., in one show a night houses, and 3s. in two shows a night houses. The Stage Employees rates of pay to be 24s. per week for day-work, exclusive of show money. In two shows a night houses 2s. 6d. per night and 2s. for each matinée. Daymen, for day and night-work, 36s. per week.

THE EMPIRE, OXFORD,

The Oxford magistrates granted Mr. Frank Stuart, on Tuesday at the City Court, Oxford, a dramatic licence for the re-opening of the Empire, Oxford, which in future will be known as the East Oxford. Extensive alterations and improvements are in hand. Electric light is being installed throughout. The stage is being enlarged, and the roof over the stage raised twenty feet. The building will be heated with a service of hot-water pipes and radiators, and will have extra emergency exits and numerous other improvements. The licence is to take effect from Feb. 25, 1907, if the alterations and improvements are carried out by that date.

Mr. Albany Ward, the former lessee, sends us a résumé of the facts connected with the refusal to him last summer of the Empire Theatre licence, which was held by him for six years.

In 1903 the Bench asked for structural alterations in the theatre. Mr. Buckell, architect, of London, was called in by Mr. Ward, and all alterations suggested by the Bench, as well as many others on his own initiative, were made. The building was seen and passed by the Justices. In 1904 the Bench requested Mr. Ward to put in a fireproof curtain. This was done, and the building again inspected and passed. Many minor alterations were made. Late in 1905 the Bench requested Mr. Ward not to allow any cinematograph shows. These he stopped.

On June 6 he applied for a licence; and though no objection was made by any person or the police, or any suggestion of mismanagement, the licence was refused. Notice of appeal to Quarter Sessions was given, which the Bench allowed.

Mr. Ward was told the appeal could not be heard that Sessions, and Saturday, July 28, was fixed for the hearing.

Mr. Ackland, the Recorder, decided that there was no appeal as no order had been made. Mr. Ward then applied for an order to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued, and the Judge in Chambers granted this.

The Theatrical Managers' Association not seeing their way clear to give any assistance in the matter, Mr. Ward did not consider himself financially strong enough to fight any further; and, the place being closed, and Mr. Ward's chief source of income destroyed, he was compelled to abstain from any further action.

Public opinion was roused, and some little agitation was the result. As Mr. Ward had determined his tenancy of the Empire, Mr. Frank Stuart made application, and, after one or two adjournments, and having promised to carry out certain alterations demanded by the Bench, a licence was at length granted to him.

Mr. Ward suggests that the Bench really never intended to again renew the licence of the Empire; and would not have done so had not public opinion become too strong for them.

CHRISTMAS VARIETY CARNIVAL.

The Yuletide variety programmes, both in the centre of amusement and in the suburbs, present a bewildering series of attractions, in spite of the depletion of the ranks of the stars to brighten pantomime.

On Christmas Eve, at the Hippodrome, Mr. Frank Parker will produce The Treasure Ship in Fairy Seas, a beautiful extravaganza, in which many adventures above and beneath the sea will be shown with all the beauty and completeness for which the house is celebrated. We are promised a wonderful combat with an octopus, and mermaids will be represented by Miss Annette Kellerman, the heroine of the Channel, and two of the Finney Sisters. Miss Simeta Marsden will play the part of a young diver. Mr. Carl Kiefert will be responsible for the much-talked-of "Swimming Waltz" and also the incidental music throughout.

In the strong and varied programme at the Tivoli the chief novelty will be the travesty Robin Waller, in which Mr. Arthur Roberts will appear in the title-rôle. A newcomer, Miss Helen D'Aubigny (from the Paris Opera House), is a vocalist who has already won fame in the principal cities of Europe, and is said to possess a voice of exceptional beauty and power. Clark and Hamilton, in a new act; Clarice Mayne; Alice Raymond, with a novel performance, in which she is assisted from an unexpected quarter by handsome John Kurkamp; Dutch Daly, Herbert La Martine, Chas. Norton, Datas, &c., will all aid in an entertainment that is certainly hard to beat.

As already announced in these columns, Mr. Joe Elvin will be a leading attraction at the Oxford in the new sketch by Wal Pink, The Sunny Seaside; and Mr. Blyth Pratt's first Christmas programme will also be made interesting by the demonstrations of The Fays, eminent thaumaturgists, who are appearing daily with special variety programme at 2.45; Arthur Lennard, Mendel, Bonnie Goodwin, Ada Cerito, and Nellie Wallace are also of the company.

At the Palace Mr. Alfred Butt will present Mr. Harry Vernon and company in a Christmas idyll, entitled Christmas Eve. This playlet has been capitally mounted, and contains a pretty story. What will probably prove one of the wildest dances that has ever been seen by the British public will be presented by the Molassoes, a quartette of disciples of the terpsichorean art that seem to rouse the audience to the greatest pitch of excitement. Little Tich will be exclusively engaged. Mr. R. A. Roberts, with his new protean sketch, entitled Ringing the Changes; Princess Trixie, the spelling and calculating mare; and Chirgwin, the White-Eyed Kaffir.

Mr. J. L. Graydon, who now occupies the proud position of doyen of caterers, was accustomed in former days to present a sketch specially written for the festive season, and at the Middlesex we have seen highly creditable versions of Dickens's "Christmas Carol." This year his bill is mainly restricted to variety. Mr. Esmond and Miss Edith Evelyn will, however, appear in a clever and bright musical duologue, and Lee and Bentley will also present a sketch. The Boisset Troupe, Lily Burnand, and Tom Leamore are among the big liners.

At the Paragon the famous Dunedin Troupe will appear after their triumphs in South America. Whit Cunliffe, the typical topical comedian; Florence Esdaile, the operatic prima donna; the Gotham Quartette; the Harvey Boys; and Lew Lake and company, in My Pal Jerry, will also entertain.

A strong card in the Canterbury bill will be Joe Elvin and company, in the sketch Trespassers Beware. Mendel, the blind pianist; Nellie Wallace, the low comedy lady; Kurkamp and Raymond; Phil Ray; Carter Livesey; Valazzi, the famous juggler; Chris Richards, and others will also entertain. "The Fox Hunt" will be vividly portrayed by Ruffell's Bioscope.

A special feature of next week's programme at the Metropolitan will be the Urbanora films, including the famous picture "Climbing the Dolomites." The special engagement of Miss Simeta Marsden is also announced, and other attractions will be Price and Revost, the Boissets, in The Dock Strike, Hal Forde, Chris Richards, Blake and Granby, Ambrose Thorne, Chas. Vincent, Cinizelli, and the Five Whiteleys.

On Guard, with Mr. Ernest Ball, the popular actor-vocalist in the principal character, will form the chief attraction in the Christmas holiday programme at the Empire, Camberwell. In addition to Mr. Ball, some fifty persons will be engaged in the sketch, including a military band. Three new scenes are being specially painted for the production, and the military uniforms and costumes are being executed by Clarkson. The scena will be produced under the direction of Mr. Gerald Stevens, for many years with the late Sir Henry Irving.

In his holiday list at the Royal Standard, Mr. T. S. Dickie is presenting J. L. Shine and company in Hogmanay, Bijou Russell, the Celtic Comedy Trio, Florence Esdaile, Herbert La Martine, Lionel Vaughan's company in In Trouble, Frank Léon, the Two Bees in The Man in the Moon, the Maitland Comedy Trio in The Portrait, and others.

"The Mysterious Cross," Chirgwin, Leo Dryden, and Millie Payne are billed as the principal attractions for Monday at the Chelsea Palace, other attractions being Ian Colquhoun, Will Goodwin and company in Repentance, the Stevens Troupe, Ambrose Thorne, and Marquis and Mignonette.

At the South London, on Monday, will appear George d'Albert and company, Frank Sylvo, the Two Whites, Tom Hughes, Beatrice Renée, J. P. Ling, Emmie Ames, Joe Archer, and the Raymond Trio. The indispensable Ruffell's Bioscope, with seasonable films, will also be an attraction.

To have a "Costers' Beanfeast" at Christmastime seems a trifle out of place; nevertheless, at Shepherd's Bush Empire Mr. Alec Hurley will present his successful sketch of that name. In addition Tom Costello will give his views on the Suffragette question. Young and De Voie, a "team" of American expert dancers, will "show Britishers something new in the dancing line," and there are James Brady, Jeannie Mackay, a new series of Bioscope Pictures, the Welsh Wanderers, and others.

The Alhambra, with the sensational success of the Zancigs—whose show has received the approval of the King and been witnessed by the Duke of Connaught—and the two fine ballets Parisiana and L'Amour still winning nightly triumphs, will not present any remarkable novelty until January, when the alterations that are now progressing will be completed. The Urbanora pictures will illustrate Christmas incidents, and other attractions include De Witt, Burns and Torrance, and "The Awakening of the Toys."

The Empire in Holloway-road will submit a programme scintillating with stars. First and foremost is Ernest Shand with a new budget of songs and patter. Billy McClain, together with Miss Cordelia, is a certain winner, and the powerful dramatic sketch, The Yellow Fang, has a place on the bill. Mention must also be made of those talented artists Lennie and Hast, who will be seen in an artistis fantasy, The Sea Nymph.

The Christmas attractions at the suburban houses of the Moss-Stoll circuit are many and varied. At Hackney Empire Mr. Herbert Darnley's sketch, The Skirmishers, has pride of place in the bill. Verno and Voyce will present Jack Sheppard, and three other turns that have always been great favourites at this house are the Findens, Jack Camp, and the "Punch and Judy Girls."

Louie Freear is the premier attraction at the New Cross Empire during Christmas week. As "Snooks" this delightful artist never fails to interest audiences of all classes. Michael Nolan, the great Irish comedian, Dot Hardy, and the four Royal Welshmen are other numbers.

That much-discussed lady, La Milo, is relied upon by the Stratford Empire management to pack the house at every performance during Christmas week; but it must not be imagined that this lady, despite her undoubted charms, is the only attraction in this bill, for we find that Frank and Jen Latona, Theo Hardeen, Victor Newman, Hurley and Cole, and the Mascotte Trio have also a place in the programme.

The chief attraction at the Empire will still be The Débutante, with Adeline Genée in the title-part. Mr. George Lashwood, most successful of swell impersonators, will appear until further notice; Hymack will continue to mystify and amuse in his own original way; and Burning to Sing will continue its humorous career. Arthur Prince, the Five Olracs, and Herbert Lloyd will be other strong attractions.

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The London County Council met on Tuesday at the County Hall, Spring Gardens.

THE ALHAMBRA.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee reported with reference to drawings submitted by Mr. W. M. Brutton, showing an external iron staircase proposed to be erected at the Alhambra Palace, Leicester-square, for the purpose of providing additional means of escape from the ballet-rooms; certain alterations to be made in the existing o.p. dressing-room staircase next Hunt's-court; a bay proposed to be constructed on the Leicester-square frontage; and the provision of a new gallery entrance on the o.p. side of the premises. They recommended that Mr. Brutton be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the six drawings submitted by him, provided certain stated conditions be complied with.

BATTERSEA EMPIRE.

The Committee had had before them drawings submitted by Mr. A. E. Brooker, showing how it is proposed to comply with certain of the suggestions made by the Council for the structural improvement of the Battersea Empire, York-road, Battersea. They recommended that Mr. Brooker be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the two drawings submitted by him with regard to the method of compliance with certain of the suggestions made for the structural improvement of the building, provided certain stated conditions be complied with.

HACKNEY EMPIRE.

The Committee approved of drawings submitted by Messrs. F. Matcham and Co., showing a proposal to provide additional dressing-room accommodation at the Hackney Empire provided that the usual conditions be complied with.

THE LONDON.

The Committee had considered a drawing, submitted by Messrs. F. J. Eedle and Meyers, showing a proposal to provide a permanent iron barrier at the London Music Hall, Shoreditch High-street, with a view to meeting the Council's requirements with regard to the egress of the first and the admission of the second audiences, and recommended that Messrs. Eedle and Meyers be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted provided that the usual conditions be complied with.

LONDON PAVILION.

The Committee also recommended that Messrs. Wylson and Long be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted by them with regard to the proposed cinematograph apparatus and additional stage lighting to be provided in the roof at the London Pavilion Music Hall, provided that certain stated conditions be complied with.

The Building Act Committee recommended that the Council consent to the retention of four electric arc lamps and a projecting sign in front of the London Pavilion, as shown on the plan, dated Nov. 8, submitted with the application of Messrs. Wylson and Long, on behalf of the directors, such consent being subject to the usual conditions.

FIRE CURTAINS.

The Committee reported that they had considered drawings, submitted by Mr. W. G. R. Sprague, showing the proposed arrangements in connection with the fire curtains to be provided at the new theatres in course of erection in Shaftesbury-avenue and Rupert-street, and Shaftesbury-avenue and Wardour-street. They had also considered drawings submitted by Mr. T. J. Digby, showing the arrangements in connection with the electrical installations at these theatres. They recommended that Mr. Sprague and Mr. Digby be informed that they had no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawings submitted provided that the usual conditons be complied with.

HICKS' THEATRE.

The Council, on Dec. 20, 1904, approved, subject to certain conditions, drawings of a theatre building, to be known as Hicks' Theatre, which it was proposed to erect at the corner of Shaftesbury-avenue and Rupert-street. The building is approaching completion, and it is desired to open it to the public on Dec. 24. In order to enable this to be done it is necessary that the lessee should be in possession of the Council's certificate under the Metropolis Management and Building Acts Amendment Act, 1878. The Committee considered that a certificate in respect of the premises should be sealed, so that it may be issued as soon as the Council's requirements shall have been completed, and they recommended accordingly.

THE PLAYHOUSE.

The Committee recommended that Messrs. Blow and Billerey be informed that the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted by them with regard to the King's room in the basement at the Playhouse, Northumberland-avenue, provided the regulations of the Council with regard to lighting be complied with.

THE SAVOY.

The Committee have approved of drawings, submitted by Mr. A. Blomfield Jackson, showing proposed alterations in the position of certain electric light points and radiators at the Savoy Theatre, in connection with the provision of a new entrance from Savoy-court.

CHRISTMAS RECESS.

The Committee recommended that they be authorised, during the Christmas recess, to deal with any matters, included in their reference, which may require immediate action on behalf of the Council, provided that the Committee do act only upon such decisions as may be unanimously arrived at by the members present, and report to the Council any action taken under this authority.

All the above recommendations were agreed to, and at the conclusion of the sitting the Council adjourned for the Christmas recess.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE TIVOLI.

The Yuletide shopping interferes most unmistakably with business at the halls, and, however attractive the bill, managers and proprietors cannot avoid the almost universal slump that sets in during this, one of the dullest weeks of the year from the entertainer's point of view. With the sketch bogey "laid," we are not surprised to find a couple of sketches in Mr. Joseph Wilson's current scheme of amusement. The first of these, called The Night Owls, is a mere incident, though it is grandiosely termed a comedy. A husband who has dined and wined well with a bachelor friend, brings him home. The half-tipsy couple mistake a full-dressed costumier's model for the wife, who, in her turn, abuses and "bashes" with an umbrella the second person "singular," under the impression that he is the first person "plural." On the latter's part, a pretence of fierce jealousy and wholesale abuse of his bachelor chum, who is treated with contumely, entirely spoil the plan of the lady for punishing her lord for his too indulgent view of his responsibilities. The little piece is chiefly remarkable for some excellent acting by Mr. Guy Rupert Lane as the bachelor. Mr. William Lee and Miss Helen Bentley do all that is necessary with the other characters. Miss Phœbe Mercer and Mr. Langhorne Burton have in Miss Zoe Herbert's sketch, Mistakes Will Happen—a crude title, by the way—an excellent vehicle for comedy. The fun of the dialogue is based on the old game of cross purposes exploited in the comedy of the theatres as well as in the broader farce of the halls. The lady of the duologue in this instance comes in error to a matrimonial agency instead of a dog-fancier's, in order to replace a terrier known as General. In sympathising with her grief at the loss of her pet, the agent thinks it is her husband of whom she is speaking. Explanations ensue, of course, and the curtain falls to the strains of "The Wedding March." Miss Phœbe Mercer makes a handsome and vivacious widow, and the agent finds in Mr. Langhorne Burton an actor with a light and agreeable style, who gives all possible effect to the equivoque of Miss Zoe Herbert.

Mimics loom largely in the bill. Early in the evening Miss Lilian Elfreda shows how cleverly she can copy the methods of such dissimilar stars as Miss Marie Lloyd, Miss Kate Carney, and Mr. Gus Elen, whom she imitates with an accuracy and fidelity to the originals that are remarkable. Mr. Wilson Hallett, who has been winning triumphs on the other side of the Atlantic, returns with his admirable presentments of the manners and speech of children, whom he makes quite amusing. A special feature of his welcome interlude is the singing of "Daddy" in the voice of a little girl. In this there is an unexpected touch of pathos. Mr. J. P. Ling pokes fun—and very good fun too—at the entertainment at a village hall, where the local choral society sings "Hail, smiling morn," and other bucolic amateurs make more or less successful efforts to entertain. Mr. Leo Tell is an animal imitator who reproduces a whole farmyard in his selection of animals and birds.

A newcomer to the Tivoli is Mr. Horace Lane, a comedian from the ranks of the theatre, whose agreeable light comedy is most effectively displayed in two songs, the latter of which is entitled, "What more can I do for you, little girl?" an excellent number, that should do the new aspirant for variety fame capital service. Miss Lucy Weston, looking very charming indeed in white, sings of the experiences of Mary Ellen, a Lancashire lass, sent to London, who follows very closely mother's advice, until she finds anchorage in the haven of matrimony. Mary Ellen is quite an interesting personage, and pretty withal.

Little Tich, the star of the bill, evokes the usual compliments, expressed by loud laughter, by his park-keeper impersonation, and shows his powers of travesty in his droll sketch of a lady serpentine dancer. A bright and entertaining duologue, Getting Even, is presented by that clever pair Fred Sinclair and Gracie Whiteford; drollery marks the entertainment of Will Van Allen; there is topical smartness all through the interlude of Tilbury and Prior, the former being excellent at the piano; and other contributors to the bill are Carrie Laurie's youngsters; the Four Aces; and Mr. Jack Camp, a parodist of the first rank. Mr. James Howell, in front, is very popular here.

WALTHAMSTOW PALACE.

Although the week immediately preceding Christmas may, generally speaking, be set down as an unprofitable season in the world of amusement, the state of business at the handsome palace the destinies of which are so ably controlled by Mr. Arthur J. Barclay gives no indication of any falling off. Certainly one missed, on Monday night, the familiar presence of the popular manager, who was agreeably engaged in the opening of another palatial hall in an adjacent suburb, the joint management of the two establishments, as is well known, having been placed in Mr. Barclay's able hands. But the absence of "the chief" is less to be deplored when he leaves behind him such a capable and hard-working deputy as Mr. Geo. F. Slatter, whose mere presence is sufficient guarantee that "business will be carried on as usual."

The strong card of the week is the "dramatic and moral episode" entitled A Lost Woman, performed by Mr. Fred G. Brooke and company. The little play, written by Dora Deane and Fred G. Brooke, deals with a certain phase of fast life in Paris, and is well constructed and full of startling incident. An innocent young English wife, decoyed into a den of profligacy, is beset by the villains. As Pierre Cousset, a detective or "man-hunter," Mr. Fred G. Brooke has a capital part, in which his alertness, good-humour, and ease serve him in good stead. The actor has plenty of opportunities throughout, and makes full use of an effective part. Mr. J. C. Aubrey is very good as the hypnotist, Felix Lascelles, his villainy being well emphasised. Mr. Harry Hiller is manly as the Rev. Harry Tracy, and Mr. Richard Cowell gives a good account of the maudlin artist, Louis Cordelle. As the arch-villainess, Emile Lousaine, Miss Dora Deane plays with much distinction, and Miss Louise Hampton is nervous and highly strung as the unfortunate victim. A Lost Woman is handsomely staged and costumed.

Miss Katie Marsh is bright and entertaining in her scena "Grave and Gay," acting, singing, and dancing with plenty of spirit and considerable versatility. Larola, the funny man with funny ways, excites alternate laughter and admiration by his clever juggling feats and his touches of humour. A very agreeable turn is that of Miss Rose Cabani, whose two songs are loudly applauded, especially one with the refrain, "That's good enough for me." The Harvey Boys (three in number) as London Messengers, give a laughable boxing act in That Was Me, besides indulging in much amusing patter. The popular James Fawn is quite up to his accustomed form, and might well claim to give points to some the younger school in the matter of distinct enunciation. His well-known effusion, "The Henpecked Jossers' Club," goes as swingingly as ever, and is responsible for no end of mirth. Miss Rosie Lloyd, looking very chic and pretty, sings her two songs to a running accompaniment of laughter and applause. Her first contribution is a pretty song, "Love me for a little while," prettily sung, while her coster ditty, "Never introduce your bloke to a lidy friend," is warmly received as it deserves. An immense success is made by Mr. Will English, the coloured comedian, who has an apparently inexhaustible fund of humour to draw upon. His singing, talking, and dancing are all admirable in their various ways, and the audience show a disposition to encore everything the artist does, says, or sings. Notably is this the case with the concluding portion of his "show," in which he amusingly burlesques many eccentric styles of walking supposed to be in vogue in various districts of the metropolis. These are really clever and amusing. Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope winds up an agreeable programme in an interesting manner, with, as usual, a display of some clever films. The overture for the week is the melodious "Poet and Peasant" of Suppé, which receives a well-balanced interpretation by the Palace orchestra under the musicianly bâton of Mr. H. Petersen.

THE SOUTH LONDON.

No depreciation in business has been apparent at the South London this week, despite the imminence of the holidays, and the proceedings have gone merrily in the presence of the customary large audiences. Contributions to the programme are made by well-known artists, favour being early secured by Mr. Harry Bancroft, whose resonant voice is melodiously employed in the rendering of "The Seagull," which soars high in estimation. The song possesses sentiment of a sort well attuned to the popular ear, and Mr. Bancroft sings it in a way that proves irresistible to the audience, who are loud in praise. Clever patterers and comedians are found in Ferris and Farnley, who greatly divert the audience with their amusing cross-talk and skilful dancing.

Versatility is the key-note of the turn provided by Marie Terry and J. S. Bentley. Attired in hunting garb, they sing a duet and dance, and later the young lady indulges in a ballad about the sun and the moon, supplementing it with a neat pas seul. A number of extraordinary acrobatic feats performed by the comedian on a chair and table complete the interlude, which throughout wins well-deserved cheers. Dutch Daly reappears in the scene of many triumphs, and amuses his audience with funny anecdotes. He plays the concertina with his customary facility, and his rendering of "Sing me to sleep" and other selections is agreeably varied by imitations of the chiming of bells and the playing of a bugle. Rubie and Elsie Redfern give smart duets on the banjo, an instrument which they are able to manipulate while joining in a clever dance. They are finished performers, and their efforts are loudly and frequently commended.

Suits of white flannel are selected by Starr and Jerome in which to sing their duet with the refrain, "Good-bye, Mazeppa," the name, apparently, of a foreign maiden with whom tender memories are associated. The couple sing tunefully, and one of them is very expert as a sand-dancer, executing some skilful movements. Forest and King provide a humorous ten minutes with comedy business and dancing, a comely young lady also executing a series of hand-springs, which are deservedly applauded. Mr. Harry Maynard earns the sympathy of the audience in his song "Does that sun shine all for you?" and moves them to mirth by the piquancy of the patter attached to the injunction "Don't grumble, girls." Mr. Ted Cowan gives a droll turn to the phrase "Deary, deary me!" and a subsequent effusion also arouses laughter. A lively sketch is provided in Bank Clerks, played by Charles Baldwin's comedians. The playlet, which is given in dumb show, portrays the misadventures of a couple of clerks, who occupy positions behind the counter of a bank. The fun is at times very furious, but it is leavened by melodramatic incidents depicting the attempt to rob the safe, and a fight between the villain and his confederate. The little piece is played with considerable energy, the vagaries of an office-boy being among the droller features. Ruffell's Bioscope shows a varied set of pictures, which are accorded general favour. Mr. William Payne, the manager of the South London, was absent on the occasion of our visit, directing the stage and supplying some of the items for an entertainment given by Mr. Henry Tozer, one of the directors of the hall, to the employees of the Westminster City Council, of which Mr. Tozer is a member. The front of the house was, however, well looked after by Mr. H. B. Wincote, the acting-manager.

MR. TOM LEAMORE IN A NEW CHARACTER.

Mr. Tom Leamore, the popular variety theatre artist, has hitherto been associated in the public mind with the highly humorous impersonation of comic constables, funny firemen, slatternly females, the much-married man, and numerous other equally eccentric characters. On Monday evening, at the Paragon, Mr. Leamore essayed, for the first time we believe quite a new type of character, and attained a degree of success that is surprising when one bears in mind that he has hitherto been known to fame as a comedian who worked upon broad burlesque lines, entirely removed from the domain of tragedy. An audience—more particularly the occupants of the gallery—are not always disposed to take a comedian seriously, and he is no doubt to some extent handicapped on this account if he ventures beyond the limits of the purely humorous.

Mr. Leamore appeared in a new and original dramatic scena, entitled Sweet Liberty; or, Convict 99. In a dismal cell we see the wretched man who has been condemned to a long term of imprisonment. He is weighed down with heavy irons, and laments his hard fate in a song, into which is introduced a thrilling account of his trial and the separation from the only being for whom he has any affection—his daughter. The song and spoken words were both well-rendered. "I will have my freedom if I get killed in an attempt to escape" is the burden of the prisoner's mournful soliloquy. The door opens, and enters a warder; he displays an inclination to jeer at the prisoner, who has, it seems, given the officials trouble on some previous occasions. The convict assumes a submissive attitude, and implores the warder to remove the irons. The official is deceived by the man's manner; he thinks that at last the unruly convict has been subdued, and he takes off the heavy shackles. But no sooner is this done than he is attacked by the desperate prisoner, who has made up his mind to attempt to regain his freedom at any cost. The cell becomes the scene of a fearful struggle. The two men fight like enraged wild beasts for supremacy. They become gradually exhausted, but the convict, seizing a stool, strikes his opponent a deadly blow, and the warder falls to rise no more. Then the prisoner, after throwing the clanking irons on to the body of the dead man, opens the cell door and disappears. The sound of gun-shots is heard, and Convict 99 returns with a ghastly wound in his left breast. He is followed by some half dozen warders, who cover him with their loaded guns. His attempt at escape has failed; but it matters little, for Convict 99 has only a few brief moments to live. He reels and falls to the ground a dead man. Mr. Leamore played the part of the prisoner with much vigour and earnestness. The fight with the warder—a rôle ably sustained by Mr. James Loft—proved most realistic, and evoked the hearty applause of the audience. Mr. Leamore can be cordially congratulated on the success of his new departure.

The top-liner at the Euston is Arthur Roberts; topicalities at the piano will be given by Tilbury and Prior; and Lily Langtry, Nina Marteno, and the Sisters Caselli will be on the spindle side of the company.

The Milton-Rays will be a prominent attraction at the Bedford with their rollicking sketch Cruise of the Calabar, and Hymack, Cline and Clark, Fred Keston, and Ruffell's Bioscope will be among the other turns doing duty for Mr. B. Pearce Lucas at Christmastide.

STOKE NEWINGTON PALACE.

PRIVATE VIEW.

Mr. Albert Gilmer, the managing-director of the Palace Theatre of Varieties, Stoke Newington, held a reception at that establishment on Thursday afternoon, which was attended by a considerable number of well-known local people. As we have already announced, the Stoke Newington Palace will open on Monday as a two-houses-a-night music hall. Mr. Gilmer, who for so many years was the manager of the Oxford, will have complete control of this, London's latest variety house, and his wide experience and personal popularity should do much to ensure success for the new enterprise. The auditorium and stage have been brought up to date in order to suit the requirements of the twice-nightly programme, and thus, for the first time, the inhabitants of Stoke Newington will find in their midst all that is brightest and best in a music hall and its style of entertainment. Mr. Norfolk Megone has been engaged to preside over the orchestra, every member of which is a picked musician, and here it may be stated that it is Mr. Gilmer's intention to make a special feature of the band. Mr. T. J. Robinson, who occupied the post of acting-manager at the Stoke Newington Palace since it was opened as a theatre, is to retain that position under Mr. Gilmer.

During the afternoon Mr. Gilmer, who received quite an ovation on his appearance before the footlights, delivered a brief address, as follows:—Ladies and gentlemen, on behalf of Mr. W. Clifford-Weblyn, our chairman, my colleague, and myself, I beg to thank you for your presence here to-day, which I take as an expression of your goodwill towards us. I can assure you that I thoroughly realise the responsibility that has been placed upon my shoulders, and I shall leave no stone unturned to present to you an entertainment which will reflect credit upon ourselves, this theatre, and Stoke Newington. I have had great difficulties to surmount in securing my artists. Fortunately, I have been successful in making such excellent arrangements as will enable me to give you a bright and varied programme. I am led to hope that in the near future a reasonable spirit of free trade will prevail among my friendly rivals, and that the barring which has always been such a bone of contention between artists and managers alike, will be adjusted so as to bring prosperity to all. I thank you all again for your presence here to-day, and hope I shall have the happiness of seeing you on many future occasions.

A most admirable programme of music was played from three to five o'clock by Mr. Norfolk Megone's Meistersingers Orchestra. Mr. Megone's noteworthy composition, "The Eccentric Club March," was included in the selections, and the reply, "He's all right" to the question, "What's the matter with Albert Gilmer?" was shouted most lustily by both orchestra and audience. The other performances were taken from Lohengrin, The Catch of the Season, Faust, Tannhäuser, The Beauty of Bath, William Tell, Messager's Les Deux Pigeons, Ganne's "La Housarde," Allier's "Polka des Clowns," Sousa's "Uncle Sammy," and Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance." Everybody was delighted at the orchestration of the different numbers.

Among those who sent telegrams wishing success to the Stoke Newington Palace were Miss Marie Lloyd, Dr. Distin Maddick, and Mr. Joseph Wilson. One of the later arrivals during the afternoon was Mr. Jack de Frece.

"BACK NUMBERS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Back Number" (whose singular alias I utilise in the plural), puts in a good word for the old-time comic songs. A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind—and I am another fellow feeling that way. "Back Number's" sentiments with regard to some of his namesakes will, I am sure, win a responsive echo from many who are approaching or who have passed life's fatal forty.

"The Mouse-trap man," "Up in a balloon," "Any ornaments for your firestoves?"—why, the very mention of such classics of the halls is conducive, if one only be built that way, to day-dreams reminiscent. They suggest, amongst scores of other early favourites, that most tuneful of "comic ballads," "She danced like a fairy," the fickle heroine of which delectable ditty—like so many of the famous Lion Comique's admirers—"doated on Leybourne." "Drivel" some of the old lyrics may, or may not, have been; still, taking haphazard a batch of present-day "comic" song words, one is somewhat puzzled to find out wherein lies that "vast improvement" of which we hear so often so much. With all due respect to the many clever song-writers of our own time, there are, perhaps, few of them that possess the knack of the late "Jingo" Hunt for turning out wares that withstand the wear of time. If only for old time's sake let us not speak of "Down among the coals" as "drivel," but rather (with abject apologies for the pun personal) as doggerel in-stead. The song in question was probably (after "The mad butcher") the greatest "hit" of that genuine artist, Henri Clark. At one time it was nigh as popular as the immortal "Daisy" herself, and, like her "bicycle made for two," might almost be said to be "still running."

As regards motto, topical, and drinking songs, they have degenerated rather than improved. We have in motto songs little that can compare for healthy tone and manly sentiment with the world-famous ditties of Harry Clifton; whilst, in the way of topical effusions, Arthur Lloyd and Fred Albert gave us in their day much that would be considered up to—and possibly a trifle above—our present exalted standard of excellence. As for the drinking song, it is practically extinct, or, rather, it has developed into the drunken song—a marked distinction with a lamentable difference. "Clicquot," "Moet and Chandon," "Sparkling Moselle," nay, even "Champagne Charlie," have been anything but "improved" upon. The "swell" worship of Bacchus has given place to the rowdy glorification of the pot-house.

Coming to present-day melodies, they are, no doubt, more intricate and elaborate than their predecessors, yet, in the briefly-popular "ragtimes," &c., of to-day, one misses the simple, direct tunefulness of the early "settings." There was something quaintly melodious about such songs as the immortal George's "Pretty little Flora" and Alfred ("The Great") Vance's "Pal o' mine," "Act on the square," and "Idol of the day."

Comparisons, however, are ever odious. Perhaps in doing justice to the past we can pay a compliment to the present. Let us ascend, as it were, from the comparatively ridiculous to the superlatively sublime, and liken the old school of "comic" melody to Verdi, and the new to—Wagner. The fact remains that there are some amongst us (blame sentiment who will) that have a sneaking preference for—Verdi.

As a collector of old comic song covers, may I be allowed to add, Sir, that I would much like to "compare notes" with your correspondent "Back Number"?—Yours truly,

W. E. IMESON,

13, Crusoe-road, Mitcham,
Dec. 11.

Miss Lottie Poole, daughter of the late Mr. Ted Poole, of Poole's Minstrels, has been specially engaged to play Alice in Dick Whittington, and is featuring "Cheyenne" and "My Little Hyacinth," backed up by a big chorus.

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

FIRST of all we have again with great gladness to wish all our Showman World readers a Merry, Merry Christmas.

WE are still old-fashioned enough and yet young enough to believe in the old, old greeting—A Merrie Christmas.

KNOWING as we do how closely bound together is the family life of the travelling showman, we also know that in every home on wheels the great Hometide Festival will be duly honoured and well kept by both old and young. It is an extremely gratifying and most significant fact that immense indoor fairs in North London and in South London will bring together at Christmastide this year an enormous fellowship of the men and women who travel the fairs. At the great Hall, Islington, in the North, and huge Olympia on the West, the brotherhood of the road will be able to demonstrate their Christmas neighbouring with even greater facilities than the settled denizens of town dwellings.

BESIDES these settlements under cover in and around London, at such places as Mile End, Stratford, Deptford, Fulham, Ealing, Uxbridge, and Hounslow there are open-air settlements of show dwellings sufficient in their number to prove the important truth that the show race is a thriving and progressive one. To each and all of these we send heartiest Christmas greetings.

BY kind permission of the lessee (T. E. Read, Esq.), the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Showmen and Van Dwellers' Protection Association (the Showmen's Guild) will take place at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, at half-past eleven in the forenoon of Jan. 23, 1907. For speakers and other details see forthcoming announcements.

SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Showmen's Guild:—Isaac Richards, Esq. 10s. 6d.; Mrs. Ackerley, 10s. 6d.; Richard Newall, Esq., 10s. 6d.; Mr. Tiller, 10s. 1906: R. H. Mellor and Sons, £1 1s.

AT Kidwelly Town Hall Mr. Foster Boggis gave a good animated picture show for the first half of this week, and did very well. He possesses a high-class machine and some excellent films.

MESSRS. BARKER AND THURSTON opened at the Agricultural Hall, Norwich, on Monday for an eight weeks' carnival. Chief among the attractions are their Royal cinematograph show and gigantic motor-cars, both of which are deservedly popular and well patronised. Among the side-shows are W. Abbott's, Mrs. Abbott's, H. Parkin's, George Hearn's, and H. Westropp's shooting galleries; John Holmes', W. Westropp's, J. Norman's, Charles Abbott's, and Mrs. Abbott's doll saloons; George Hearn's striking machine, Mackintosh's toffee, R. Holmes, jun.'s fish saloon, Candy King, Bray's automatic machine, George Summers' penalty football, G. Bond's bottle-breaking saloon, Avory's weighing chair, G. S. G. Mason's rolled gold, and others.

AT the Drill Hall, Dundee, Mr. F. H. Hobbs' grand Christmas and New Year carnival was opened last Saturday afternoon by Lord Provost Longair, who was accompanied on the stage by a large number of magistrates and councillors. The programme is a varied one, and amongst the turns appearing this week are Tamamoto, wire and rope walker; Mons. Silvo, in ladder and ring act; Mlle. Ameda, novelty entertainer; Charles Hughes, lightning cartoonist; Musical Silvo, with his wonderful instrument the Silvochimes; Zasma and Mlle. Louie, gymnasts; the Strathmore troupe of international dancers; Mitza, Japanese juggler; and Hinton and Wooten, trick cyclists. Amongst the side shows are Captain George Texas and his Wild West show; the mysterious Fying Lady; Charles E. Milton, Japanese sword walker; Mlle. Flo, the tattooed lady; palmists, rifle saloons, roundabouts, &c. A capital orchestra, under the direction of Mr. J. C. Johnstone, discourses music.

CINEMATOGRAPH film subjects of present-day events, affairs of state, Royal movements, naval and military demonstrations, opening of public buildings, with kindred functions and operations in peace and war, are all depicted as they are actually seen by the accurate and truthful eye of the camera; and the day will come when motion pictures of present current events will be treasured as vital documents among the historical archives of our museums. Numbers of such subjects, which would have proved of inestimable value, are lost. They had their day on the entertainment and lecture platforms, but the firms producing them, being business corporations and not State departments, having none but commercial interests to serve, the pictures were relegated to the limbo of the useless when they had served their turn.

THE march of improvment is so rapid that it is hardly possible to keep pace with it. What was wonderful a few years ago is now a matter of course; but the doings of those few years will make valuable history nevertheless. For instance, where, in twenty years' time, shall we find records of Booksellers'-row? Where, even now, can we procure more than fugitive prints of the old Seven Dials? And the list can be indefinitely increased at will by subjects which are all of value even to the present generation, but how much more valuable will they be to men and women of the future?

ANIMATED pictures of almost daily happenings, which possess no more than a passing interest now, will rank as matters of national importance to future students, and it behoves our public authorities, the heads of museums and universities, to see to it that the institutions under their control should become possessed of these important moving records of present events. Books, pamphlets, prints, and the like are perforce kept for reference, but films depicting important movements with a detail verbally impossible are lost to the nation for want of a little forethought and a ridiculously small expenditure of capital. Though many subjects illustrating past events are lost, it is reasonably certain that enough remain to make the securing of a film here and there a good investment for the future of our institutions.

MR. TOM GREEN, the well-known comedian, stage-director, and picture-producer, has brought out, amongst other fine subjects, a first-class comic, The New Apprentice; or, Fun in the Bakehouse, which has been described as "one long laugh."

MRS. J. PETTIGROVE'S world's carnivals are on Stratford and Plaistow Grounds for Christmas. The attractions comprise H. Oliver's varieties and novelty shows, alligators, serpents, crocodiles, and lady wrestlers, Biddal's picture show, Nail's phantoscope, Burnett's athletes, and a large aggregation of fairground novelties, including the famous "slipping the slips," Smith and Whittle's switchback, gondolas, and roundabouts and gallopers.

"THE INEXPERIENCED SHOPPER," Messrs. Ruffell's new film, has been the talk of Tottenham, and has been a big hit in conjunction with their other fine pictures displayed for the last two weeks at the Palace, Messrs. Ruffell having taken the Tottenham house for a short season, and installing as manager Mr. Edgar Curtis, so well known at Clacton and elsewhere.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AT ISLINGTON.

It is an undoubted record in the history of Showland that for twenty-eight years in succession, and each year with additional success, a fair big enough and grand enough to justify the title "The World's Fair" has been held under the same roof and practically the same management in London. We are often told by the economists that it is "demand that creates supply"; this truth is subject to a very wise reservation, that in certain instances the appropriate supply creates demand. We find that when certain would-be wise people were fondly prophesying the speedy ending of fairs, and the ultimate blotting out of the showman and his work, that such men as the late Messrs. Read and Bailey, and Mr. Read's son, who now controls this immense Christmas enterprise, were proving by the very convincing fact of tremendous success that the fairs and shows of the kind that the people delight to patronise were still deeply entrenched in the hearts of the British public—that, given the opportunity, a fair thoroughly up to date, but yet containing all those old-time elements of attraction so dear to the heart of the people, would meet with unbounded success.

We were favoured the other evening with a view of the Fair at the Royal Agricultural Hall in the making, a veritable "Peep behind the scenes in Showland." Both Mr. T. E. Read and his courteous and energetic assistant-manager of the World's Fair—Mr. Fowle—were within as we perambulated the vast expanse of the great hall. We noticed in their usual position the splendid travelling shows of Mr. Wm. Taylor, whose magnificent coliseum of living pictures is a feature at our very best fairs, and Chittock, the veteran showman, with his theatre of cinematograph and varieties. W. Le Neve and Norah Sullivan, "the Sandows of the Fairground," and John Hastings, with his celebrated exhibitions of midget marvels, and the giant lady occupied their usual positions. These are shows of the character that fully maintain the highest record of our British fairs. In order that elements of up-to-date novelty may be wisely associated with these old standard attractions, Mr. Read has found space for the celebrated troupe of Dahomey Warriors, the finest illustration of Darkest African life on exhibition in Europe, and Mr. Arthur Twigdon with his unique electrograph, both of them shows of a character to justify their inclusion at the World's Fair. Bailey's Fine Art Show and Bailey's Shooting Saloon are again to the front. The haunted room, a most weird experience for those who delight in occult sensations, and various electrical appliances, such as the new electric target shooting saloon, the electric fish-pond and shooting-range, and the optical illusion—a capital side show—"the direct road to real fun"—demonstrate the thoroughly modern side of the show business. Amongst the newcomers to the hall this year special notice must be taken of Messrs. Kirk and Saraski's troupe of expert swimmers in their delightful demonstrations of the art of natation.

The enterprising Frank Turner, who has been identified with the World's Fair from its inception, again provides a great number of interesting and up-to-date side shows; these include the very beautiful gallery of cosmoramic picture and waxwork, one of the artistic features of this year's show, electric fish-ponds, shooting-ranges, distorting mirrors, automatic galleries, and other novelties.

The immense range of galleries, occupied as usual by some of the very best concerns of the travelling amusement caterers, is set out to display the throwing games, varieties, coker-shies, dolly frames, variety stalls, football games, ring and dart boards, and the hundred and one other attractions of a British fair.

Prominent amongst the providers of these entertainments are Messrs. W. Bedford, H. Taylor, Hyatt and Brown, T. Irish, G. Taylor, Walcot, Stevens, J. Mayne, Pickard, Saunders, Slatter, Hussey, Evans, Brett, Traylen, F. Turner, and Mrs. Rawlins. The roundabout concerns and mechanical novelties include Wilson's galloping horses, Mrs. Bailey's steam horses, Slatter's juvenile motor-cars, and the tunnel railway. In the some position as last year the immensely popular contraption "Slipping the Slope" has been again erected, this year with considerable enlargements provocative of vastly more enjoyment for its patrons. The great central avenue and entrance hall is a striking feature of the decoration of the whole building. On either side there are side shows and stalls, and in the centre an entirely new feature for this year's fair. Apparently descending upon the heads of the expectant throng is seen a huge balloon or aerial car; in this car Father Christmas is seen bringing with him thousands and thousands of presents for the children attending the Fair.

Mr. Read has provided an exceptionally strong programme for the absolutely free sights of the great show. These embrace a grand free circus, with unique and varied performances, and this year the circus ring has been considerably raised, and thus a splendid view is afforded to the visitors from all points of the vast hall. Advance arrangements have been made with some of the very best British and Continental artists of the ring; all the very latest novelties, both equine and aerial, have been secured, and a strong company of clowns and jesters engaged, so that there will be frequent changes of programme and a succession of fresh novelties week by week. Amongst the artists already billed we find the celebrated Siegrist and Silbon, the Imperial Troupe of Viennese aërialists, fresh from their triumph on the Continent of Europe. Caicedo, the most daring and sensational artist on the high wire, will give his most astonishing performance. Caicedo is engaged for the whole run of the Fair, and will repeat at each performance—twice every day—the same astounding evolutions that provoked from His Majesty the King the congratulatory remark—"Indeed, Caicedo, you are the king of the wire." This gratifying communication was given to Caicedo after the King had witnessed his performance at the Ronacker Theatre at Vienna. When we add that again all the usual elements and attractions of a high-class circus are provided in addition to the special novelties by Sir Robert Fossett, of circus renown, who with his clever family constitute the necessary permanent elements of the great free circus, enough has been said to indicate the thoroughly satisfactory nature of the enterprise.

Another great free sight, and one that marks the World's Fair as the very best of its kind, is the presence of Wombwell's great Continental Menagerie, another of the abiding features of this great aggregation of shows. The whole of this vast indoor zoo is free to the people paying the sixpence admission at the door. Within this menagerie is found a collection of the rarest specimens of animal, bird, and reptile life, selected with absolute regard to their educational value to the youth of the nation. At the same time so complete is this menagerie that it contains rare specimens worthy the observation of the most advanced student of zoology. Herds of elephants, a flock of camels, including that unique novelty—the baby camel born at Islington a year ago. The intrepid lion-tamer connected with Wombwell's will give frequent performances in a den of forest-bred lions daily.

We have said sufficient to indicate that Mr. Read, profiting by the experience of his father and his partner—Frank Bailey—has gone forward and has devoted himself with distinction and success to extending wherever it has been possible the attractions of the World's Fair, and we anticipate that the Fair we saw in the making will more than justify our first notice, and we congratulate Mr. Read and the whole of the working-staff upon the enterprise which we confidently predict will be rewarded with even more than the usual success.

FUN CITY AT OLYMPIA.

We are frequently told that "the superior person" has no place in his life for the ordinary common or vulgar delights of a popular fair. This syllogism of the modern philosopher has very little attraction for the real student of "the human documents." Contrariwise, we have seen at the great fairs of the Empire the highest and the lowest, as men class human society with regard to social position, and again the most intellectual, and, in a non-invidious sense, the most simple people entering into all the fun of the fair, and each and all enjoying its never-failing delights.

It is this actuality of human experience that accounts for, and we trust will fully justify, the creation of a conglomerate carnival and international fair at Olympia. In fact, we see no reason why "The Fun City" (along its own lines and enterprise) should not be equally as successful as the long-established World's Fair in the North of London. We venture also to hold the opinion that the Fun City in the West catering for the vast populations of South and West Suburbia, as well as the constant stream of visitors who come up to London to spend a merry Christmas, to see all the shows, and to celebrate a New Year in the very heart of showland, will full justify its existence.

At the very outset we must congratulate the International Fairs, Ltd., its enterprising managing-director, Mr. C. B. Cochran, and, in fact, the whole directorate, on the extremely successful outcome of their enterprise. We consider that the West of London has never seen so marvellous an aggregation of show novelties as that gathered beneath the roof of Barnum's mammoth show building—Olympia. We go further, and make bold to say that even great Barnum himself, visiting "again the glimpses of the moon," would find his spirit delighted with the mammoth carnival and stupendous aggregation of show talent at the scene of his great London triumphs. We made the circuit of the Fair the other day, and although it was merely a Press view, we saw enough to indicate the complete and eminently satisfactory arrangements for a carnival fair that will be a ceaseless source of delight to the people of the West End, and also to the people of greater London.

Dealing with the free sight shows (an essential element in enterprises of this nature), we find an interesting variety of attractions. In the central hippodrome the Cirque Métropole, Paris, director M. Irlicht, will provide the equestrian free show. Sedgewick's incomparable menagerie, one of the finest zoological collections in the world, is another free sight. Mention must here be made of the expert performances in both animal training and taming with various ferocious and hitherto untameable beasts. Sedgewick's menagerie is strong in the number and ability of its animal tamers—Mlle. Rosina, with lioness and with Russian and Siberian wolves, Zarmah in den of lions, lionesses, and boarhounds, Captain Alphonso, with untameable Nubian lioness, and Captain Marco, with grizzly bears and hybrid wolves, give thrilling exhibitions of the power of man over the brute creation.

The mighty Hackensmidt, a strong "magnet" in the double sense, will visit again the scene of his former triumphs. Forrest's Military Band will provide an excellent and varying programme of music.

These be a few of, but not all, the free sights of the Fun City at Olympia. What a wonderful free sight it is, the outside parade performances of the shows gathered together at a well organised fair! Of course, you have to go inside and see the show, but the showman on the parade is an anticipation and an inducement that we all take as an earnest of better things to come

In this first notice of the Fair at Olympia we can only enumerate the shows and novelties under its mighty roofage. The British shows include Biddall's bioscope, so well known and so much appreciated by the frequenters of our metropolitan fairs; W. L. Neave and Norah Sullivan, in feats of strength, weight lifting, wrestling, and physical culture; P. Collins' enterprises, the composite roundabout set, galloping horses, and motor cars, the aerial twinships, the miniature motors, and whirling switchcars; Relph and Pedley's razzle dazzle; Wingate's bicycle circus; Knighton's stereorama; the distorting mirror show; White's Indian menagerie; Stacey's shooting jungles; Mme. Salva's novelty booth, and all the fun of the fair; coker shies, orange groves, emma sheets, throwing and variety games by a crowd of metropolitan caterers, including Messrs. Stroud, Mayne, Peters, Houldsworth, Manning, the Brothers Wilson, Matthews, Bond, and Hussey.

The American contingent include the following novelties: Inshaw's Coney Island cyclone; Hales's tours of the world; Leon Gould's modern American enterprise, "Black Art"; the white negress and family; Oliver Holt's freaks and curiosities; the Moki Indians; the Ituri dwarfs; the oscillating staircase from Coney Island and New York's windy corner, the famous flat-iron building. The other shows include M. Lesot's Parisian Salon from the Fête de Neuilly (in illustration of La Savate); Herr Bianco's Salon des Illusions; Sidi Ben Mahomed's Turkish Seraglio; the Californian ostrich farm; the baby elephants; the sacred bull; and Miss Minnie Letta's company on the rolling stage.

A very interesting feature will be the revived Richardson's show, run by that "prince of modern mummers," Fred Karno, who will endeavour to restore the glories of the palmy days of the British drama. This is a show that we shall delight to see, and if the mummers of to-day can inspire us with one half the admiration and the pleasure that the mummers of the portable theatres of forty years ago gave us, we shall arise and bless the name of Karno. We understand that the chief character on the outside, Richardson himself, will be taken by one of the most celebrated of the real showmen of to-day, Mr. B. T. Burnett having been retained for the leading part on the outside—Richardson, the doorsman of his own show.

Well known and universally esteemed, Mrs. Farrell's death will cast a deep gloom over Showland. FUNERAL OF MRS. JAMES WILMOT.

The funeral of Mrs. James Wilmot left the Cottage Hospital, Hawick, on Friday morning, the 14th inst., for the railway station, where six of the men employed on the machine carried the remains from the hearse to the train for conveyance to Glasgow, a distance of ninety-two miles. The names of the bearers were the brothers David and Colin Ross, Henry Marshall, Charles Gilbert, Ernest Higgs, and David Harkness. On arrival at Queen-street Station, Glasgow, the remains, and mourners, who had travelled from Hawick and Edinburgh, were met by a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends, some of whom had travelled a long distance to show their last respects. The bearers shouldered the remains of their late dear mistress, which were contained in a handsome oak coffin, and once more placed it in the hearse, when the last stage of the sad journey was begun, followed by seventeen coaches, to Sighthill Cemetery. The Rev. Dr. Thomas Sommerville (who had united Mr. and Mrs. James Wilmot on March 6, 1901) gave a most touching address and prayer at the graveside. The coffin was lowered into its last resting-place by the husband, Mr. James Wilmot, John Wilmot, sen., John Wilmot, jun., Charles Wilmot, George Wilmot, Hugh Wilmot, Mr. Alex. Johnson (uncle), and Mr. H. C. Chapman (cousin). There was a large number of mourners present, among whom were the following:—The two young children of the deceased, Mrs. Chadwick (sister), Mrs. Henry Chapman (cousin), Mrs. Goldthorpe Marshall, Mrs. Wilmot, sen., Mrs. J. Wilmot, jun., Misses Elizabeth and Ellen Wilmot, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilmot, Mrs. M. Reilly, Mr. and Mrs. Cook, Mrs. Wm. Murphy (who, it may be mentioned, was the deceased's bridesmaid). The number present at the funeral would amount to over 200. After returning from the cemetery, dinner was provided in a large hall by Mr. Wilmot. Floral tributes were sent by the following:—Mr. James Wilmot (husband), Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick (brother and sister), Mr. and Mrs. H. Chapman (cousins), Mr. and Mrs. J. Wilmot, jun., Mrs. Jewell (aunt), Minnie and Nora Jewell (cousins), Mrs. Wm. Mitchell, jun., Jeanie and Nellie Buckley (cousins), Misses Millington (York), Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. E. Stevenson, Mr. and Miss Day (Glasgow), Mr. and Mrs. George Green and family, Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh, Mr. and Mrs. B. Mitchell, A. Varetta and Sons, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Murphy, and Mr. and Mrs. James Day (South Wales). A large number of beautiful sprays were sent with no name attached. Artificial wreaths with glass shades were sent by the following friends:—Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilmot, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. Holdsworth, Mr. and Mrs. James Day (South Wales).

Mr. James Wilmot wishes to tender his sincere thanks to all friends and relatives for their kind sympathy in his sad bereavement.

OPENING OF THE EAST HAM PALACE.

There was quite a buzz of excitement in the thickly-populated district of East Ham on Monday evening, and crowds assembled in the vicinity of the new theatre of varieties, which has been erected on a plot of land close to the East Ham railway station. Monday was the opening night, and though the inaugural proceedings were of the briefest nature, the local population was evidently determined to give the new venture in the way of providing entertainment for the people a good send-off. And so they crowded at both houses into pit and gallery, and great was their admiration of the fine appearance of the interior of the building. Externally, the front of the house is of red brick and Portland stone, with a bright beacon light at the S.W. end, which adds materially to the imposing and impressive appearance. Entering through the handsome vestibule, a short, broad flight of steps gives entrance through a double archway to the box-office hall. Here are the stalls entrance and the main entrance to the balcony. This is a fine feature in blue Belge and rouge griotte marble, with Swedish vert-de-mer balustrading and dove-coloured Napoleon marble dado. To the right of the box-office is the stalls corridor. In the stalls the seating consists of thirteen rows of tip-up armchairs, on a richly-carpeted floor, at a slope fully commanding the stage. The house is divided into stalls, pit-stalls, pit, balcony, and gallery, and affords seating capacity for 2000. There are also four large boxes, tastefully and luxuriously furnished. The large panelled ceiling and cove have been beautifully treated with artistic paintings, to which the rest of the decorations, which are in the Rennaisance style, with predominating tints of cinnamon, form an appropriate setting. The interior generally has been treated architecturally with stately Corinthian columns, carrying a full emblature above the proscenium opening, and over the boxes. The construction of the theatre is as fire-resisting as it is possible to make it. The crimson velvet drop-curtain, with its wealth of folds, falls gracefully on either side of the stage, its rich colour vividly enhancing the general scheme. The seats on the tip-up principle are covered with the same costly material, and are in unison with the exquisite pile carpet. The orchestra well is sunk below the stage, and is capable of accommodating twenty musicians. The exits are numerous, and conveniently situated, and the doors are fireproof. Two noble domes—one on either side of the auditorium—still further enhance the general effect. The auditorium is 64ft. wide and 86ft. from curtain line to back wall of auditorium, and 55ft. from pit floor to ceiling. The house is being run on the two-houses-nightly system, performances commencing at 6.30 and 9 o'clock.

The new Palace reflects the utmost credit upon the skill of the architects, Messrs. Wylson and Long, while at the same time mention should be made of the admirable decorative work carried out by Mr. J. M. Bockbinder. The upholstery has been supplied by Messrs. Shoolbred, and the seating is by Mr. J. S. Lyon; the mere mention of the names of these well-known firms is a sufficient guarantee that everything is satisfactory in these important departments. The act-drop, representing a classical subject, is a clever and effective study in colours; and Mr. Francis Bull has also furnished some very pretty sets.

Mr. George Adney Payne, the managing-director of the syndicate having control of the variety theatres to the list of which the East Ham Palace is the latest addition, was present; and Mr. Arthur J. Barclay, who has been appointed manager, appeared on the stage before the programme proper was started in the first house, and in a few brief words gave a hearty welcome to the audience. Mrs. Geo. Adney Payne then sang the National Anthem with her usual charm of manner, and the opening ceremony was at an end. Mr. W. S. Bassett, formerly of the Granville, Walham Green, is the experienced musical-director, Mr. Albert E. Hill is the assistant-manager, and Mr. John Grant stage-manager.

The opening programme gave every satisfaction. Miss Florence Yeaman, American coon burlesque artist, was well received; Sibb and Sibb, trapeze artists, gave an exhibition of their skill, and were greeted with deserved applause; Mr. Tom Leamore, the favourite comedian, was welcomed with a round of applause, and opened with "What a fool I was to marry 'Liza," his amusing narrative of the wedding being received with shouts of laughter. He next appeared in the guise of a park-keeper, whose experiences furnished more food for mirth. The Stella Troupe consists of a number of young ladies, who on the rise of the curtain are found to be occupants of swings, and, thus pleasantly occupied, sing a chorus song with much acceptance. They also give a lively song and dance, and their success is beyond doubt. Mr. Gilbert Gerard is a remarkably clever mimic of animals, &c. He gives some wonderful imitations of various denizens of the farmyard, but probably his most realistic imitation is that of the lions at the Zoo what time they are being fed. One has only to shut one's eyes to imagine that they are in the lions' house at the famous Regent's Park establishment.

The dramatic episode entitled Nell Gwyn, the Orange Girl was played by Miss Dolly Elsworthy and company. This well-staged and picturesque sketch recalls in vivid style the days of King Charles II. and his gallant courtiers. Miss Dolly Elsworthy as Nell Gwyn represents the saucy orange girl with delighted piquancy, and her utter disregard for the conventional attitude in the presence of Royalty is a most amusing feature of the sketch. Mr. R. Purdie was a right gallant King Charles, with an eye for a pretty girl. Mr. J. H. Ash was good as the Duke of Buckingham; Mr. A. Howard was a manly Dick Hamden; and Miss C. Rivers did well as Mother Gwyn.

Carlton's wonderful illusion, "The Mysterious Cross," was, of course, a source of mystification; and the mimicry of Clarice Mayne received due recognition. The Two Whites, comedy artists, also contributed; and Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope was an additional attraction. Amongst those present at the opening on Monday were Mr. Walter Gibbons and several other people prominent in the variety world.

SOUTH WALES NOTES.

At Stoll's Panopticon, Cardiff, the Christmas programme is very good, consisting of the American Bioscope; Mr. Louth Griffiths, actor vocalist; Miss Edna Lewis, contralto; Mr. Fred Smith; and musical items by Miss Hetty Hocking. Mme. D'Arc's Waxworks, with many new items, is another strong attraction; also Mr. John Studt in the Hayes. At Skewen Messrs. Baker's original circus paid a successful visit. Messrs. Hy. Studt and Son have returned to their winter quarters at Swansea with their new motor-cars, zoological roundabout, and gondolas. Mr. John North's shooters, egg and bottle saloon, and coker shies are also in the same district.

Mr. Allworth's portable theatre is still a strong attraction in Caerphilly. Mr. E. Ebley at Blaina is making active preparations for his patrons for Christmas.

Mr. Wm. Haggar, jun., has a strong pantomime programme for his many new Neath friends.

At Barry Dock Mr. John Johnson, with his usual alertness for good things, has secured excellent talent in Sadie, the march-time dancer, &c. Messrs. Johnson at Tredegar have a good bill for panto, and should do good business.

At Port Talbot for the holiday seeker is Mrs. Sheen's Emmas, ringboards, &c. Prof. Lloyd and Mr. Kinder have paid a successful visit to Cwmaman.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follows:—

MANCHESTER, LIVERPOOL, AND DISTRICT.
MR. ALAN W. YOUNG,
Empire Theatre, Liverpool.

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,

BIRMINGHAM, NOTTINGHAM, LEICESTER, AND DISTRICT.
MR. HATTON WHARTON,

SOUTH WALES DISTRICT.
MR. W. LEA,
Empire Theatre, Cardiff.

LONDON DISTRICT.
MR. WILLIAM COLLINS,
The Empire, Shepherd's Bush, W.

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously Little Meg and the Wonderful Lamp.

On a cold winter's evening a young girl is just about to draw the curtain close at the French windows. As she glances out she sees with sorrow a poor ill-clad child, shivering with cold, offering a tray of odds and ends for sale. Going to her mother she entreats her to have the girl in; gaining her consent, she opens the window and fetches the unfortunate youngster. Taking her tray from her, she gives her a cosy place near the fire. A little later a maid walks into the room bringing with her the young mistress's cloak, and she gets her ready to go and see the pantomime. Looking at the child she has befriended, the kind girl once again appeals to her mother to allow her to take the little unfortunate with her. The mother at first will not hear of it, but ultimately encouraging her daughter's good nature she consents. Both girls ready, they leave the room, the maid following with the tray in disgust. Inside a box at the theatre the youngsters are enthusiastically watching the many wonderful scenes of Aladdin. As the lamp is rubbed and the geni appears, bringing with him all sorts of wonderful gifts, the children clap uproariously. Leaving the theatre in a carriage, the kind youngster drives her poor friend home and kisses her good-night. Entering her humble house the child flies to her poor mother, who is lying ill in a very sparsely furnished garret. The low level these poor people have come to is soon seen by the appearance of the broker's men, who clear (in spite of all entreaties) all the goods from the place. The poor girl watches hopelessly, but suddenly remembering Aladdin's lamp, she leaves the house and goes to the theatre. Awaiting an opportunity at the stage door, when the coast is clear, she darts in and comes out with the wonderful lamp. As she is about to run away she is pounced upon by one of the property men, who calls a policeman and gives her in charge. The constable takes her and marches her off towards the station. Turning the corner, a carriage drives past, but not before the occupants have noticed the charge. A lady and her daughter alighting from the carriage, it is seen they are the two kind people who have lately befriended the poor child. Going up to the policeman matters are soon put straight, the property man looks on open-mouthed at the substantial amount put into his hand by the lady. The ragged child thanks her friends and runs off with the treasured lamp in her possession. Going straight to her mother's apartment, she shows and describes what she has got. The weak woman shakes her head despairingly, but cannot convince the child that the property is of no use. The girl rubs the lamp hard and waits, nothing of course resulting. After several attempts she sinks down on the floor in despair and quite exhausted. The rich and happy child in her carriage, after fully realising the late incident, and wishing to play the geni, goes to several provision shops and makes purchases. Then, driving to her friend's house, she enters the room quietly with her good things, just as nother and child are in a happy state of unconsciousness. Without disturbing the pair she leaves her parcel and empties her purse on the floor, leaving the place quite happy after her charitable actions. When mother and child awake, they are wonderfully surprised at the sight which greets them. The eager youngster, undoing the parcel, jumps about the room with the food in her hands. Her mother, thinking no doubt of rent, gathers up the coins almost miserly.

'THE LOAFER'S LUCKY DAY.'

A delightful and mirthful subject, with a Loafer as Chief Character. By a wonderful series of Lucky Strokes, he obtains means, jewellery, and—judged by wonderful photographic effects—as much pleasure in one day as only seldom falls to the lot of ordinary mortals during many moons.

ORDER OF PICTURES:

LOAFER SOLICITS ALMS. Benevolent party gives him a gold coin in mistake.

LOAFER'S JOY. He dances a jig. Wonderful facial expression.

SUDDEN DISMAY. Thought he had lost his treasure. Delight—Found it!

ON THE RIVER BANK. Loafer enjoying himself.

TWO MEN IN A BOAT APPEAR. Loafer lends a hand; boat drawn up.

BOATMEN QUARREL AND FIGHT. One throws the other into the river and leaves him.

RESCUED BY LOAFER, he retires to change.

LOAFER SEIZES HIS OPPORTUNITY—AND THE BOAT—and decamps.

UP THE RIVER: the Loafer is hailed by a man on the bank. Negotiations for hire of boat.

LOAFER, PAID HANDSOMELY, SURRENDERS POSSESSION. The man makes a suggestion.

LOAFER AGREES, AND A CHANGE OF ATTIRE IS EFFECTED.

A FURTHER STROKE OF LUCK: Stranger, with the boat, departs, leaving the Loafer, who finds a well-stocked pocket-book in the coat he now wears.

ORIGINAL OWNERS OF BOAT APPEAR, and, with policeman, chase their property.

THEY SEIZE THE BOAT AND PURSUE ITS OCCUPANT, who leaves a hand-bag in the boat.

POLICEMAN SECURES HIS MAN, and in the struggle both fall into the river.

THE STRUGGLE IS CONTINUED IN THE WATER, and the captive is finally hauled away.

THE LUCKY LOAFER AGAIN APPEARS, looks into the boat and finds the bag.

A LUCKY BAG. DISPLAY OF CONTENTS: Superb jewellery, necklets, tiaras, &c.

THE LUCKY LOAFER FINALLY DECIDES TO REST ON HIS LAURELS and enjoy the results of his day's adventure, and the—to him—huge joke, in an embowered riverside resort, where he is seen mirthfully congratulating himself.

MORAL.—Be careful of your personal belongings. Make no mistakes in dealing with Loafers, and the Luck will remain with the owner instead of being transferred to the worthless.

THE STAGE ARC LIGHT OF THE FUTURE.

THE
MACHIN ELDORADO STAGE LANTERN

(Fully Patented and Protected).

These lamps have been designed by an expert in stage lighting, and have proved themselves a great success where fitted.

Among the many advantages claimed are a Saving in Current of from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. over battens, without taking the cost of incandescent lamps into account; a great saving in labour, one man can easily control twenty lamps with one lever-board; all battens and lengths can be dispensed with; specially-preparedl flexible coloured mediums are used; the danger from falling glass is thus avoided; the simplicity of construction, there is no danger of them getting out of order; they can be adapted to any stage; no counter weights are required, and the lamps cast no shadows, thereby getting over a difficulty stage-managers of big productions have had to contend with in the past; they flood the entire stage with a powerful, soft, sunlight effect, not the steel cold light of the ordinary stage lamp; there are no shadows and no flickering.

A perfect stage lamp in every way, which will meet a long-felt want. The saving in current will pay the cost of the lamps in a very short period.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

STAGE employees, as well as the variety artists and musicians, have benefited by recent events. Through an alliance of the three societies an understanding has been come to with Mr. Walter Gibbons, who has agreed, after a conference with him and Mr. Payne, to adopt at all his halls the working rules and rates of pay recognised by the General Staff Branch of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, and the changes involved by this agreement are to come into operation on and from Monday, Jan. 14.

THIS agreement applies, at present, to the Islington Empire, the Royal, Holborn, the Duchess, Balham, the New Grand, Clapham, the Hippodrome, Ealing, and the Empire, Croydon. The stage employees at these houses will receive 2s. 6d. per night and 2s. for each matinée, and it is a New Year improvement which they will much appreciate. On this basis, the variety artists, the musicians, and the stage employees will be only too glad to welcome any further additions to the number of his halls which Mr. Gibbons can provide.

THE rates of pay for the two-shows-a-night houses have been a sore point with the stage employees for some time, and the Alliance finds itself backed by a unanimity which will, no doubt, add much to its influence in other directions. It is well known that the stage hands have to put in from one hour to one hour and a half more time per night, and the increase of sixpence per night is a very modest advance on the previous rate. As showing the need for such an alliance as has been formed, instructions were given last week at an East-end house to reduce the pay of the stage hands from 2s. to 1s. 6d. per night, but immediately the proceedings of the Alliance became known these instructions were cancelled.

THE representatives of the stage employees and artists and musicians who had an interview with Mr. Gibbons and Mr. Payne, much appreciate the courtesy shown to them, and they were delighted with the evident desire of these gentlemen to come to an amicable understanding honourable to all parties. We understand that a cordial letter of thanks has been dispatched on behalf of the Alliance to Mr. Gibbons and to Mr. Payne. These efforts to secure "peace and goodwill" are as seasonable as they have proved successful.

MR. T. HARRISON has been appointed master carpenter for the Grand Theatre by Mr. S. James, and will take over his duties in a few days. Mr. Harrison is a man of wide experience, and is a member of the Stage Employees Association. It is satisfactory to note that an effort is being made to remove any cause of friction between Mr. S. James and the Stage Employees' Association.

AT a meeting of stage employees, held in Islington, it was reported that Mr. William Johnson, general secretary of the National Association of Theatrical Employees had been adopted by the Islington Trades Council to contest one of the seats in the East Division at the next County Council election. Mr. Johnson will have the support of all the labour organisations in the district, and will seek election as the labour representative.

MEMBERS of the General Staff Branch of the N.A.T.E. are informed that the annual meeting will take place next month, and resolutions to amend the general rules or branch bye-laws, and nominations for office, should be sent in on or before Jan. 14.

DESTRUCTION OF THE WARRINGTON THEATRE.

The early hours of Christmas morning brought disaster to the Royal Court Theatre, Warrington, where, through causes unknown, a fire broke out which resulted in the total destruction of the building. About three o'clock on Tuesday morning a police-constable discovered smoke issuing from the theatre. The alarm was at once given, and Mr. Potter (one of the two proprietors of the theatre, who lives in the same street) was informed of the outbreak, and was quickly on the spot. Fire-engines and men soon arrived, and it was found that the fire was located under the stage. Every effort was made to keep the flames from spreading to the adjoining premises, and it was thought at one time that the outbreak had been mastered, but quite suddenly flames broke out on the north side with such force and fury that it was at once seen the conflagration would be of a most serious character. The men became exposed to great risk as the roof of the building over the stage got well alight. The fire assumed still more serious proportions, the roof over the stage falling in and shortly afterwards the remainder of the roof, and the result was that the premises were completely gutted. The offices and side rooms were left intact, while the seats in the theatre under the balconies suffered comparatively little damage. The chairs and forms in the centre and side balconies were rendered useless. Music-stands and other paraphernalia shared the same fate, and daylight revealed a scene of complete desolation. The firemen remained on duty throughout the day, for there was continuous smouldering, accompanied by spasmodic outbursts of fire that needed prompt attention.

What the extent of the damage is cannot be accurately determined as yet, but it is estimated at £10,000, which is partly covered by insurance. The chief sufferers, of course, are Messrs. Johnson and J. Potter, the lessees, to whom much sympathy was expressed. The latter gentleman, who is highly respected in the town, has had the chief control of the theatre for many years. Before the building was purchased by the present proprietors for theatrical performances some twenty years ago it served the purposes of the Public Hall.

Mr. Louis Calvert's Sunday company was engaged at the theatre, and they had given their first performance on Christmas Eve. When the artists left the building about midnight everything seemed to be safe, but there is reason to believe that the fire originated underneath the stage. Many of the artists' dresses were saved, but the whole of the scenic effects and other properties were destroyed.

GREENWICH THEATRE.

On Monday, Dec. 24,
the Military Play, entitled
"THE INDIAN MUTINY."

This stirring drama is always welcome to a Greenwich audience, and this attraction for the holidays was wisely chosen and enthusiastically received, the acting being excellent, and the scenery and dresses and effects all that could be desired. Mr. Edward M. Hamilton played Lieutenant Manly on popular and artistic lines; Mr. Cyril Harrison as Captain Manly presented a capital impersonation; Mr. John Davidson was very good indeed as Major Ongleby; Mr. Birch gave a good account of Ensign Blake; Terry O'Brien found an amusing and capable representative in Mr. Cecil Morand; Mr. F. Anderson was good as Sergeant Thompson; Mr. Villiers Stanley gave a fine rendering of the character of Nebu Singh; Mr. J. H. Seddon was a picturesque and impressive Abul Khan; Mr. Ernest Keand's Ra Goonga was a clever and powerful impersonation; Mr. D. Matthews was good as Asfinga; the same may be said of Mr. Arrack Saumy as Ghante and Mr. F. Peters as Sved Rao. Miss Melrose Millett was a capable Ghuz-nah; Miss Lillie Grey was an amusing Mrs. Major Ingleby, and Miss Agnes Kingston an attractive and interesting Kate Ingleby.

PROVINCIAL THEATRICALS

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

ABERDEEN. — PALACE THEATRE. — Managing Directors, Messrs. Rosen and Bliss; Resident-Manager, Mr. Walter Gilbert.—Miss Rose Elliott, an artist of unquestionable ability, has made a most successful appearance here; the American comedians, Meier and Mora, give a piquant turn; Allen and Hart are equally popular as vocalists and dancers; Mr. Jock Walker, Scotch comedian, is enthusiastically welcomed; and among others included in a first-rate company are Miss Olive Armadale, a dainty comedienne; Bugler and Carr, whose balancing feats and musical acquirements are of a high order; Mr Will Bell, a smart Irish comedian and dancer; and Mr. Jack Charman, who is as much appreciated as last week.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Managing-Director, Mr. Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr. H. Adair Nelson.—The pantomime, Little Red Riding Hood, has now entered on the third and last week of its successful run. During the week a large quantity of new business has been introduced, and the piece swings along with exceeding smoothness. On Monday the D'Oyly Carte Company opens a fortnight's engagement.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE. — EMPIRE HIPPODROME.—Pproprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Manager, Mr. W. B. Broadhead; Acting-Manager, Mr. Percy B. Broadhead; Resident-Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Leech.—For the Christmas holidays the company engaged includes Willie Haig, the funny man; France and Francis, expert acrobatic comedians; Chas. Lestree, juggler; Brull and Helmsley (Elsa and Arthur), as the dainty damsel and dude, in Fun in a Music Shop; the Bendons, in a comedy scena; Stranding, the singing mill lad; and the Five Casino Girls. The chief item on the bill is the pantomimical musical sketch, entitled Rent, a Tragedy in Two Screams, in which Harry Daniels and company appear. The Bioscope illustrates "Following in Father's Footsteps."

ATTERCLIFFE.—THEATRE ROYAL, LTD.—Managing-Director, Mr. F. Macnaughten; Resident-Manager, Mr. C. A. Wordsworth.—The Imperial Animated Picture Company is providing the entertainment here this week, and presents a seasonable and interesting series of films, judiciously interspersed with illustrated songs by Mr. Baker E. Belphor.

PALACE THEATRE OF VARIETIES.—Proprietor, Mr. T. Allan Edwardes; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Lacy Lyne; Assistant-Manager, Mr. T. E. Owen.—An attractive holiday programme is submitted by the management here. The Four Charles head the bill in a unique transformation juggling and acrobatic speciality act. The Sisters Brenton find favour as vocalists and dancers; an excellent turn is provided by the Three Moxons as hand-balancers and foot equilibrists; Mr. Billy Burns, a "genuine singing Pit-Lad," is heartily received; Dick and Dorothy give a pleasing dancing scena; Mr. Charles Bu-Val is entertaining; Mr. Tom E. Odlin is a comedian with funny songs; and Mr. E. C. Clayton winds up with a goodly selection of pictures on the "Palace Attergraph."

AYR.—NEW GAIETY THEATRE.—Managing-Director, Mr. R. C. Buchanan; Acting-Manager, Mr. Harry W. Day.—Miss Louie Esmond's company, under the direction of Mr. Edward Neville, opened on Monday for a three nights' engagement with The Sorrows of Satan. Mr. Neville appeared in the part of Prince Lucio Rimanez, and he acted the part exceedingly well; Mr. H. Evan Gibbon was the Geoffrey Tempest, and he gave a very good interpretation; Mr. Fred Cherry was exceptionally good as Morris; and the same may be said of the valet of the Prince, played by Mr. W. Langely; the Diana Chesney of Miss Loie Esmond was admirably acted; while Miss Nita Langford made the most of her part of Lady Sybil Elton; Miss Rosie Neville was entrusted with the character of Mavis Clare, and she played the part exceptionally well; the ungrateful rôle of Mrs. Grimbes was in the able hands of Miss Cecil Bryne.

BACUP. — NEW COURT THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Frank Denman-Wood; Acting-Manager, Mr. Dudley Harcourt.—Mr. Walter Melville's company is paying a welcome return visit here this week with the drama entitled The Worst Woman in London. Miss Florence Dalton in the title-rôle has much of the burden of the play resting on her, but comes through the ordeal excellently, and plays with convincing earnestness. Miss Elizabeth Watkins as Ruth Milford acts the part in unassuming style; Miss Polly Marsh as Matilda contributes much of the humour by her performance of the matrimonially-inclined lady; as Jane Nogood, Miss Mysie Monte is responsible for some broad humour. Mr. George Gaisford as Jack Fenton deserves commendation for a very earnest rendering of the rôle; Mr. Paul Barry-Lewers as Vincent Lyle plays the part with the necessary callous air; Mr. F. Vernon Travers as Mr. Milford represents a somewhat difficult part with success; Mr. Harvey White as Bob Goldfinch is responsible for much hearty laughter; and Mr. H. W. Monte as Hugh Drayton submits a character-study of merit. Mr. Leonard Booker as Philip Armstrong gives a fine performance; Mr. Walter Clarke is good as the detective, and Mr. Fred Smith in the small part of the sweep is entitled to a word of praise.

BATH.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Egbert Lewis; Acting-Manager, Mr. Lewis A. Long.—For the second time the management have entrusted the production of the "Christmas annual" to Mr. Peter Davey, of the County Theatre, Kingston, who has this year chosen the favourite legend of Sinbad as the subject, the lines, lyrics, and concerted pieces being by Mr. Brian Daly. The music, comprising the most popular airs of the day, is selected and arranged by Mr. J. H. Russell and Mr. W. F. C. Schottler, the latter the esteemed local musical director of the theatre, occupying the conductor's chair during the run of the pantomime. The scenery, which is extremely effective, is from the brushes of such well-known artists as Henry Emden, D. G. Hall, and George Miller. The costumes, designed by Mrs. Peter Davey and Cornelli, are in excellent taste. The first performance, which took place on Christmas Eve, was attended with most gratifying success, and the smoothness with which everything passed off must be credited to the admirable stage-management of Mr. Harry Turner, jun., assisted by Mr. Donald Young. A wise choice was made in the engagement of Miss May Hart for principal boy, as the popular little lady had made hosts of friends locally in Goody Two Shoes two seasons ago, and now as Sinbad adds to her admirers by the score. She gives the present-day song rage, "Hello, a different girl again," with immense go. Another clever actress that quickly secured for herself a firm position in the goodwill of the audience is Miss Molly Wynne Zaneur, a lady who can both sing and dance with equal acceptance, and withal acts with confidence. Miss Neste Laurel proves a pleasing Rosee, but at the opening performance had to battle against a heavy cold. Other ladies who each enact their rôles in capital style are Miss Gertrude Beattie (Blossom), Miss Rita Ricardo (Neptune, jun.), and Miss Clodagh Brown (Boreas), the last-mentioned exhibiting talent as a toe dancer. Most important is the fun making, and here Mr. E. W. Coleman as Fitz-Gubbins is to the fore, working with a zeal that secures the hearty goodwill of the house. He has several good songs, and his dancing, as usual, is the essence of neatness and agility. One of the best burlesque actors we have seen for a long time is Mr. Percy Baverstock, whose conception of Grinbad, with its mock melo-dramatic possibilities, is excellent; Mrs. Sinbad is undertaken by Mr. Arthur Royce in truly whimsical fashion, and always with an eye to creating a laugh. If we mistake not, he is bound to be a huge favourite before these lines are in print. Mr. Leslie Digby adds to the humour of the production as MacTavish, displaying dancing skill of no mean order. A word of praise is due to Mr. H. Grey Dolby for the way he speaks the lines of the Old Man of the Sea. The ladies of the chorus are pretty, and work with animation towards the provision of a bright and entertaining pantomime. Mr. George Mallett is the general-manager for Mr. Davey, and together with Mr. Long, the resident-manager, has done all that is possible to give comfort and a kindly welcome to the crowds that have attended during the holiday season.

PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. Frank Macnaghten; Manager, Mr. Chas. Schuberth.—A capital programme is put on for the Yuletide season, and the management are reaping a rich reward in the crowded and enthusiastic audiences that twice nightly assemble. Colby and May introduce a ventriloquial and dancing act that is highly appreciated. Les Sados presents a juggling act that is both smart and humorous; the Donnas Trio present a wonderful trapeze performance; the Czar Troupe give their national dances with the greatest success; an old favourite, W. H. Downs, the coloured ballad vocalist, is paying a welcome return visit; Lily Esplin, the youthful comedienne, is also an old favourite, and Raymond's Bio-Tableaux are up their usual excellence.

BELFAST.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr. Fred W. Warden; Acting-Manager, Mr. James M. McCann. — Mr. Jarman's company opened here on Monday with Under the Czar, and the piece met with a capital reception. Not a little of the success was due to the clever acting of Miss Lillian Herries as Sonia Gregorovitch; Mr. Willson Howard—a fine actor—had a difficult part to sustain as Nicholas Yeroslaff, but acquitted himself with high distinction; and Mr. Gerald Smythe was a manly Captain Johnson; Mr. C. P. Smalia was all that could be desired as Count Nesseldorf; and Egor Gregorovitch was capitally played by Mr. J. Leicester; Miss Madge Clarke must be commended for her impersonation of Zara Bhura, a Kirkese gipsy; and Miss Beatrice Annersley was seen to advantage as Siomka; Mr. George H. Doyle acquitted himself well as Zakhar Kovesky; and other rôles were well portrayed by Messrs. R. Merring, Louis Weston, Carl Varener, T. H. Winter, F. Best, G. Fleming, &c.

EMPIRE THEATRE OF VARIETIES, LTD.—General-Manager, Mr. Frank Allen; Acting-Manager, Mr. John A. Walker.—Mr. Chas. Mr. Frank Danby as the artful Hang-Kee provides most of the fun, and when later on he is joined by Mr. W. H. Rawlins as Cheoo, the hilarity is continuous. Both comedians work well for the success of the play, and when it is considered that the performance was practically a première, the play having come direct from London, their share is all the more meritorious; Miss Lily Elsie makes a dainty See-See, and acted and sang with much vivacity; Mr. Leonard Mackey is an ardent lover as Yen, and sang his various songs with excellent effect; Miss Amy Augarde in her original part of Mai-Yai, the fortune-teller, had an enthusiastic reception on her entrance, and amply justified it by her singing and acting in the part; Miss Alice Hatton is a pretty Lee, and in the humorous scenes with Mr. Frank Danby she ably shared the honours; Miss Topsy Sinden as So-Hie danced with wonderful grace and ability, and deserved the many encores she received; Miss Daisy Wallace as Humming Bird, Misses Sybil Grey, Octavia Barry, and Lilian Hewetson as Cheeo's wives, Mr. John Byon as Hoang-Wang, and Miss Adeline Lester as his spouse, all lend able assistance, and the chorus singing was above the average; Mr. Frank E. Tours conducted with much ability, and the new comedy was mounted in first-rate style.

THEATRE ROYAL, LTD.—Managing-Director, Mr. F. W. Wyndham; Acting-Manager, Mr. Percy Humphrys.—Dick Whittington has now got into splendid working order. The company is in each individual instance more than capable, and all the members play together with a quickness and liveliness that make a dull or dragging moment impossible. In the part of Idle Jack Mr. Will Evans acts with much energy. His merry little touches of side-play all tend to make the character highly diverting; Mr. Bransby Williams presents a skilful impersonation of Alderman Fitzwarren; Mr. William Downes is responsible for great fun as Captain Jack, and in conjunction with Mr. E. J. Langford (Rupert Ruffles), introduces a variety of amusing business; in Mr. W. F. Frame's Elizabeth there is much to please, and Mr. Albert Felino makes a good cat; Miss Madoline Rees in the part of Dick Whittington has made herself a great favourite, her songs meeting with approval; Miss Lena Vere is a pleasing Alice Fitzwarren, and acts and sings in a finished manner; the Prince of Morocco has a good exponent in Miss Edna Morgan, and Miss Aimee Gray does good work as Fairy Bluebell; Miss Mena Brea shines conspicuously as Zoe, the "Zuyder Zee" song being most successful.

ROYALTY, LTD.—Managing-Director, Mr. F. W. Wyndham; Acting-Manager, Mr. Wm. M. Downie.—Mr. George Dance's company in The Catch of the Season provides a strong attraction at this house for the Christmas and New Year holidays. The engagement ought to have commenced on Monday, but owing to the scenery and dresses going astray on the railway it was Tuesday before a start was made. The first performance, however, was none the worse for the unfortunate hitch, everything going exceedingly well from start to finish. In the part of the Duke of St. Jermyns Mr. Frank Lincoln acts with considerable dash and spirit, an effective contrast being seen in the languid airs of Mr. E. H. Kelly's Lord Dundreary; the gentlemanly parts of Lord Yatton, Higham Montague, Captain Rushpool, and Almerie Montpellier, are very well filled indeed by Messrs. Vivian Willis, Hugh Henson, Herbert Franklyn, and Frank Dillon; two able character studies are given by Mr. H. V. Surrey as Sir John Crystal, and Mr. Alfred Lloyd as Gibson; in Miss Moya Mannering the company possesses a young and charming exponent of the part of Angela; Miss Ida Mann gives an admirable portrayal of Lady Crystal, whose daughters Sophia and Honoria are handsomely represented by Miss Isobel Dickens and Miss Florence Lee respectively; Miss Emily Mellon makes an impressive Duchess of St. Jermyns; the Lady Caterham of Miss Belle Napier is a spirited creation; and quite a hit is made by Master Grata, who fills the role of the page, Bucket, in first-class style.

Macfarlane.—Mr. Fred Karno's picturesque and amusing pantomime, The House that Jack Built, is now in its fourth week, and continues to attract large and appreciated audiences. This production has in addition to beautiful scenery and dresses several other attractive features that make for popularity, such as the stirring musical specialty of the 14th Black Hussars, the comic interludes of the Harmony Four, and the graceful flights of Kirby's Flying Ballet. Furthermore, the leading comedian, Mr. Fred Kitchen (Dame Trot), is a particular favourite in Glasgow, and has quite a following of his own; the principal boy, Miss May Mars, has likewise many admirers here, and her spirited acting and singing as Prince Veritas is sure to add to their number; Miss Luna Love is also proving popular in the rôle of Jack; the parts of the Princess and the Fairy Enchantress are attractively filled by the Sisters Hopkins; the company possesses two accomplished children in Little Maudie Francis (Tommy Tucker) and Wee Mona (Marjory Daw); Mr. Fred Whittaker's cat is an outstanding feature, and as Dame Trot's henpecked husband, Mr. Harry Lappo is very good, other well-filled parts being the Jill of Miss Frances Kapstowne, and the Squire of Mr. Helier le Maistre.

PRINCESS'S.—Sole Proprietor and Manager, Rich. Waldon; Acting-Manager, Hugh Murdoch.—Mother Goose is a pantomime which bids fair to lay golden eggs of artistic and financial excellence for the popular producer of holiday entertainment at this well-known house. The entire performance is carried through with great spirit, and is compassed into fine time limits, even for distance going patrons.

As a result laughter was continuous throughout the evening, and one and all of the principals were accorded the most hearty applause at the conclusion. The book is written by Mr. Joseph L. Barry, and he tells the story well, the action being divided over eleven scenes. Mr. T. D. Tandy as Sir Brokah de Pawn made a first-rate baron, full of quiet touches of humour, and fertile in resource; Mr. Harry Albery is an amusing Araminta, and made a success with "Waiting at the Church," while his dancing was extremely smart; Mr. Dawson Dewick as Soft Sammy was another favourite, and helped the fun along at a brisk rate with his clever business, in addition to which he combines the arduous duties of stage-manager; Miss Amy Allnutt is a brisk and lively Robin Hood, with plenty of animation and a taking style; Miss Belle Travers made an attractive Maid Marian, but was unfortunately hindered by a bad cold from giving full justice to her various songs; a merry second boy and girl were found in Miss Kathleen Emmett as Will Scarlet, and Miss Nellie Dyson as Mavis. Both scored well in song and dance; two extremely smart little girls played the babes, Miss Lilybelle and La Belle Sylvia being just suited to the parts, and catching the fancy of the audience with their respective songs and dances; Messrs. Grapho and Jackson were first-rate as the two ruffians, and in their own songs and business were specially happy; another good couple were Messrs. Farr and Farland as two pages, and they made a valuable addition to the list of funny men; Miss N. Prendergast as Fairy Sylvania, and Mr. Leonard Charles as Infernalito, the Demon King, represented the opposing forces of good and evil, and so ably helped the elucidation of the plot; the Lohrenz Troupe of dancers, and an able chorus and ballet, gave picturesque effect to many of the best scenes; Mr. Ernest Wolfe conducted the augmented orchestra with skill, and kept his forces well in hand.

LEEDS. — QUEEN'S THEATRE. — Lessees, Messrs. Dottridge and Longden; General Manager, Mr. Chas. Longden; Acting-Manager, Mr. Chas. Benson's commendable venture, judging by the crowded houses and the great enthusiasm manifested at the opening performance of A Midsummer Night's Dream, which was presented on Wednesday. There is nothing new to be said of Mr. Benson's accomplished portrait of Lysander; it is the usual high-water mark of excellence. The same remark applies to Mrs. Benson's Titania, her graceful and blithsome presence lending the indispensable lightness to the Queen of the Fairies. Miss Leah Hanman makes a delightful Puck; and Mr. George Buchanan also takes high honours as Oberon; Peter Quince is a traditional and satisfactory effort by Mr. E. A. Warburton; the Duke of Athens is a personation of rare strength and conviction by Mr. Murray Carrington; and that sterling actor Mr. George R. In the rôle of Freddy Popple Mr. Arthur Longley created much merriment, his embodiment deserving much praise; and as Platt Mr. Tom May is also to be singled out for a successful delineation. Mr. L. Bullock Webster as Norman Popple made an excellent impression; Miss Alice Rene as Mrs. Doring and Mr. James Stevenson as Henry Doring played well. S. Edwards as the Emperor of Morocco, and a bevy of ladies as London belles, apprentices, shop-girls, etc., one and all contribute of their individual skill and talent to the success of the "show." "Specialities" are introduced by the Charnleys, the Schallers, the Estos, Messrs. Juan and McQuee, and Correze and Keith, in their astounding electrical equilibristic act. The dresses are pretty and picturesque, and in the Grand Palace scene and procession there is the usual gorgeousness of apparel. The gorgeous lights and the magnificence of the architecture of the interior of the Court and Harem of the Emperor of Morocco, and the final "set," "Whittington's Grand Palace," must also be included in the scenic grandeurs.

"MOTHER GOOSE" AT BELFAST.

On Christmas Eve Mr. Fred W. Warden presented his Palace patrons with another of those successful pantomimes with which his name has always been associated. It is practically certain that Mother Goose, under his able direction, will prove an undoubted success. The book is by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and the well-known story is clearly presented in thirteen scenes, enhanced by some clever local allusions by "S. A. P." The catchy music has been composed and arranged by the talented resident musical conductor, Mr. Samuel P. Swanton, and many of the popular songs, especially "Borneo," will soon be heard all over the city. The handsome costumes were designed by Comelli and J. Howell Russell, and were executed by Mrs. P. Lucy and assistants. The scenery is magnificent, and reflects the utmost credit on Messrs. George A. Jackson, E. H. Ryan, Philip Howden, and G. Jansen. The various scenes represented were The Ruined Abbey, Mother Goose's Cottage, Exterior of the Gold Palace, The Hall of Gold, The Old Curiosity Shop, The Meet at the Model Farm, The Path to the Magic Well, The Wishing Gate, On the Road, By 'Bus, Gooseland, and Heartsease, the last-mentioned scene being admittedly one of the most magnificent stage pictures ever presented to a Belfast audience. The ballets and incidental dances, arranged by Miss Dollie Bell, were decidedly graceful, and formed no unimportant feature of the production. Mr. Warden has been fortunate in securing a brilliant company, comprising some of the most talented artists in the profession. Miss Carlotta Levey at once established herself a firm favourite with her dashing impersonation of Colin, singing some of the most captivating songs with the happiest results. "Don't tell the world your troubles," "Jennie Lee," and "Cheyenne," as rendered by Miss Levey, are sure to become vastly popular. A tremendous success has been achieved by Miss May Moore Duprez, whose performance entitles her to the highest possible commendation. She appears as Gretchen, and had not been long on the stage before she had everybody laughing at her quaint witticisms. She sang "Louisa Schmidt" and "On the Rhine with Stein" inimitably, and her dancing was the very acme of excellence. Mr. Martin Adeson is a host in himself, and in the title-rôle, Mother Goose, he achieved very high honours. Mr. Adeson has the happy knack of keeping the fun going merrily, and he sang several comic songs in capital style. A sweet and bewitching interpretation of the principal girl's part (Jill) was furnished by Miss Molly McIntyre, who cut a dainty figure. Her delightful songs were rapturously received. Miss Elsie Roby must also be congratulated on her success as Lady Biddy, a more charming representative of whom could hardly be found. Miss Roby has one of the song hits of the pantomime in "Borneo," with its swinging chorus, which she renders in capital style. Mr. William Cromwell assists materially by his clever assumption of Jack. He sang "Seaweed," which was heard with much pleasure. Mr. J. P. Marsden, as the Mayor of Tapham, delivers his lines in a Scotch dialect, and introduces some jokes, which take well. Messrs. Harrigan and Holt assist in the humour by their impersonations of The O'Rourke, an Irish nobleman, and Patsy, his younger brother. They sing and dance acceptably. Miss Anna Kenwick has not many opportunities as Lord Shamus, but manages to score decisively in her American song, while her dancing undoubtedly delighted the crowded house on Monday. It is not often we are treated to such a fine impersonation of the Demon as that furnished by Mr. John Donald. He is a capable actor, while his artistic singing of "Let me love thee" (Arditi) fairly brought down the house. Miss May Rawlinson presented a pretty picture as Heartsease (a fairy), and possessed as she is of a cultured voice, rendered the charming song "Will you love me in December as you do in May?" so captivatingly that an encore was inevitable. An animal impersonation of exceeding merit is that of the Golden Goose by Mr. Robert Graham. The well-known Saker-Harlows created roars of laughter as the Donkeys. Minor rôles were well filled by Misses Olive Astor, Mamie Joyce, Nora Elliott, Flo Cooper, Suzanne Graham, L. G. Jones, Lillie Williams, and Rose Capell. Tiller's Superba Troupe of Dancers furnished a skilful exposition of the terpsichorean art; while adequate assistance was also furnished by the Eight Palace Mites. Mr. James Mayall is responsible for the important duties of stage-management. It should be added that the "'Bus" scene is one of the funniest ever presented here, and Messrs. Martin Adeson and the other comedians vie with each other in keeping the audience in perfect shrieks of merriment. This scene would undoubtedly make the fortune of any pantomime. In Mother Goose, Belfast has a pantomime to be proud of, and the warmest thanks are due to Mr. Warden for his enterprise.

"CRUSOE'S ADVENTURES" AT BIRMINGHAM.

Crusoe's Adventures, produced on Christmas Eve at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, met with the heartiest of receptions, and is obviously marked out for a long career. Mr. J. F. Graham apparently possesses an inexhaustible fund of resource, and in his ninth annual Birmingham pantomime he has completely outshadowed and overtopped his previous productions, great as they have always been. The scenic and sartorial effects argue a tremendous outlay, everything in these departments being of a most ornate and dazzling description. Part I. opens in The Depths of the Ocean, by Conrad Tritschler. Next we are transported to Blackpool Sands, an exceedingly fine set by Henry Emden and W. R. Young. The finale to this, with its comic golf scene and rain and umbrella chorus, being very fine and effective. Here Miss Georgina Delmar as Crusoe took the audience in splendid style with her buoyant and graceful acting, and with her songs, "Hullo" and "Sports," made herself favourite Number One. Miss Lulu Valli exercised her vivacious spirit and charming presence in the rôle of Polly Perkins; Mr. Fred Wright, jun., was going strong as Billy Crusoe; Mr. George Miller was getting on well as the Widow; while Mr. J. F. McArdle was bearing himself well as Will Atkins. Thus we find ourselves On the Pier (F. Le Maistre), where first Mr. Miller delivered himself as the Widow in the rôle of a lady suffragette, an effort which duly told. Polly Perkins, dressed as a boy, is next seen, and here Miss Valli made a decisive hit with the song "The light of the honeymoon," which has a pretty embellishment in the background. The subsequent scene, Aboard the Hurry-Up, where Crusoe sings with much success "On the Banks of the Zuyder Zee," is made richly diverting throughout, and the duet, "Tooral Looral," by Messrs. McArdle and Wright, was encored vociferously. A succession of tableaux follow The Wreck, which, with its tremendous realism, evoked tempestuous applause; and The Realms of Coral, in which a grand ballet takes place, which, with its varied delights, brought down the house, concludes Part I. The second part reveals Mr. Colin Coop as the Cannibal King, with pretty Miss Nell Emerald as his daughter, the Princess Apollinaris, who, it was easy to see, was already a favourite with the audience. Miss Emerald went through her part in her well-known merry style, and at once proceeded to make violent love to Billy Crusoe, with whom she showed all her graces and fascinations in the duet, "Waltz me again, Willie." Mr. Colin Coop established the popularity of King Koko with "My Bungalow in Borneo"; and the Haytors, who make their appearance in this scene as Friday and Saturday, received a welcome in the duet, "The Slippery Crocodile" and "Crusoe's Island Home," by Conrad Tritschler, affords opportunities for the Haytors to shine in their speciality, which is certainly better than ever; and a humorous dialogue between Will Atkins (disguised as a woman) and Mrs. Crusoe was richly enjoyed. In the Heart of the Island, where Billy Crusoe establishes a cigar divan, is succeeded by the last scene of all, The King's Palace, which is a veritable blaze of light and colour, all harmoniously arranged, and which, with its gorgeous procession of Amazon Guards and other interminable features, filled the audience with enthusiasm, till Mr. Graham was compelled to acknowledge the compliment in company with his principals.

As is indicated above, all the artists shape well. Miss Georgina Delmar acts well and sings charmingly as Crusoe, while her fine figure is shown to advantage in the several costumes she adorns. In addition to the songs mentioned above she contributes several others, including "Firefly," which, as is the case with most of the songs here, is pleasantly illustrated by scenic and other costly effects. Miss Lulu Valli imbues her rôle of Polly Perkins with an artless manner and a light-hearted vivacity which brings the audience to her feet, and all her songs are rendered with melodic charm. Miss Clara Stanton is a dashing Captain; and Miss Louie Collier's fine voice is heard with considerable pleasure and enthusiasm, both in solos and in conjunction with Mr. Frederick Hobbs as Davy Jones. Miss Nell Emerald, also previously mentioned, is an undoubted strong factor in the success with her pretty talents and looks. Mr. J. F. McArdle contributes a rich infusion of humour in his own inimitable manner as Will Atkins, his subtlety and power being conspicuous throughout. Mr. George Miller's humour as Mrs. Crusoe is as expansive and liberal as is his girth, and his singing of "My wife won't let me," which is prefaced by the Wedding March, which he humorously calls the Maiden's Prayer, is marked with much humour, as are all his essays. Mr. Fred Wright, junior, wins much favour with his blithesome acting of the light-hearted Billy Crusoe, and our old friends the Haytors seem really better than ever, as is pointed out above. Mr. W. Southworth's musicianly and also taking style in orchestration is again exemplified, Miss Rose Tyrell's genious in the work of the ballet has borne excellent fruit, and it may be said that her forces are more than ever charming and apt in their gyrations; and the whole production is redolent of charm and humour, which is sure to have its effect in large houses for many weeks to come, for which Mr. Henry Johnstone is doubtless prepared to cope with in that happy business-like style that has always characterised his methods.

"CINDERELLA" AT BIRMINGHAM.

Mr. Lester Collingwood has added indubitably and incalculably to the gaiety of the festive season with his fourth Birmingham annual pantomime, which he produced under the above title on Boxing Night at the Alexandra Theatre. Mr. Collingwood's patrons have an emphatic way of expressing their satisfaction, and on Wednesday satisfaction was rife, the debonair producer and proprietor at the end being summoned with many huzzas to receive the favourable verdict of his well-pleased clientèle. To account for this it must be readily granted that Mr. Collingwood has put on this most delightful of fairy stories in the very best style, and strikes the key-note of success at the opening, "The Forest Glade," a scene of real artistic beauty. Here we see a stage-full of graceful chorus ladies, joined by the Prince's retinue, all of whom are conspicuous for their pretty looks and smart dresses. The characters are wisely and well apportioned, Miss Minnie D'Auban is the Prince, Miss Bessie Butt, a young lady endowed with many graces and talents, plays Cinderella, and the Sisters Lunelle are cast as Dandini and Rosini. The Brothers Obo disport as the Ugly Sisters, and Mr. Harry Talbot appears as the Baron. An invitation to the ball ensues, and at Baron's Library we see preparations which in their diversity and diversion make for much mirth. The Baron's Kitchen is the scene of further fun, and later, the Ball Room captivates the audience with its elegant setting, the glitter of which and the gaiety of the artists filled the audience with the greatest delight. The reception of Cinderella in a fairy coach drawn by four miniature ponies is most effective, and the story proceeds to the end in a satisfactory manner. The scenery is by Alfred Whyatt and Son, and is most excellent throughout, and the always well-designed and ornate dresses are by Mrs. Maxwell Payne, costumier to this theatre, Mr. John Gill being responsible for the arrangement of the music.

As Cinderella, Miss Bessie Butt at once caught on most emphatically, her efforts being greeted with repeated applause. She acts with delightful naïveté, and her singing and dancing are marked by many little tricks and graces. Miss Minnie D'Auban as the Prince possesses a fine figure and a capital singing voice, which will make its mark in the production, and bring this clever artist much popularity here. The Sisters Lunelle vouchsafe several taking duets and dances in the characters of Dandini and Rosini, to which rôles they do excellent justice, and the Misses Vera Guedes and Gladys Clare are meritorious as the Demon and the Fairy Godmother respectively; while Miss Marie Le Frane is sure to become popular by reason of her smart dancing. The Brothers Obo do an immense amount of work, all of which is of a clever order, and their impersonations of the Ugly Sisters is entirely without offence, and much appreciated by their following, which their present engagement is certain to largely increase. Mr. Harry Talbot proves a capable and amusing Baron, Mr. J. G. Aitken contributes many amusing moments as Buttons, Messrs. D'Arcy Kelway and Syd Sylvester indubitably add to the score as the two disreputable broker's men, their business being of a most comical order; and Mr. Fred Barnes as the Duke of Solihull dresses immaculately, and sings and walks the stage in the most perfect manner. The specialities include the accomplished and charming Florence and Lillian, who in the Ball Room scene are enthusiastically applauded for their artistic vocal and instrumental efforts, while Jackson's Eight Lancashire Lads are another popular feature of the programme. Another most acceptable item is the harlequinade, which is represented on the Bioscope, and for which Mr. Collingwood has secured the sole local rights.

"THE QUEEN OF HEARTS" AT BIRMINGHAM.

Twenty-three years have passed since The Queen of Hearts was previously performed in Birmingham. The present version, which is Mr. Tom B. Davis's third Birmingham pantomime, was produced on Boxing Day at the Theatre Royal by Mr. Robert Arthur on a scale of magnificence never before attempted here, much less excelled. Act 1 opens at the City of Kardallah, a rich setting, with an opening chorus of peasants, guards, &c., which, with the natural grace of the gayly-dressed participants, made a visible impression at once. Here, to the inspiring strains of chorus and orchestra, Miss Millie Lindon made her appearance as Prince Florizel, and it was not long ere her refined and restful manner proved its acceptability. Estrella, the witch's daughter (Miss Valli-Valli), follows, pursued by the crowd, but finds a champion and a lover in Florizel. Diversion is created by the appearance of Mr. George Robey as the Queen of Hearts, supported by Mr. T. A. Shale as the King. Next arrives the Knave of Hearts, represented by the slyly-humorous Mr. Edward Lewis, and who, aided and egged on by Armida, the witch (Miss Helen Cecile), seeks to usurp the throne of the King. Scene 2, A Boarding-house on Borderland, shows Mr. Tom Hearn as the Grand Slam, amusing the audience with his cleverly-quaint juggling act. How Florizel follows the maid and slays the dragon is shown in a variety of scenes, remarkable for their impressive beauty and grandeur. Mr. George Robey, it is certain, never worked better in his life than he does now as the Queen of Hearts, and it is a treat to see him in such fine fettle. His comic business is always effective, there is humour in his eye, and his songs, which include "The Dresser," "Solid and Substantial," "Oh, oh!" &c., are accented with all his accustomed ability. Mr. Edward Lewis bears out the character of the Knave with inexpressibly sly drollery, and his share towards the success cannot be over-estimated. His songs are redolent of humour, and his popularity is unbounded. Mr. T. A. Shale as the King is also very successful, his comic encounters with the Queen being capitally sustained, and his vocal ability is proven in "Dandy Pete," in which he receives valuable assistance from the chorus. Mr. Tom Hearn, both in his part as the Grand Slam, and also in his popular speciality, is taken into great favour. Miss Millie Lindon's handsome presence in the rôle of Prince Florizel is admired on all sides, while her taste in imparting due point to her songs, including "Barcelona," is not without its reward, the plaudits of the house being liberally bestowed on this lady. Miss Valli-Valli plays Estrella with a dainty charm, and sings the songs allotted the rôle with clever distinction, and speedily gets home in the affections of the audience. As Fortuna, Miss Ethel Haydon acts as the good genius of the piece, and displays a voice of exquisite purity and tone which is heard often, and with the utmost pleasure; and Miss Helen Cecile in the contrary part, Armida, acted her vengeful rôle in a most thorough manner. The scenery, which is by W. T. Hemsley, G. E. W. McKie, and Stafford Hall, fills the mind with amazement at its luxurious and dazzling proportions; while the ballets are remarkable for their graceful intricacies. Mr. Michael Ring is the stage-manager, and is responsible for the work of production; and Mr. Guy Jones again shows his sterling worth as conductor of the orchestra. The book is by Mr. Frank Dix.

"SINDBAD" AT BRIDLINGTON.

The first production of a pantomime in Bridlington took place on Monday evening, Mr. Chas. Palmer having engaged Miss Lena Stanton and Mr. Harry Joseph to present at the Grand Pavilion Theatre their "annual," which this year is entitled Sindbad the Sailor, and reflects the greatest credit on the producers. The book follows fairly closely the story of Sinbad, the lyrics being by Mr. Joseph, and the special and incidental music by Mr. Charles Ambler. The scenery by Francis Bull is splendidly done, and the costumes are very choice and effective. There are eleven scenes, the most effective of which are Scene IV., a capital represenation of the deck of the Blathermaskite, with mechanical change to the open sea, with Sinbad's raft, the hero clinging to the mast; the Diamond Valley is also a beautiful picture, remarkable for its beautiful variety of colouring and jewel effects. Mr. Joseph has gathered a good array of talent to assist, the principal, of course, being Miss Stanton, who as Sinbad finds plenty of scope for her talent, which is of a very high order, her beautiful stage presence and excellent singing and dancing winning for her quite an ovation. Miss Marie Santley gave a good rendering of the part of the Princess Zazora; Miss Ethel Errol was a fine, dashing Captain Selim. Miss Lillie Richardson, the Princess Fatima, and Miss Jennie Bradbury, the Queen, were good in their parts. Mr. Will Terry as Shipwrecker gave a capital show as "the bold bad pirate." Messrs. Farrell and Gorman did well as Bizdad and Luizdad, and Mr. George Raper was an excellent King Crusty. As Sinbad the Sailor the great Little Keeno was constantly in evidence with his fire and dash, his clever humour and remarkable display of both singing and dancing stamping him as one of the cleverest boy comedians on the stage. Mr. Bruce Green as Mrs. Sinbad had every opportunity of showing off his particular talent for displaying the character of the old lady, all his songs and dances being embellished with capital "business." The other characters were in capable hands, Mr. B. N. George being a good Old Man of the Sea; Mr. Fred Durley as Captain Cuttle; Mr. Adrian Romer as the Caliph; Mr. Chas. Leamington as the Grand Vizier; and Mr. S. D. Southey as the Storm King all doing well. Fairy Good Fortune was nicely played by Miss Dolly Richardson, and as Adventure, Industry, and Energy Misses Ella Streatley, Marie Murey, and Elsie Streatley scored. The chorus was well trained, and gave a very good account of the various numbers they sang, and the lighting effects showed the great capabilities of the new theatre to advantage, Mr. Palmer having given special attention to this department. The variety turns included the Alhambra Girls, charming vocalists and dancers; Wyman, a clever trick skater; Mr. P. J. Durney, an expert globe roller; the Deroneys, wire walkers and smart tumblers, &c.; Farrell and Gorman, musical eccentrics; and "J," the Ventriloquial Josser, in his scena "The Don and the Dance."

"CINDERELLA" AT BRIGHTON.

Mr. Ernest Carpenter may be warmly and deservedly congratulated upon the great success he achieved at the Grand last Monday evening, when his fairy pantomime, Cinderella, was produced, and met with a very enthusiastic reception. Written and invented by Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Carpenter, with topical and local "hits" by Mr. Low Warren, the pantomime possesses all those essentials which combine to make the success of a Christmas entertainment. It is refined in character, and yet highly amusing; it is rich in spectacular display; it is replete with charming singing and dancing; and the members of the company entrusted with its representation work together with such enthusiasm that it will be surprising if Cinderella does not prove the best of the series of pantomimes produced at the Grand. The new and elaborate scenery, painted by Mr. David Young, merits unstinted praise; many of the scenes are highly picturesque; and while The Enchanted Wood, The Crystal Cave, and The Gardens of the Palace are beautiful stage pictures, it must be acknowledged that in The Fairy Boudoir and The Prince's Ball Room, with their pretty and charming groupings, Mr. Young has achieved his greatest successes. The music, tuneful and bright, is composed and arranged by Signor G. D. La Camera, who may be congratulated upon his sparkling and melodious numbers. The children are trained and the ballets are arranged by Miss Maud Percy; the costumes are designed by Miss Ada Clarence, and executed under her personal direction; the mechanical and electrical effects are by Mr. W. Blades and Mr. Arthur Hart respectively; the fairy coach and elaborate properties are by Mr. J. Darby; and the whole is produced by Mr. Ernest Carpenter, assisted by Mr. J. D. Newton. The book is admirably written, and provides an excellent version of the old and familiar fairy story. The characters are all admirably portrayed. Miss Gracie delighted the audience with her dashing and artistic representation of Prince Aureole. She carried off the highest vocal honours of the performance, and achieved conspicuous success by her very expressive renderings of "Little Snow White," "The Rose of My Heart," and "The Zuyder Zee." She also proved herself an excellent dancer. Miss Kitty Clinton was vivacious as Dandini, the Prince's valet, and was warmly applauded for her admirable treatment of the song "It's a different girl again." No small share of the success of the performance was due to Mr. Jack O'Connor, whose humorous portrayal of the Page will doubtless make him a great favourite. While he occupied the stage the house rippled with laughter evoked by his quaint and droll eccentricities. Miss Evelyn O'Connor also deserves warm commendation for her enactment of Cinderella, and with Mr. Jack O'Connor submitted two very entertaining burlesque interludes. Mr. F. Hulme Sharp gave a capital representation of Baron FitzNeedy and assisted greatly as a provider of fun. Mr. Syd Walker as Buttercup and Mr. Cliff Lake as Daisy—the ugly sisters—were a diverting pair, and raised many a laugh with their cross-patter and smart gags. Their travesty of "In the shade of the old apple tree" was a capital piece of nonsense. Miss Winnie Chapman was completely successful as the Fairy Godmother, and gave her lines with clear enunciation and artistic emphasis. Miss Mary Clifford as Sir Roger de Coverley and Miss Florence Martyn as Sir Geoffrey Plantagenet—leaders of the "smart set"—looked their parts to perfection; and Mr. Edgar Budden, in addition to acting cleverly as the famous cat, Thomas, won great applause as a skate dancer. Minor characters were satisfactorily sustained by Miss Connie Rimington (Robin), Miss Eileen Terence (Dorcas), and Mr. Billy Sivane (Nailem). The Imperial Glee Quartette, who figured as the Prince's Men-at-Arms, contributed several glees with artistic finish; and Miss Maud Percy as the principal dancer deserves a special word of praise. The pantomime was lavishly mounted, and, judging from its very hearty reception, will enjoy a long and prosperous career.

"CINDERELLA" AT BRISTOL.

Cinderella is the subject of the pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Bristol, it being successfully produced on the 22nd instant. The book is by Mr. H. B. Maxwell; the music is composed and arranged by Mr. Edwin Jacobs and Mr. Surtees Corne; the costumes by Miss B. Raye and assistants; wigs by Fox and Company; mechanical effects by Mr. H. Blake; electric lighting by George Brummell; and properties by W. Sullivan and assistants. The pantomime is produced by Messrs. J. D. Hunter and Sidney Cooper, it being stage-managed by Mr. Ernest Marsh. Mr. Maxwell's book is a good example of pantomime-writing; the accepted story of Cinderella is followed on customary lines, permitting good scope for comic interludes and other specialities. The scenes have been painted in truly artistic style by Mr. William D. Hobbs, of Bristol. The mounting of the pantomime generally is quite up to the standard expected at the Royal, the costumes being exceptionally rich and tasteful; the chorus is effective and harmonious; the ballets and incidental dances are well performed, both by adults and children, and the extra ladies are improving in appearance and dress. Popular songs are allotted to the various principals, there being every reason to believe that the pantomime will be one of the most successful produced at this old and historic theatre. Miss Mimi Fisher makes a bright and imposing principal boy, doing full justice to the elegant dresses of the Prince, and singing her various songs well; perhaps the success of the evening was Miss Fisher's song and dance, "The Zuyder Zee," assisted by two little girls in Dutch costumes and sabots. Miss Dolly Denton is pleasing as Cinderella, her style is pretty, and she sings and dances well; Miss Cissy Hilton is decidedly smart as Dandini, obtaining applause for her songs; Cordelia and Camelia (the Ugly Sisters) are cleverly impersonated by the Misses Cherrie Wardroper and Blanche Bayley, they both sing effectively, and are really amusing both in style and make-up; Miss May Lawrence is well placed as Cherry, a superior domestic at the Baron's, and she dances well; Miss Alys Eden is a pleasing vocalist, quite realising the idea of the Fairy Godmother; and Lord Veriwise, King of Periotts, Earl of Brislington, and Lord Clifton have capable exponents in the Misses Aggie Fenton, Marie Vincent, Alex. Ross, and Ella Deane. The comedians all work very hard, their united efforts doing much for the success of the pantomime. These are Messrs. Walter Kooney (Grabem), Harry Carr (Ceesem), Allan Wye (Baron Doonaught), and A. G. Spry (Spritely). They all have amusing songs, and take part in comic specialities. In the ball-room scene a pretty solo character dance is effectively given by Miss Marie Vincent.

"HUMPTY DUMPTY" AT BRISTOL.

On Saturday Humpty Dumpty was produced at the Prince's Theatre, Bristol. The pantomime went with remarkable smoothness for a first performance, it evidently suiting the popular taste. The several scenes are magnificent examples of the well-known work of Mr. George Jackson, with the exception of "Outside the Palace," which is a good specimen of artistic brush work by Mr. E. H. Ryan. The costumes are rich and tasteful, being designed by Comelli, and executed in the theatre by Miss Shapcott, Mrs. Bristowe, and assistants, and Messrs. Aliss, of London and Paris. Mr. G. B. Chapman has composed and arranged suitable music; the ballets and incidental dances are arranged by Miss Minnie Smith, the machinery and mechanical effects are by Mr. H. Wilson, properties and paraphernalia by Mr. H. Momber, electric lighting and dioramic effects are by Mr. Arthur Bawn, and the wigs are supplied by Gustave, London, and Mr. H. J. Webb, Bristol. The pantomime is produced and stage-managed by Mr. Henry Turner, to whose taste and skill much credit must be given, assisted by Mr. David Fisher, junior; and the entire production is under the personal supervision of Mr. James Macready Chute. The ancient legend of Humpty Dumpty is well told by Mr. J. Hickory Wood in his clever "Book of the Words."

Miss Sybil Arundale's pleasing personality well suits her for Rudolph, the principal boy; she is always graceful and vivacious, and when necessary can put a lot of pathos into her voice. Miss Arundale has some pleasing numbers, and does full justice to them. Miss Maud Darling plays Princess Aurora in excellent style, she sings well and might with advantage have more scope for her smart dancing; Prince Spriteley and Cherry (a pierrette) have capital exponents in Miss Olive Crellin and Miss Winnie Volt; Gentle Julia (of the circus) is well represented by Miss Lutie Griffiths; and Miss Hebe Bliss is graceful as Claribel (the Spirit of Generosity), speaks her lines well, and sings in approved style. The comedians are well up to the mark:—Mr. Bert Gilbert does all that is possible with the part of King Sollumm, and is very amusing; Mr. Fred Conquest has evidently made a good study of Humpty Dumpty; it is a difficult part to play, there being no scope for anything approaching comic business, but Mr. Conquest, in a semi-pathetic and serious style, renders the peculiar character interesting from many points of view. Mr. Horace Mills makes a capital Dame, his Martha (a widow, subsequently Queen Martha) is quaint and amusing in a quiet and effective style; his songs all go well and will no doubt become popular. Bison Bob is played by "Carlton" in an effective manner; he gives his clever exposition of card manipulation and some neat conjuring tricks, obtaining considerable applause for his efforts. Messrs. Griffiths Brothers are successful as Brick and Brack; they have an amusing act as a ferocious lion and its trainer, and also with Miss Lutie Griffiths do a funny camel act. Mr. Charles Wakeman makes the most of his opportunities as the King's Jester; and Mr. Cyril Thompson sings well, and acts effectively as Soaro, the Spirit of Ambition.

Tiller's "Superba" Quartette appears successfully in speciality dances; the ballet is well trained, costumed to perfection, and highly effective; the chorus is strong and tuneful; and a large contingent of extra ladies and gentlemen, all dressed in approved style, add much to the effect of some of the stage pictures.

"LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD" AT CHESTER.

This pantomime was produced at the Royalty Theatre, Chester, at a matinée given on Boxing Day. The book by Victor Stevens follows the traditional lines, and is written in the old rhyming style. Mr. Fred Maple as the Squire is responsible for much humorous business. The wolf is suitably enacted by Mr. J. W. Brighten. Mr. Maitland Marler as the Dame has two capital songs in "Let me sing," and "Riding on top of a car," the chorus of the latter being quickly taken up by the "gods." Mr. Billie Taylor in an eccentric make-up appears to great advantage as Simple Simon. Mr. Henry De Solla gives an admirable character study of the rascally old lawyer, Slyfox. Mr. Dennis Curzon makes the most of the small part of Johnny Stout. Miss Lily Palmer does well as Jack, whilst Jill, in the person of Miss Amy Maple, is quickly a favourite. A stately Prince is found in Miss Kitty Malone, who is possessed of a fine presence and a taking style. Miss Marie Beaufort as Fairy Gossamer is well placed, and tastefully renders the song, "A dear old sweetheart." Mr. Reuben Kitchen causes much amusement as Rover the dog. Miss Mamie Iris is a dainty Little Red Riding Hood, her acting being all that could be desired, and she receives a well-deserved encore for her song, "Bamboo Bungalow," in which she is assisted by a little girl in the dress-circle. In addition to the vocal numbers already mentioned we must not forget a tuneful effort, "The Zuyder Zee," sung by Miss Amy Maple, which goes with a swing right through. The pantomime, which is splendidly dressed and mounted, is under the stage-direction of Mr. Henry De Solla. Specialities are contributed by Mlle. Onra on the slack wire, the Alhambra Trio, a troupe of graceful dancers, and the Maples, whose turn is one of the principal attractions of the show.

"BABES IN THE WOOD" AT CROYDON.

An excellent new fairy version of Babes in the Wood was produced, under the direction of Mr. Harry Carmen, at the Theatre Royal, Croydon, on Boxing Day, and we can at once compliment Mr. Samuel James upon a pantomime which is admirable alike both for fun and splendour. The story has been cleverly pieced together by Mr. Newman Maurice, and is told in a breezy and entertaining manner—in fact, the whole book shows genuine work and is worthy of unstinted praise. Mr. John Reillie is a perfect masterpiece at pantomime music, and this year's efforts confirm the surmise that he would be hard to beat in this particular line. Throughout the whole of the piece his tuneful melodies and catchy airs are a prominent and pleasing feature. Many beautiful scenes have been painted for the annual, and special mention must be made of the artistic sets, Nottingham Market Place on Fair Day, Sherwood Forest, and The Grand Hall in Nottingham Castle. A good deal of attention has been paid to the dresses and ballets, and this department reflects credit on those concerned. A smart all-round company has been engaged, and their reception at the opening performance proved that their efforts were rightly directed. Miss Beatie Benson makes a charming and dainty Bertie, and quickly establishes herself a general favourite. She has a nice partner to work with in Miss Lily Farrer as Gertie, who has a neat style with her which wins all hearts. Miss Flo Varley possesses a handsome stage presence and pleasing voice, and she imparts the necessary spirit and go to the rôle of Robin Hood; and Miss Daisy Lane makes a palpable hit as Maid Marion, sustaining the part with unceasing animation and singing with taste and expression. Miss Marie Dare makes the most of her opportunities in the character of Will Scarlett, and Miss Rosie Lewin pushes her part to the front as Lucrettia. Messrs. Blarney and Kennard are comically villainous and work with a will as Rob and Plunder, the house being kept in a roar the whole time they occupy the stage. Mr. Allan Dale acts and speaks in the best spirit of burlesque as Baron Snatchall, and his frivolities cause many a laugh; Mr. Harry Carmen is delightfully fresh and racy as Baroness Snatchall, enacting the rôle with a tinge of unctuous humour, which is hugely appreciated; Mr. Edwin Bell just touches the right note as Santa Claus; Mr. Herbert Hall gives a graphic performance as the Demon Malice; Mr. Edward Benson is quite up to his work as the Sheriff of Nottingham; Mr. Jack Binns contributes his full quota in the part of Friar Tuck; and Miss Dorothy Oswald presents a cheerful front as Fairy Diamonde. Mr. Harry Montague as clown is responsible for the harlequinade, and he receives able assistance from Mr. Fred Austin as harlequin, Mr. Phil. Maurice (always reliable) as pantaloon, Mr. Thomas Edwin as policeman, and Miss Rosie Lewin as columbine. Mr. Charles Herrick looks after the front of the house in a satisfactory manner.

"THE FORTY THIEVES" AT DERBY.

Mr. Edwardes has arranged with Mr. Fred Granville for the production of the pantomime at the Grand Theatre and Opera House on the familiar story of The Forty Thieves, the first performance taking place on Christmas Eve. The book has been specially written by Mr. Joseph L. Barry. Costumes are by Mrs. Howarth, and the scenery has been specially painted by Messrs. E. Egerton. The properties are by Messrs. James Thomas, and the electric effects are by Messrs F. Crawley. Miss Emmie Milsted, who enacts Morgiana, is a lady of considerable versatility and vivacity. She throws the whole resources of her art into her performance, and works with commendable energy all through. Combined with an attractive personality, albeit she plays the part "coloured," she has a pleasing voice, is a clever dancer, and there is a refreshing vein of originality running through all she does. Miss Flo Warner, who plays Ganem, is another thoroughly experienced pantomime artist, and contributes largely to the success of the production. Of her singing and dancing it is impossible to speak in terms too commendatory, and she introduces several excellent songs, which are warmly encored. Miss Edna Cragge, who is a popular pantomime boy, presents a dashing Abdullah, and her abilities secure her a cordial reception. The Sisters Poole, who play second boy and girl, are dainty dancers, and are in every way satisfactory. Mr. Sid Cotterell, the Hassarac of the piece, is diverting, and extracts the utmost that is to be got out of his part. A number of good songs are allotted to him, and he bids fair to become one of the prime favourites of the pantomime. As Ali Baba Mr. Allan Carruthers is deserving, and acquits himself of his songs and general business with acceptation. He receives very efficient assistance from Mr. Dan Agar, who appears as Cogia Baba. The two have a laughable duet, and introduce some smart patter. Mr. Carthage Caldcleugh as Cassim submits a new and novel interpretation of that character, is a gifted actor, and is to be heartily congratulated. Mr. Joe Bell is thoroughly good as Mustapha; and the Moketta of Mr. Wattie Griffin is a very funny performance. The specialities are of a high grade character, Messrs. Burley and Burley are wonderfully clever knockabout artists; the Sisters Poole, who are mentioned above, are pleasing features of the programme; Mr. Wattie Griffin is responsible for some marvellous contortionist work; and the special turn of the Achmed Ibrahim troupe of real Bedouin Arabs, ten in number, is of a truly remarkable character. The pantomime is very effectively mounted, and the arrangements generally leave little if anything to be desired. Mr. Granville is assisted by Mr. J. L. Berry as general manager, Mr. Carthage Caldcleugh is stage manager, and Mr. Arthur W. Parry is musical director.

"MOTHER GOOSE" AT DUNDEE.

Mr. R. A. P. Williams produced his pantomime, Mother Goose, on Monday evening at the Gaiety Theatre, Dundee, before a packed and very appreciative house. The book, by Mr. Arthur Lee Todd, is exceptionally well written; the music selected and arranged by Mrs. R. A. P. Williams and Mr. Wm. Hartley is sparkling, and the dresses are dreams of loveliness. The seven scenes into which the pantomime is divided are all painted by Mr. R. W. Miller, and right well has he done his work. Scene II., Mother Goose's Poultry Farm, is a really charming picture. Scene IV., The Grounds of De Goose Hall," is also another beautiful bit of stage setting, but words fail to describe the gorgeousness and dazzling beauty of the palace scene, in which some wonderful and elaborate electric devices are introduced with happy results. When the splendour and magnificence of this scene were at their height an extraordinary scene of enthusiasm was witnessed, the vast audience cheering and shouting themselves hoarse with delight. Mr. Williams then appeared on the stage and spoke a few words of thanks for the brilliant reception of the pantomime. He then introduced Mr. Miller, the scenic artist, who had a perfect ovation. The production does not, however, depend for success upon its spectacular effects. There is no lack of comedians, foremost among whom is Mr. Sam Thomson (Sandy), whose energy is only equalled by his supreme ability to keep his audience amused. Mr. J. Telly Dillsen, as Mother Goose, displays his undoubted powers as a comedian, and Mr. Tom Packer has a capital part as the Bold Bad Squire, singing a really clever medley song with great success. Mr. Tom Nearney scores as the lawyer, and to Mr. Arthur Lee Todd and Mr. James Chartres, who, as policemen, supply the knockabout business, nothing but praise can be given. Mr. Michael Kemble plays the demon dramatically, and his fine voice is heard to much advantage in the songs which fall to his share. Miss Gertie Douglas (Colin) made a dashing principal boy, singing and acting throughout delightfully. Several pretty numbers fall to her share, including that catchy ditty "A different girl again," which was encored over and over again. Miss Winnie Darrell, who plays "His Sweetheart," has also an excellent voice, and her dances are remarkably neat and graceful. The songs in which she is most successful are "Good-night, Mr. Brown," and the tuneful "Zuyder Zee." Miss Nan Dowling and Miss Kitty Hildrew, the second boy and girl respectively, are another very popular couple. No pantomime would be complete without the fairy queen, and no daintier representative could be desired than Miss Catherine May, whose tasteful singing and sweet voice made her a warm favourite. Quite a feature of the pantomime is the specialities introduced by the Stuart Quartette of vocalists and dancers, and a special word of praise should be accorded to Master Jones for his clever representation of the Goose. The fall of the curtain was the signal for a further outburst of prolonged applause, and Mr. Williams is to be congratulated on the brilliant success of the pantomime, on which no pains and expense have been spared to make it what it is—the very best ever produced at this theatre.

"SINDBAD" AT GATESHEAD.

On Boxing Day Mr. Samuel James produced the second King's pantomime, Sindbad the Sailor. Mr. Newman Maurice has written the book in rhyme and has done his work well. The scenery, by Mr. Harry Drury and assistants, is of the best, and the music by Mr. W. T. Gliddon and Mr. Arthur Meredyth (who controls the augmented orchestra) is a strong feature. The dresses are by Clarkson, the mechanical effects by Mr. A. George, electrical arrangements by Mr. A. Bryan, and the properties by Mr. G. Wilson, the whole being under the supervision of Mr. Thos. Barrie. Chief amongst the ladies we have Miss Fifi Gordon, who supplies an impersonation of Sindbad which earns for her unstinted praise. In charming style she renders "It's a different girl again" and "Zuyder Zee," the latter of which is a great success. Miss Gordon also excels in dancing, her effort in the cave scene being rewarded with hearty applause. All the dresses worn by Miss Gordon have been made by the lady herself. Next in favour comes Miss Beaty Kent, who as Sadie becomes a favourite early on. Her vocal contributions include a duet with Sindbad entitled "I want no other little girl," and "Sailing in my balloon." Mr. James is to be complimented upon his selection of an artist for the Dame part, Mr. Tom Collins being a comedian well suited for the part. At no time does his humour approach the vulgar, and his topical ditties are rendered in an appreciably easy style. Time will prove Mr. Collins one of the stoutest pillars of the show. Mr. Herbert Fuller (the company manager) works hard in the rôle of Vanderdecken, his mock dramatic business proving a huge hit. As Tinbad Mr. Tod Squires does well. The Misses Tennis and Lawn as Selim and Yosan are to the front, and Miss Agnes Fancheux as Fairy Coralie sings acceptably. Mr. George H. Keith is deserving of praise for his Old Man of the Sea, whilst Messrs. Bishop and Vale provide abundant amusement with their knock-about business. Messrs. Salida and Vone, a couple of coloured performers, fill the rôles of the King and Queen and delight everybody with their ragtime dancing. Miss Lilian Morris as the Prince, Miss Agness Collier as the Princess, Mr. Stanley Blake as Caliph, and Mr. Archie Herbert as the monkey lend useful assistance. The dancing of Miss Idalia May is one of the principal features.

"BABES IN THE WOOD" AT GLASGOW.

Mr. Arthur Jefferson is to be congratulated on the success of his production of The Babes in the Wood at the Metropole Theatre on Saturday evening, in presence of a house crowded in every part. The alternative title is The Tale of the Two Robbers and the Wicked King Wow-Wow, and it is carried through in two parts of seven and five scenes, the libretto by Charles Wilmot and the music by Carl Hamlin. Mr. Edmund Edmunds is responsible for the entire production, in which he also takes a very large share of the work. The vocal and dance music has been well chosen, and a number of airs popular throughout the country in pantomime this year are included. The scenery, dresses and appointments are on a very lavish scale, and the splendour of everything is best seen in the two brilliant scenes, Nos. 5 and 12 respectively, The Grand Hall of the Palace and The Rose Garden of a Thousand Lights. Another scene, No. 7, The Allchange Junction, is the venue where much rollicking fun and mischief are engaged in. Miss Rose Hamilton, as Prince Radiant, is not forgotten as a principal boy. Her reception was flattering on her first entrance, and her performance throughout was distinctly clever and engaging. Despite a cold, she sang charmingly, and in many dances was no less successful, encores falling repeatedly to her admired efforts. Miss Lucy Lynch, as Princess Dainty, looked the part ideally, having a refined manner and a style and grace quite in keeping with such a leading rôle. She has some capital songs, and made a very fine appearance in several dances, both solo and concerted. Miss Hamilton and she have plenty of concerted work to do, and, to their credit, it is exquisitely performed. Miss Cecilia Maude, as Sunshine, the Fairy Queen, is tall and handsome, and her singing is a feature of a performance of sterling excellence. She is also an elocutionist of ability, and was quite deserving of the success she made. Mr. Reginald Hamilton, as Malignant, has a fine presence, and sings well, in a voice of capital baritone quality, and he proved a formidable demon. Mr. Jas Dunlop, as the Spirit of Pantomime, does well in a part a little more of which would not have been amiss. Messrs. Bernard and Weston, two clever comedians, are in fine parts as King Wow and Pip, his attendant. They most heartily enter into their work, and combine splendidly, are much in evidence, and the moments are never dull while they are on. Two delightful Babes have been found in Miss Blanche Albert and Miss Ada Merry. They sing in tuneful style, and sweetness and expression are notable, while they please greatly with their dances. Mr. Mark Tapley is a first-rate dame. As Widow Trumble he is responsible for much of the fun, notably in the Schoolroom scene, where he is exceedingly droll. He has a fine supporter in Mr. Ernie Sparks, as Tommy, and both come in for much applause for their very hearty laughter-making. A gay and bright artist is Miss Patti Bella as Sir Bertie Boulevard, and she lends admirable help in all she does, as does Miss Amy Martine as Dolly Daydream. This lady, also, has capital chances as a singer and dancer, and makes the most of these in a vivacious manner. Miss Vinnie Edmunds, in the rôle of Mollie Mildred, and Mr. Patrick Playfair do all that falls to them in capital style. The latter as Fanfare, the King's paper-bearer, is a resourceful artist, and is particularly successful. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Jas. Albert and Mr. Edmund Edmunds, who are about as hard-working a couple of comedians as have graced a Glasgow pantomime for a long time. As Horatio Hardface and Sammy Softun, the broker's men, they prove irresistibly funny, and are responsible for many amusing situations. In the railway-station, airship, and other scenes they simply revel in their parts, and to them a large share of the entire success is due. The part taken by the London and other choristers is one deserving recognition, and a large part of the success achieved is due to the Ten Dixie Girls. They look, dress, sing, and dance in bewitching fashion. The production closed amid a scene of enthusiasm, and Mr. Edmunds was called upon to say a few words of thanks. Mr. Arthur Jefferson contented himself with a smiling bow in acknowledgment; but he was busy all the evening seeing to his patrons' comfort, in which he was ably seconded by Mr. W. Gillespy, the courteous acting-manager.

"THE BABES" AT KEIGHLEY.

When on Saturday night the curtain fell upon The Babes in the Wood at the Queen's Theatre there could be no sort of doubt as to the popular verdict upon Messrs. Carson and Kendall's first pantomime. It was an instant success. The Babes in the Wood, however, is, indeed, the most entertaining pantomime seen in Keighley for many years.

Mr. Lingford Carson's libretto follows, in outline at least, the fable of "The Babes in the Wood." The eight scenes into which the pantomime is divided are all by Mr. J. R. Horrocks, and great credit is due to him for the beautiful pictures presented. Mr. Horrocks is also stage-managing the production, and brings ripe experience to bear, with happy results.

Mr. Hugh Brady's Baron Shortmoney is a fine comic creation. He scores a big success with his song "There's no songs like the old ones," and "There's a man in Manitoba" never fails to win applause. Mr. J. McGrath and Mr. Harwood Roberts as the villains have parts in which they revel. Their comic business in the Wood scene evokes roars of laughter.

Miss Rose Tilley is a charming principal boy; her performance is a dashing one, and her rendering of the song, "It's a different girl again," is one of the hits of the evening. Miss May Grayce, the Maid Marion, has a dainty, attractive personality; her song, "Colombo," is sure to be popular. The duet rendered by Miss Tilley and Miss Grayce is a delightful number. Miss Nell Renie as Will Scarlet caught the fancy of the audience from the start; she has an attractive manner, and her songs were well received, especially "All that glitters is not gold." The Babes are in the capable hands of Little Dott Moss and Miss Doris Middleton. Little Dott Moss gives a very good performance, singing sweetly and dancing gracefully; her song, "Bungalow in Borneo," is a fine effort, and the business worked with Mr. Hugh Brady wins repeated encores. In the Palace scene she introduces a banjo speciality with success. Mr. Oliver Conroy helps considerably as Dame Maggie. Miss Beattie is a captivating Little John, and her song, "Starlight," is a very popular number.

Miss Clara Moore is an ideal Molly, good-looking, beautifully dressed, and sings "My Sugar Plum" very sweetly. Mr. Felix Rimmington employs a good voice effectively in his song, "Crocodile Isle." Mr. J. Gagan is a humorous Friar Tuck. The opposing forces of good and evil are represented by Miss Dolly Marsden as Crystal and Miss Mabel Fare as Davolo. Miss Fare speaks her lines with excellent effect. Miss Ada Noel, Miss Dare, and Miss Annie Love render good support. Much credit is due to Miss Lillie Leicester for her training of the local children, who appear in two pretty dances, a statue ballet, and a bird ballet, and win rounds of applause. Miss Lillie Leicester's Ariel Quartette brought down the house with their remarkably clever dancing. The mounting of the pantomime has received lavish treatment, and the dresses are beautiful. The speciality turn of The Cumberlands is without doubt one of the finest cycle turns ever seen here. Messrs. Carson and Kendall, Mr. Joe Horrocks, and all concerned are to be congratulated upon the production.

"THE FORTY THIEVES" AT LEEDS.

Mr. John Tiller has again been entrusted with the important task of providing the Theatre Royal, Leeds, Christmas annual, and, to judge by the extravagant welcome accorded by a full house on Saturday last to the opening performance of The Forty Thieves, the high standard of excellence achieved for many years past will be easily maintained. Under the watchful eye of Mr. Macnaghten, a special effort has been made at scenic display, and some exquisite stage pictures are the result—notably the gorgeous feast of colour, the City of Ispahan, by Mr. T. C. Ryan, with which the piece opens, and the final scene, Ali Baba's Palace, a magnificent canvas by Mr. T. F. Dunn. In the matter of dressing no expense has been spared. Notwithstanding this special effort for the spectacular side of the production, the humorous element looms large, for a merrier crowd of funmakers have not been seen here. Mr. Bob Selvidge is a vastly amusing Ali Baba, his antics being perpetrated with a quaint drollery that is irresistible. A big hit is made by Mr. Harry Dent, who has a generous part as a mock lieutenant of the thieves, and his every appearance on the stage is the signal for general merriment. Mr. Gus Le Clerq is throughout spontaneously funny as a comic policeman; and Mr. Russell Wallett as the much-tried Cogia is provocative of many hearty outbursts of laughter. Miss Bessie Cohen invests her part of Ganem with commendable enthusiasm and vivacity, and scores well with some taking vocal numbers. Good taste and expression characterise the work of Miss Elsie Cooke, an altogether charming Morgiana. As the Captain of the forty Miss Maisie Ellinger brings an attractive presence and a good voice. Special mention must be made of Mr. Sam Poluski, jun.'s clever work as the donkey; and Messrs. Doyle and Massey are no less effective as the camel. Mr. Charles Hampden, Mr. Frank Woodville, Miss Hettie Russell, and Miss Fanny Harris also present prominent parts in commendable style.

"THE SLEEPING BEAUTY" AT LEEDS.

Mr. John Hart's annual pantomime at the Grand Theatre, Leeds, opened on Saturday, and the result of many weeks' arduous labour was received with demonstrative and continuous show of appreciation by a house full to overflowing. In choosing the theme of The Sleeping Beauty opportunity is given for unlimited scenic display, and it would indeed be difficult to imagine more gorgeous examples of the scene-painter's art than are here displayed, notably the transformation "Night to Morning" at the end of the first act. The rise of the curtain discloses the Royal nursery, with Beauty in the cradle, the subject of some humorous dialogue, in which the Dame of the pantomime, in the character of Beauty's nurse, figures prominently. A beautiful garden scene is next apparent, and here Beauty (now celebrating her eighteenth birthday) meets her Prince lover, and the customary love-scene follows. The scene changes to Beauty's reception-room, where a galaxy of beaus come to woo that young lady, and opportunity is given for more entertaining encounters between the King and his wrathful spouse. Next we find Beauty exploring the haunted tower, and lured by the bad Fairy to the fatal spinning-wheel, pricks her finger, thus qualifying for her hundred years' sleep according to tradition. The next scene is the Royal kitchen, with an effective ballet of cooks, and the beautiful transformation scene "Night to morning" brings the first act to a close. The second act sees the Court awaken from its wondrous sleep. Good fairies dispel the evil threats of the wicked witch, and the Prince claims, and is awarded, his beautiful bride. The remaining scenes follow the story in the orthodox way, affording all concerned plenty of opportunity for showing their abilities, the curtain falling on the Butterflies' Ball, a delightful feast of colouring by Mr. E. H. Ryan.

Miss Julia James is an engaging Beauty—dainty, winsome, and girlish—and she renders her vocal numbers with rare expression. As the Prince, Miss Katie Vesey will be a big success, her acting being full of vivacity and well calculated to please. Mr. W. H. Powell has an established reputation here as a pantomime dame, and his spontaneous humour in a "fat" part has much to do with the success. Mr. Albert Le Fre is a tower of strength as Alfonso, the page, having a big share in all the most comic encounters, whilst his songs are amongst the best hits in the show, his clever speciality dancing being also much enjoyed. That excellent comedian Mr. T. W. Volt is in the part of the King, and commands the laughter of his audience at will. Mr. Arthur Sutcliffe is effective as Lord Everyman, his rendering of the tuneful ditty "It's a different girl again" being received with acclamation. The part of Queen is drawn on somewhat novel lines, and Miss Florence Parfrey makes it effective in every phase, the vocal side being of exceptional merit. Miss Edith Adeson promises to be an emphatic success as the second girl, Trixie, her song, "Rosie's cosy bungalow," followed by a tricky dance, going particularly well. As Rudolph, Miss Rosie Wren looks attractive, and acts with vivacity a somewhat slender part. Messrs. Sanford and Lyons are in the cast as a couple of fun-providers—Ping and Pong—and succeed admirably their clever patter and cross-talk scenes, along with some marvellous simultaneous dancing, evoking a great show of appreciation. For the part of the Good Fairy that fine vocalist Miss Vera Schlesinger has been secured, and her numbers are rendered with considerable ability; whilst the Bad Fairy, a decrepit old witch, is depicted with rare fidelity by Mr. Colin Campbell. That clever diminutive comedian Mr. John Dixon is in the cast as Prince Spritely, and will doubtless, ere the run is far advanced, find opportunity for more generous exploitation of the low comedy ability we know him to possess.

The dresses are on the sumptuous and costly scale which has been the standard at this premier theatre for many years past, and, as already indicated, Mr. R. C. Oldham has given of his best in the gorgeous sets which conclude the respective acts; whilst there is many another effective canvas by Mr. D. G. Hall and Mr. George Jackson. All the best of the popular new tunes are included in the score arranged by the popular resident musical director, Signor Romilli.

"ALADDIN" AT LEICESTER.

Very pleasant memories were revived at the Theatre Royal on Boxing Day, when Mr. Milton Bode produced his pantomime of Aladdin. This old theatre at one time was noted for its many successful Christmas annuals, but of late years the presentation of a pantomime at the festive season has been lacking, and the enterprise displayed by Mr. Milton Bode who, in conjunction with Mr. Edward Compton, is one of the lessees of the theatre, will no doubt meet with the reward which it so richly deserves. Mr. J. Hickory Wood is responsible for the book, which deals with the fortunes of the hero in the usual interesting manner, and is brought well up to date.

The pantomime is divided into two parts, and is shown in ten scenes, the scenery being by Mr. Fred Storey, Mr. S. King Alexander, and Mr. Arthur R. Betts, upon which they are to be complimented, the scenes calling for special notice being the Market-place at Pekin, the Magic Cave, Aladdin's Garden, and the Palace of the Emperor, the latter being probably the best seen at the Royal, the delightful blending of the colours of the dresses, &c., evoking the warmest commendation. We have nothing but the highest praise to bestow upon Mr. E. R. Beaumont, the business manager of the theatre, who produced the pantomime under the direction of Mr. Milton Bode. On its initial production on Boxing Day it went through without a single hitch in any department. The music is specially written and composed by Mr. Henry W. May, whose charming melodies, &c., in this direction are also a feature calling for special praise. Additional numbers are by Mr. B. J. Paterson the musical director, who has a specially largely-increased orchestra under his direction. The dresses are always tasteful and artistic, and in many instances are of a most costly nature.

An excellent company of artists have been secured, the whole company working together with a swing that redounds greatly to their credit. There is also a very fine chorus; in fact, it is impossible to speak in too complimentary a manner in this direction. The members of the company possess good voices, which they use to the greatest advantage. The Royal Welsh Meister Singers are vocalists who secured an immediate success, and the appearance of Leo Sterling, a clever and amusing musician, is very popular. In the principal part of Aladdin Miss May Marton, a dainty and charming lady, is to be highly complimented on a delineation that was always fascinating and clever, and she is rapturously applauded for her songs, "Hello! Hello! It's a different girl again," "Manitoba," and "Bluebell's Wedding," which she rendered in a dashing style. She has an excellent sweetheart in Miss Janet Reynolds, who is always refined and artistic, her song, entitled "In the shadow of the Pyramids" being rendered in a delightful manner. Miss Lovell is a pretty and captivating Nicee, and Miss Ethel Wilson is smart as Pekoe, her song, "Save your pennies," being given in capital style. Miss Maude Dale does well as the Geni of the Ring, and both Miss Annie Watkins as Ruby and Miss Addie Love merit praise as the Slaves of the Lamp. The comedians are without exception good. Mr. Tom Owen, the Welsh comedian, who is the Widow Twankey, is a thorough success, his funny patter and songs meeting with well-deserved appreciation. As Abanazar Mr. Clifford Morgan is heard to considerable advantage, his fine singing calling forth great applause. As the Chinese policemen, Chew Chew and Chop Chop, Mr. Leo Sterling and Mr. Happy Attwood create endless merriment, their gags, "Shut up" and "I've got another stripe," being very popular. Mr. Frank Couch makes a hit as the Grand Vizier. Besides giving a very humorous performance, his local allusions promise to become extremely popular, and his saying of "Shall we do it?" at once caught on. Mr. Tommy Nelldon helped the merriment along in good style as Lip Tung Tee. The Emperor finds an excellent impersonator in Mr. Walter Cranch. At the termination of the "show" the delighted audience showed their hearty appreciation of the performance, which must be voted as in every respect a most enjoyable one, upon which we cannot refrain from cordially congratulating Mr. Milton Bode, Mr. E. R. Beaumont (who has worked so hard for its success), and the artists engaged.

"ALADDIN" AT LIVERPOOL.

Mr. Robert Arthur's eleventh Christmas annual at the Court Theatre has an abundance of fun and frolic, and the story of Aladdin, which is described as an operatic pantomime in two acts, has been ably treated by Mr. Frank Dix, while Mr. J. O. Shepherd (leader of the Court orchestra) and Mr. Jullien H. Wilson are responsible for the charming and appropriate music. Some of the scenes are especially beautiful, the Home of Jewels, which concludes the first part of the work, being as charming a picture as could possibly be placed upon the stage. Throughout the pantomime the scenic artists (Messrs. Stafford Hall and J. F. Hogg) seem to have aimed at producing pretty and artistic effects with tints of a somewhat subdued character. In this effort they have succeeded admirably. The costumes are superb, and looked well on the vast army of pretty girls and women who crowd the stage.

Fun predominates throughout the whole of the pantomime. Mr. Malcolm Scott as the Widow Twankey found many opportunities for exhibiting his humour, and his patter and his assumption of the Gibson Girl à la Miss Clifford proved a capital caricature. His song relative to a coon tune raised many a broad smile. Regan and Ryan, attired as Chinese policemen, went through their work with great gusto, their rendering of the ditty, "The Ragtime Milionaires," earning an encore; Happy Fanny Fields, as Gretchen, a Dutch laundry maid, was highly amusing, her special style of dancing gaining for her much favour; Miss Hetty King threw a deal of spirit into the part of Aladdin, and among her songs were "It's a different girl again," "I want to be a Gibson Girl," and "Back to Piccadilly"; Miss Fanny Dango looked a beautiful and stately Princess, and rendered with much taste "Will you be my butterfly?"; as the Grand Vizier Mr. M. R. Morand added greatly to the fun, and his ditty, "The never, never land," made a hit; Mr. Harrison Brockbank presented an amusing and witty Emperor, giving in good style "Monte Carlo"; Miss Doris Dean did the most with Chee-Ki; Miss Poppy Wilkinson looked well as Pekoe, the Emperor's son; Mr. W. R. Percival held the small part of Slave of the Lamp; and Miss Cissie Astbury was the Genie of the Ring. A deal of capital sport emanated from the efforts of Mr. Harry Tate, who introduced his funny music-hall sketches Motoring and Golfing. For the first time in Liverpool the cinematograph, worked by Mr. Anthony Brown, was made use of in pantomime, and with excellent effect. On Abanazar (Mr. Tate) and Aladdin escaping from the wrath of the Emperor by means of the motor-car, the theatre was suddenly plunged into darkness, and on a front cloth was shown a continuation of the fugitives' flight. Up hill and down dale raced the car, careering over mountains and peaks, reaching to the moon with the utmost ease, leaping from crag to crag, and even turning somersaults, until when the lights go up again the motorists are discovered sprawling on the ground in front of a Chinese laundry.

"MOTHER GOOSE" AT LIVERPOOL.

On Saturday night the audience in the Shakespeare Theatre, Liverpool, did not take long to settle down to the pantomime Mother Goose. The production is certainly the most gorgeous that has been placed on the Shakespeare stage during the eighteen years the theatre has existed, and no praise is too great for the scenic artists, Messrs. T. Holmes and T. E. Ryan, and for the loveliness of the costumes made by Alias, from designs by Comelli. The whole of the pantomime was produced by Mr. Herbert Cottesmore, who is to be congratulated upon the smoothness with which the vast enterprise is conducted. Mr. J. Hickory Wood's "book" is written in an agreeable and interesting style. He places Mother Goose in monetary difficulties with her landlord, who, on being unable to get his rent, evicts her from the cottage, whereupon she and her family in the most comical manner spread out their beds on the ground, keeping the rain off with umbrellas. The incident causes much mirth. The most charming of the several spectacles put upon the stage are those conjured up by the demon in order to tempt Mother Goose—Childhood, represented by little ones in nightdresses, youth showing a bevy of damsels skipping in a glen; and the triumph of love, showing happy old age in the persons of Darby and Joan. There is an abundance of fun, and a constant stream of excellent, witty dialogue. Mr. Tom E. Murray in the title part is the heart and soul of the pantomime. His very presence on the stage starts the laughter, and on his appearance in finery, when wealth had poured in upon the family, the audience went into convulsions of mirth. Mr. Johnny Danvers, as Jack, the son, is his right-hand man, and a deal of help is also given by Messrs. J. T. Macmillan (the laird), Fred O'Malley (his brother), and Billy Brown (a widow hunter). Mr. R. Pender exhibits a deal of natural movement as the Goose; Messrs. T. and B. and A. and W. Pender are funny as the horse and the motor men; the Demon is capitally impersonated by Mr. Harry Claff, whose fine baritone voice is heard to advantage, especially in duets with the fairy Heartsease (Miss Annie Braddan), to whom praise is also due. Miss Ray Wallace won the appreciation of her audience, who gave her a grand reception, for the character of Bridget, the servant to Mother Goose. Her singing and dancing were delightful, and for her imitations of music-hall stars he was rapturously applauded. Miss Ruth Lytton, as the principal boy, Colin, was dashing and full of spirit; the principal girl, Jill, daughter of Mother Goose, was capably impersonated by Miss Mabel Russell; Miss Jane Eyre was a bewitching Eric; and Miss Imra de Langlois, as Lady Ida, played intelligently, and sang sweetly. Miss Lottie Stone's troupe of dancers were received with much favour, and in the course of the pantomime all the latest songs were given with great gusto, while the music supplied by Mr. George M. Saker was extremely appropriate.

"THE BABES IN THE WOOD" AT MANCHESTER.

Mr. Peter Thompson produced at the St. James's Theatre, Manchester, on Saturday, an up-to-date version of The Babes in the Wood, written expressly for the theatre by Mr. Peter O'Dicks. The story runs on popular lines, following a method whereby the main features of the plot are made to stand out with just that occasional brevity and boldness which gives coherence to the action without interfering with its freedom. It is also lucidly confined to eight scenes, each sufficiently crowded with progressive interest, and including among them the Village, the Schoolroom, the Forest, and a final Palace scene, in which Robin Hood is acclaimed the Earl of Huntingdon. The four scenes mentioned are as pleasing as anything need be in pantomime, which, designed for travelling purposes, does not aspire to the highest degree of elaboration. Incidental music as pleasing in its way has been specially composed and arranged by Messrs. Harry Vernon and Percy Woodruff; and ballets, arranged and invented by Miss Rosa Walmsley, add further grace and charm. Miss Maude Beaumont makes a capital Robin Hood, being in every way well suited to the rôle of principal boy. Her clear and powerful voice was heard to great advantage in her opening song, "Nelson from his monument," which brought a well-deserved encore. She was equally successful in "Zuyder Zee," a song "featured" (to employ the word appropriately) by the introduction of a comic masked chorus of various characters, among them the unlovely Nurse of the cast. Miss Beaumont's duet with Maid Marian, "It's a lovely day for a walk," was also well received. As Maid Marian, Miss Lou Langley gave a very agreeable performance, embellishing her vocal efforts with several neat and appropriate dances. Miss Minnie Moran, as Will Scarlet, moved briskly, and made a success of her song, "My Colombo beau," following it by a smart dance. Scarlet's sweetheart, Dorothy Dimple, is played by Miss Rosa Walmsley, whose dancing is one of the best things of the pantomime. Other clever ladies are employed, among them Miss Maudie Grayson as the Fairy Blue Bell, and the Misses Renee Grahame and Babs Lloyd as a pair of Babes who have obviously seen much of the stage world and are likely to become more widely known. Humour is a strong point of the production. The Danbys, as Tim Tired and Willie Wearied, upon whom devolves the task of murdering the babes in the forest, made a pair of amusing villains. A good comic performance was given also by Mr. T. G. Vane as the nurse, Evelean, who sang "Waiting at the church" with considerable success; this comedian, in fact, might attain an even more conspicuous personal success with a somewhat bolder enunciation. As Simple Pimple, the Baron's Page, Mr. Willie Barrett added to the fun, as did also Mr. Fred Pagét in a quiet way as Friar Tuck. Mr. Wilton Marsh's impersonation of Sir Scoun de Rel, the wicked uncle, would be improved by his entire relinquishment of a deep, stagey utterance, that spoiled all his efforts to amuse—which seemed to be the object of the lines—but he will no doubt remedy this mistaken interpretation of the part; and when that is done, no fault need be found with the production as a whole, upon which the mark of success was unhesitatingly conferred by a big and responsive audience. Besides the business already mentioned, specialities are added by N. T. Kioto, the daring and sensational Japanese equilibrist; Miss Babs Lloyd, a clever mimic and coon dancer; Miss Rosa Walmsley, expert acrobatic skipping-rope dancer; the Danbys, in Hungarian and other dances; Miss Renee Grahame, a particularly smart young male impersonator; the Yankee Quartet of speciality dancers (occasionally strengthened by the addition of Miss Rosa Walmsley), a very neat and pleasing combination; and Miss Minnie Moran, also an accomplished dancer.

Mr. John Hart's pantomime of The Babes in the Wood was produced on Monday at the Theatre Royal, Manchester, before a packed house. Mr. Hart's enterprise in respect of cast and staging is once more exemplified by this fine achievement, which, though hardly in smooth working order on the opening night, contains all the elements of a success in keeping with the splendid traditions of the theatre. The book is a new and original one by J. Hickory Wood, and contains threads of interest which go far to justify the description of the text. In it we have the Earl of Chester alternating with the character of Robin Hood, and incidentally adopting sundry other personalities which are complimentary to the talents and the charms of Miss Carrie Moore, whose impersonation of this rather unconventional principal boy, if not exactly "dashing" in the old-time sense of the word, is distinguished by a nice individuality and a refinement which made an instant and successful appeal. We have also Ruth Tapp, the baron's housekeeper, a masculine creature, with many feminine traits, who, having suddenly inherited a fortune of mysteriously large proportions, furnishes a potent attraction to the Baron (among others), who would barter his name and poverty for her wealth. The lady, Mr. Arthur Stigant, has, however, the whim to refuse all offers, and goes her way in a very pleasant, eccentric humour. The Baron, in the person of Mr. Wilkie Bard, has also many little peculiarities, which differentiate him from the usual pantomime plotter, as well in the lines as in the methods of this gifted and popular comedian. Scope and development are here far transcending the limits of music-hall successes, and the first five minutes of Mr. Wilkie Bard as Baron Bounce, accompanied by two of his bloodhounds (!) and a lifeless hare, proved his tremendous value in the cast. The impression of immense comic resource suggested at once by his make-up, his style, and his vocal delivery was constantly reinforced by a hundred and one amusing details of his appearance in the affairs of the village and the prospects of his wards. The latter are well impersonated by Miss Maudi Ray and Miss Ida Valli, of whom the last-named has an opportunity of displaying a precocious gift of mimicking some well-known stars. A favourite is seen in Miss Iris Hoey, who plays Marian in very dainty style, and imparts to the rôle a quiet charm and naturalness that show conspicuously against the busier constituents of pantomime. Messrs. Arthur Powell and W. T. Thompson are well placed as Gentle James and Melancholy Mike, a pair of rogues who work well together, and develop into the Baron's hirelings, having to themselves the usual sanguinary burlesque scene in the depths of the forest—a capital piece of fun. As second boy (Norman), a part more prominent than usual, Miss Jennie Armstrong makes a bold show with her good presence and freedom of style; while Miss Nellie Stratton's impersonation of Phœbe, a waiting maid, is distinguished by a welcome refinement. Miss Annie Schubert figures agreeably as the Fairy Queen; and minor parts are quite acceptably filled by Mr. Harry Gardner, Mr. Bert Monks, Miss Emily Pritchard, and Miss Madge Quest. Mr. G. H. Elliott, as Pete, the Baron's page, has a part which is largely in the nature of a speciality, and it needs only to be said that his performance on the opening night was in his best style for it to be understood that his contributions to the entertainment were among the most successful features of the evening. Mr. Elliott has two "featured" songs, "I've built a bamboo bungalow for you" and "Under an umbrella," both of which were vociferously encored. Mr. Wilkie Bard's vocal offerings were equally successful, and comprised a clever and satirical ditty about "Playthings," "Le me sing," and "You, you, you," all given in his well-known manner. Rivalling these, Miss Carrie Moore sang "There's a man in Manitoba," "Zuyder Zee," "My Firefly," and shone also in a duet, "Prophecies," with Mr. Wilkie Bard. The scenic effects in Miss Moore's songs were pretty and well arranged. Miss Iris Hoey scored particularly in a song about "Rosie"; and other notable vocal items were Mr. Arthur Stigant's "Waiting at the church," Miss Jenny Armstrong's "Suffragettes," Miss Annie Schubert's "Snowflakes," and "The sailor and the mermaid," by Miss Nellie Stratton. By way of speciality, Les Trombetta have a scene to themselves, and provide an amusing interlude in vocalism and mimicry. Of the scenery, The Village, A Dream of Roseland (R. C. Oldham), The Beginning of the Journey—a fine lakeland set—In the Forest (D. G. Hall), and The Carnival scene at the end (Henry Emden) must be singled out as magnificent. The music has been selected, composed, and arranged by Mr. Chas. W. Chambers; and the entire production is under the stage direction of Mr. Victor Stevens, assisted by Mr. Arthur Lenville. All the materials for a big success are evident, and a big success will doubtless be attained.

"ALADDIN" AT NEWCASTLE.

To a well-filled house the tenth annual pantomime during the Arthurian reign at the Theatre Royal was unfolded on Saturday evening. Aladdin is the chosen title of the show, and the task of production has been placed in the experienced hands of Mr. Robert Courtneidge, who, it may be recalled, was associated last year with the very successful Cinderella pantomime at the Grey-street house. The story of Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp has been treated on familiar lines by the joint authors, Mr. A. M. Thompson and Mr. Courtneidge, the lyrics are by Mr. Chas. H. Taylor, and the music by Messrs. Alfred and E. Haines. While many of the attributes of the old-fashioned extravaganza are retained, the entertainment, for a pantomime, is more than ever on the lines of musical comedy, and with the reputation of the house for scenic splendour in its annual productions fully maintained, the music really delightful and catching, and a large amount of irresistible fun, a long and successful run, especially after so enthusiastic a reception on its first night, may safely be predicted for Aladdin at the Royal. The present Christmas annuals in Newcastle will long be remembered as the Scottish comedians' year, and not readily forgotten will be Mr. Neil Kenyon's impersonation of the Widow Twankey. It is a quaint, whimsical reading of the character, a stamp quite its own in the way of pantomime. There is a "canniness"—to use a Tyneside phrase—and sincerity that renders the widow a really lovable character. Mr. Kenyon has a capital song, "Tra la la," which proved very popular. A capable performance is Mr. Charles Harvey's Abanazar, and his medley of smart topical sayings in his "Doomsday Book" song is one of the hits of the evening. The part of Pekoe is usually played by a lady, but on this occasion it is entrusted, and with highly satisfactory results, to Mr. Fred Allandale, whose excellent voice is heard to advantage in such catchy songs as "Arrah Wanna" and "Loverly Overly." An interesting study is Mr. Alfred Clark's Emperor, who has quite an infectious laugh. In vocal talent the company is far, far above the average combination at a pantomime. Miss Florence Smithson, who makes a dainty and charming Princess, has several delightful numbers, and "Light of the honeymoon," "For you," and "The sweet singing maid" were most enthusiastically received. With a fine presence, and with all the requisite dash and vivacity needed for the part is Aladdin played by Miss Lily Morris, who bids fair to be one of the most popular "principal boys" of recent years in pantomime on Tyneside. She is, too, a most pleasing vocalist, and scored heavily in "The cherry blossom," "Waltz me around,' and "Zuyder Zee," the last-mentioned song, with chorus and dance by Dutch boys and girls, really being one of the best and prettiest items in the entertainment. A lively impersonation of the Irish slave Biddy, strong in its contrast as it is to the Scottish dialect of Mr. Kenyon, is given by Miss Kitty Cavendish, and another feature is the dancing of Miss Rosie Begarnie, who takes the part of Ah Sing. Other members of the strong and well-balanced company are Miss Olive Wade, Miss Minna Moore, Miss Dorothy Foster, Miss Gertrude Sinclair, Mr. Alfred Majilton, Mr. J. Foster, Mr. Arthur Wyndham, Mr. James Duval, Mr. Theodore Clark, Mr. J. H. Bernard, and Mr. J. Edwardes. The chorus do their work exceptionally well. A splendid and well-set scene is the second, a Street in Chang Li Hang, by Tritschler; Aladdin's Palace, by McCleery, is a magnificent spectacle; and the Chrysanthemum Fête, by Tritschler, is also an extremely fine scene.

"DICK WHITTINGTON" AT NOTTINGHAM.

On Boxing night Mr. Robert Arthur produced his tenth original pantomime of Dick Whittington at the Theatre Royal, Nottingham, on a scale of magnificence to which his Nottingham patrons have by this time become accustomed. Mr. Arthur is fortunate in again having Mr. Frank Dix as the author of the book, and there is a delightful succession of picturesque scenes, for which those experienced artists, Messrs. Stafford Hall and J. Fowler Hogg, have been again requisitioned. In an effectively painted set of Covent Garden, the principal characters are introduced, and the fun becomes fast and furious. The inevitable motor-car is used, and a skilfully arranged flower, costor, and vegetable ballet gives a touch of novelty that is greatly appreciated. The Interior of Fitzwarren's Stores is a charmingly executed scheme in green and terra cotta, and the smartly costumed shop girls form an exceedingly pretty picture. After Dick has arrived at Hampstead Heath, accompanied by his faithful feline, a pretty ballet of fairies is given, and the Hotel Mogadore, besides serving to introduce the Princess Morocco, provides more opportunities for the comedians. The final set, the King's Garden, is a truly gorgeous product of the brush, and proves a brilliant climax. The glittering dresses of the principals and the exquisitely harmonious colouring of the chorus and dancers form a fitting complement to the ornate surroundings. The rôle of Dick has been entrusted to Miss Madelaine du Val for the second time at this house, and she plays the part with artistic grace and refinement, her pleasant voice rendering the music in a highly finished manner. Specially worthy of mention is a dainty song, "Snowflakes," with a haunting refrain given by an invisible chorus, in which Miss du Val scores heavily. Miss Gladys Huxley makes a decidedly vivacious and spirited Alice, dancing smartly and singing with considerable fervour, one of her best efforts being a charming ballad entitled "Zuyder Zee." Miss Maud Lake possesses a clear, melodious voice, which she uses with care and ability in the music of the Princess. Miss Maud Holland makes an attractive Spirit of the Chimes, and displays her artistic vocalism in the song, "The Land of Sunset Glow." The Demon Rat has an exceptionally able exponent in Mr. Fred Maguire, who brings a dramatic personality and well-cultured voice to bear on his rendering of a stirring song entitled "The Rat." Mr. Bert Danson is an excellent comedian, who thoroughly grasps the humour of the part of Fitzwarren, and makes much capital out of the song "Girls." Mr. Harry Brayne's amusing episodes as the Cook never fail to create roars of laughter, and his topical song, "Mrs. Simpson," is heartily received. Mr. Bert Lloyd plays the eccentric part of Idle Jack with comic effect; and Mr. Fred Solo adds to the fun as the Emperor. Mr. Johnny Fuller submits a clever performance of the Cat; Messrs. Bishop and Hanlon as the Captain and Bo'sun offer some smart fooling. The music of Messrs. J. O. Shepherd, Jullien H. Wilson, and John Armstrong is bright, lively, and tuneful, and is finely rendered by the orchestra, under the bâton of Mr. John Armstrong. The capable stage-manager, Mr. Henry Wright, has worked with untiring energy. The ballets are arranged by Miss Rose Lupino.

"JACK AND THE BEANSTALK" AT NOTTINGHAM.

The usual Christmas fare is provided at the Grand Theatre, Nottingham, and from start to finish the pantomime is lively and interesting. The book provided by Mr. Newman Maurice is good and the music by Mr. Frank Bradsell is bright and catchy. The popular story has been followed more or less closely, and the action is divided into ten scenes, all of which are very creditable and some, notably "The Village" and "Fairy's Bower," of great merit. The musical finale to the scene called "Gold" has been specially written for this pantomime by Mr. Fred Trussell, of the London Hippodrome. The company has been organised by and is under the auspices of Mr. Samuel James, who, with the able assistance of Mr. Harry Drury, is responsible for the whole production. The fine scenery is by Mr. George Tweddell. Miss Daisy Silcott, a very charming Jack, has all the verve and style for a boy hero. From the singing of her first song, entitled "Hello, Hello, Hello," she found herself in favour with the audience and is certain to become popular. She is well played up to by Miss Phyllis Yorke as the heroine—Miss Yorke is very sweet and winsome, possessing a good voice, which has evidently received great care and attention. She sang her songs, including "Snowflakes" and "Zuyder Zee," in cultured style. As Mrs. Jack Mr. Charles Gardner has ample scope for broad humour, and he misses no opportunity of creating fun, being ably seconded by Condon and Elgar, whose knockabout business is received with deserved applause. The Sisters Brand in duets and dances are highly appreciated; and Miss Lily Lloyd as Daisy and Miss Frances Hunter as Rowland do all that is necessary for those parts in an unostentatious manner. Mr. James May has a congenial part as the Baron, and as the Baroness Miss Kate Talby is most successful. The Fairy Rosebud is impersonated by Miss Amy Young, whose sweet soprano voice is heard to great advantage in several excellent songs. Mr. Charles Marston, the possessor of a good baritone voice, makes a good Demon, and the acting of the Giant by Mr. Augustus G. Lytton is deserving of praise. Specialities, which are to be frequently changed, are introduced by Bert Coote's Yankee Doodle Girls, whose singing and dancing are excellent, and by Gerrod with his dogs and pigeons. Under the guidance of the genial manager of the theatre, Mr. Charles P. Cooke, there is every promise of a long and deservedly popular run.

"BLUE BEARD" AT PLYMOUTH.

Saturday saw the curtain go up at the Theatre Royal on Mr. Williams's fourteenth annual. This year Blue Beard has been adopted. The composition of the "book" has been entrusted to Mr. W. H. Pawley and the incidental music to Mr. Ashley Richards, and both author and composer are to be congratulated. In the opening scene Iphrahim (Mr. Wilfred Shine) and Shakabak (Mr. Frank Bertram) make their appearance, and introduce some piquant topical and local "hits," which are greatly appreciated. Later in the scene the other principals are introduced, and the Messes Peggy Primrose (Fatima) and Elma Morris (Abdul), the latter a lady of particularly fine stage presence and carriage, come in for very cordial receptions. Scene 2 is the kitchen in Bluebeard's castle, and here the four comedians Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Frank Bertram, Wilfred Shine, and George Brooks provide some hilarious fun for the youngsters by investigating the interior of a gigantic pie the contents of which, thanks to some clever mechanical contrivances, perform all sorts of antics. In the third scene—Hall in Bluebeard's Castle—Mr. George Brooks (Sister Ann) renders his song "There is a happy land" in such irresistible fashion that a double encore is demanded. Selim (Miss Murielle Langley) sings "Zuyder Zee" in very creditable fashion, being supported by a chorus of Dutch girls in quaint costumes; and Fatima (Miss Peggy Primrose) scores heavily with the popular "Barcelona" song. After the interval another tuneful number, "Man from Manitoba," falls to the lot of Selim; and a trio of clever dancers, the Gilbert Girls, give a song of the "Sammy" type, entitled "Wouldn't you like to flirt with us?" Selim's palace is a magnificent display of colour splendidly set off by a blaze of light; and the whole of the scenery reflects the greatest credit on the Royal scenic artist, Mr. Pidgeon, to whom the work has been entrusted.

"BABES IN THE WOOD" AT SALTLEY.

This new and pleasing version of The Babes in the Wood was presented on Saturday last by Mr. James Alexander at the Carlton Theatre at the instance of Mr. and Mrs. John Walters, who have evolved most seasonable fare out of the old story. Capital scenery, a capable body of comedians, comediennes, and dancers, and all the latest songs of the day are factors which are sure to please, and here they are in full swing and number. The story is well and intelligibly told. The Babes, who have for their champion Robin Hood, pass through their trials and tribulations at the hands of their wicked uncle, the Baron, and live happy ever after, as such good children should. Diversion is made of the wedding of the Baron and Dame Flossie, and the latter, who "keeps a school," which is one of the salient successes of the pantomime, gives the well-known song, "My Wife Won't Let Me." "The Village School" kept the pantomime going at a merry swing with its merry humours, and "The Forest," wherein the Robbers "fight" in the most approved spirit of burlesque; the "Baron's Hall," "Eastern Memories," a series of tableaux and groups, chorally embellished, and which evoked much enthusiasm; and finally "The Palace of Pleasure" kept the audience vastly amused and interested in the story. Mr. Ally Benson, as Dame Flossie, is responsible for a goodly amount of fun, his earnest, albeit never laboured, efforts most invariably scoring, while his humorous play in the schoolroom scene made him doubly a favourite. Mr. Ernest Thirlway utilises his chances as the Baron to effect, and sings several successful songs, while his allies, Blustering Bill and Wavering Wally, are impersonated with the utmost comicality by Messrs. Traynor and O'Connor, who sing comic duets and indulge in fancy cross-talk with amazing frequency and coherency. Mr. Frank Stanart gets in a lot of clever work as Soft Tommy, and Mr. Phil White and the Landor Brothers work with indefatigable will. The ladies are especially numerous and good-looking. Miss Edna Thurley, as Robin Hood, adorns the show with a prepossessing ladylike presence and refined style which is pleasant to behold. Miss Fanny Adamson sings and dances, as Maid Marian, in an exceedingly bright and clever manner; Miss Jessie Yondi puts much energy and ability into the part of Dolly Dimple; and the Misses Kitty Leake and Edie Bracewell sing and dance with much success. The Babes find suitable exponents in Miss Kitty Chester, a particularly well-formed little damsel with a fine voice, and Baby Blyth, who also sings well. Fairy Goodheart is gracefully enacted by Miss Cora Clive, the vocalist of the production, who scored instantly with "Star of the Night." The Sweet Sixteen Ballet Troupe and the Emerald Quartette of Acrobatic Dancers beautify the various scenes with their smart dancing and grouping, and the chorus shows much aptitude and enthusiasm in its work. The music is well arranged and selected by Mr. Frank Travers.

"CINDERELLA" AT SCARBOROUGH.

Messrs. Chas. S. Kitts and Somers Bellamy launched a successful pantomime, entitled Cinderella, at the Londesborough Theatre on Boxing night. The pantomime has been produced under the direction of Mr. Charles S. Kitts, and his efforts and those of Mr. Bellamy have been rewarded by the appreciative way in which they have been acknowledged every evening. The whole of the scenery is fresh from the brush of Mr. Fred Munns, and has charming effects, especially amongst the various magnificent dresses of the leaders, and the gay-coloured appearance of the chorus, which is a powerful one and well blended. Miss Rhoda Windrum plays the part of Cinderella, and delights the audience with her charming manner and her expressive singing. Miss Jennie Lynwood, as Prince Brilliant, has a prepossessing appearance and a sweet voice. Mr. T. W. Riley as Baron Oofless is admirably suited for a part of this description. Mr. Bert McNallie and Mr. J. Oliver Russell, as the Ugly Sisters, give good proof of their ability by clever acting, and they dance well. Miss Madge Haines as Dandini is very captivating. Mr. Charles S. Kitts, as Billy the Page, shows his undoubted powers and originality. Messrs. Ford and Ford, as the Broker's Men, are irresistible, and cause much fun with their eccentricities. The Three Misses Gage dance with exquisite grace, and sing with great freshness and fervour. Miss Lyndon Riley, as the Fairy Goodheart, is very cultured, and sings delightfully. Mr. B. Lawrence, as Mother Shipton, proves an excellent selection has been made for this part. Miss F. Vallery, as Phyllis, is winsome and acceptable. The specialities include the Verona Geisha Girls, who obtain a welcome reception; Miss Gladys Cockerell, the Trilby dancer, executes her movements with much lightness, and is well received; Baby Eileen is possessed of a voice of extraordinary range for so small a juvenile, and well deserves all the applause she receives; Sergeant-Major Williams' team of performing dogs show considerable intelligence, and go through their various difficult tricks with honour; the fairy ponies considerably add to the novelties. Mr. Herbert Wellings, the musical director, handles the bâton in a masterly fashion. One of the successful numbers is the novel song, introduced by Mr. Chas. S. Kitts, entitled "Sweet chiming bells."

"ROBINSON CRUSOE" AT SCARBOROUGH

Variety has given way to the usual Christmas festivities, and pantomime reigns supreme at the People's Palace. Robinson Crusoe is the attraction, which has been written by Mr. Bert Albert Rutley and produced by him. A capital selection has been made of the leading artists. Miss Gertrude Rowan, as Robinson Crusoe, is a clever artist, and ably contributes to the fun. Miss Gertrude Wasley, as Polly Perkins, is accorded a warm reception. Mr. Fred Buckley, as Man Friday, gives a very good performance. Mr. Fred Alberto, as King One Lung, is a smart knockabout, and gives great assistance. Mr. Fred Mart, as King Neptune, plays the part with much originality. Miss Edwardes scores as Flossie Lightfoot. Miss Billy Moore, as Will Atkins, easily gains a place in the esteem of the audience. Mr. Bert A. Rutley, as Dick Gargeye, is an able exponent, and works very hard indeed in carrying out his multifarious duties. Mr. Billy Fife, as Mrs. Crusoe, is well to the fore, and contributes in no small degree to the success attained. Miss Emily Denham, as Tom Bowling, gives an excellent delineation of the character. Miss Daisy Atkinson, as Dick Seabreeze, deserves great credit.

The production is on a lavish scale, and carries a chorus that is well balanced, and concludes with a grand harlequinade and transformation scene, which receives special recognition by the audience. The specialities include Billy Moore in lightning gun-drill; the Roi Quartette of dancers; Billy Fife, Scotch dancer; the Raynors, duettists and speciality dancers; the Mascotte, transformation dancer; and the Twelve Scarborough Belles.

"DICK WHITTINGTON" AT SHEFFIELD.

For many years the Alexandra Theatre, Sheffield, has been the recognised local "home of pantomime." Since the great Ducrow's spectacular triumphs here, the annual feast of fun and glitter is eagerly anticipated by old and young. For the sixth time the subject is Dick Whittington, and the general completeness of the pantomime on Christmas Eve again shows the wisdom of Mr. Forsdike's policy in selecting Mr. Francis Laidler to bear the responsibility of production. The libretto is by Mr. A. W. Field.

A grand ballet, followed by a stirring operatic chorus, brings the first act to a finish, the curtain falling on a charming and memory-haunting tableau. The first spectacular scene in the second part is the Market Square, a solidly-built set, with a large Mauresque archway in the middle distance. The arrival of the Emperor and his brilliant suite, with a detachment of Amazonian guards, gives every opportunity for sartorial display and skilful stage-management. In Scene 2 (Olde Chepeside) some good songs and gags are indulged in; and finally everything ends happily in the gorgeously-illuminated gardens of Hampton Court.

Miss Alma Obrey, who made a big success here last season in Cinderella, appeared as Dick, and her personal graces, excellent voice, and pleasing manner all combined to make her a popular principal boy. Her tuneful songs, including "The Zuyder Zee," with sabot dance by ladies, was loudly encored. Miss Ethel Bryant was a pretty and graceful Alice, and her singing and dancing were heartily applauded. Miss Blanche de Verne looked an ideal Bow-Belle, and her fine voice was heard to advantage in a pleasing ballad. The Misses Bella and Ethel Brookland were pretty and piquant representatives of Preciosa and Lord Dedbroke; Miss May McKenzie was a charming Dolly Varden; and other prepossessing ladies were the Misses Billie Murray, Rosie Robey, Jessie Wayne, Julia Snow, and the clever Monaco Girls. Mr. Kennedy Allen was a mirth-provoking Idle Jack, and the hard work he put in for the general success of the "annual" received the full approbation of the crowded house. Mr. Jack McKenzie as Mrs. Dessicated Edwards bids fair to eclipse the great success he achieved in last year's pantomime here; Mr. J. W. Gallagher made a deserved hit by his quaint impersonation of Idle Jim; Mr. Gilbert Rodgers played the part of Fitzwarren on legitimate burlesque lines, and sang with his accustomed finish and power; Mr. Alf. Clegg proved a first-rate pantomimist and dancer as the Cat; Mr. Jack Bangs was effective as the Emperor of Morocco; and the Rat King was played dramatically by Mr. Leo King. Mr. Frank Bentham was funny as the Grand Vizier; and those special favourites, Pete and Juno, as the coloured attendants, again delighted the Alexandra audience with their smart dancing and clever coon business. The agile dances of the Monaco Girls were repeatedly applauded; and the exertions of a large and capable chorus deserve recognition, as does the conscientious work of the conductor, Mr. Isaac J. South. The scenery is from the ateliers of Messrs. Beresford Pierce and E. Egerton. The dresses have been designed by Robert Crafter; the armour is from the well-known establishment of White and Sons, in Drury-lane; and the pantomime has been produced by Mr. F. Laidler, assisted by the energetic stage-manager, Mr. J. J. Daly, under the personal supervision of the genial managing-director of the Alexandra, Mr. W. D. Forsdike, and his indefatigable representative, Mr. C. W. Ramsay.

"MOTHER GOOSE" AT SHEFFIELD.

Mr. John Hart's beautiful annuals at the Lyceum naturally caused the Sheffield public to expect something artistic and exquisite in the way of mise-en-scène and sartorial adornment when it was announced that the leading provincial theatrical director would produce a pantomime at the Theatre Royal. These anticipations were fully realised on Christmas Eve, when Mother Goose was presented at the famous old playhouse in Arundel-street, to a large and appreciative audience. The present version of Mother Goose is by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and his story is full of dramatic interest and quaint incidents, told in a witty dialogue. The elaborate scenery has been designed and painted by Mr. D. G. Hall, and there are several sets that are fine specimens of the scenic artist's art. Scene 4, the Hall of Gold, is a gorgeous interior, where Mother Goose celebrates her good fortune by giving a grand banquet. Another artistic picture is the exterior of the Laird's Hunting Lodge. This is a fine depiction of the country in its lovely autumnal tints of saffron, brown, and green. It is certainly one of the most picturesque scenes ever seen on the Royal stage, and when the foreground of the picture is crowded with gaily-apparelled huntsmen and fair ladies, who indulge in a lively dance, the spectacle is one that appeals irresistibly to the sport-loving nature of a Yorkshire audience. In Scene 7, a forest path is disclosed, followed by a lovely poetic conception called the Magic Pool. A charming ballet is fitly introduced here, its movements being instinct with that rhythmic grace, idyllic beauty, and chaste display Mr. Hart's ballets have long been famous for. The Wishing Gate is a pretty and effectively painted pastoral picture; and a part scene, In the Air, we arrive with all the characters in the magic realms of Gooseland, a grand and glowing presentment of fancydom, inspired by the best traditions of pantomime craftsmanship. Here, as a gorgeous finish to the series of scenic triumphs, takes place the resplendent spectacle, the Congress of Geese, and with an operatic finale, the culminating point is reached.

A first-rate company has been engaged. Mr. J. E. Nightingale, the popular Mrs. Sinbad of the last Lyceum pantomime, is always amusing and free from vulgarity in skirts, and his Mother Goose will prove to be a comic creation of the highest order. Another local favourite is Mr. Harry Roxbury, who caused hearty laughter on Monday by his comical antics and funny business in the part of the dame's son, Jack. Mr. G. P. Polson acted dramatically as Roderick, the Laird of Borderland; Mr. Jack Pleasants was a grotesque figure as Alexander Green, and his comic songs were received with hearty applause. Mr. Pleasants made quite a hit on the first night. Mr. Ernest Spalding was good as the pompous humbug, the Mayor of Moortown; Mr. Chas. Hanbury acted with melo-dramatic intensity as the demon, Malignum, and sang the lively ditty, "Hullo, hullo, hullo!" successfully; Mr. Jack Hodson as King Goose, and Mr. Ivan Capell as Queen Goose, did well; and the Bras Valdos as the donkeys thoroughly tickled the risible faculties of the audience by their comical knockabout business and agile tumbling. Miss Maisie Gay as Colin soon became on the best of terms with the house, and her shapely figure, pretty face, pleasant smile, and tuneful voice, made her an ideal hero of pantomime. She sang "There's a man in Manitoba" and other songs very acceptably, and received several encores. A graceful Jill was Miss Sylvia May, with a pretty and winning manner, who won enthusiastic applause and an encore for her captivating song, "Dreamland." Miss Daisy Jerome made a lively and captivating little Deutscher girl as Gretchen, and her coon songs, and other characteristic songs and splendid solo dances, fairly brought down the house. Miss Gertrude Parker was a sweet vision from fairyland as the good Queen Heartsease; and Miss Winifred Norman as Lady Ida, and Miss Rita Marcelli as Lord Eric, were excellent. There is a large and capable chorus, and the ladies of the corps de ballet and children have been well trained by Mme. Louie.

"LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD" AT SUNDERLAND.

Messrs. Ernest Stevens and R. C. Buchanan opened the King's Theatre (a full description of which appeared in our last issue), the most recent addition to places of amusement in the Wearside borough, on Monday last, under the most favourable auspices, with their first pantomime, Little Red Riding Hood. The proceedings were commenced by the singing of the National Anthem by the entire company, led by Miss Rose Florence from one of the circle boxes. The excellent book is from the pen of Mr. Stanley Rogers. The opening scene, by Banks, is a good example of a village fair, and a fine piece of work.

In the path through the woods, a pretty set by Vennimore, we have the traditional meeting of Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, and the beneficent influence of the good fairy is exercised. Scene 5, Blackberry Brake, is a really fine autumn setting by Glover; and a grand floral ballet introduced therein is distinguished by some smart and excellent dancing by the Arcadian Girls. In Widow Horner's cottage (by Banks) much fun is introduced; and in Scene 9, the Fairy Grotto, an extra attraction is found in Piu, an art statuary demonstrator. This turn is the most remarkable of its kind ever seen in Sunderland. Special electrical and water effects are used, and greatly add to the beauty of the poses. The concluding scene, the Royal Palace (by Grimani), is gorgeous with light and colour, and extensive use is made of electrical effects with most happy results.

Miss Lilian Lea, who plays the part of Eric, the principal boy, is much in evidence, and quickly gains the confidence and applause of her audience. She is no stranger to Sunderland, having appeared here before in pantomime at the Avenue Theatre. She makes a great hit by her sweet and cultured voice. Miss Nancy Hearne as the Marquis of Sportington (the second boy) has a prominent part which she fills in a charming manner, her rendering of "It's a different girl again" being received with enthusiasm. Miss Helene Rose is entrusted with the important part of Ruby. Her rendering of the songs "The sunshade girl" and "Come and make love to me" win for her numerous friends. She also has an attractive manner, and dances neatly. Little Red Riding Hood is in the capable hands of clever and artistic Miss Decima Brooke, who does complete justice to the part; Miss Kate Butler is a bright and charming Blondina; Miss Rose Florence is well placed as the Fairy Queen, singing "Idle dreams" in excellent style; and Miss Florrie Durant and Miss Beatrice Wilson both fill important parts. The comedians are led by the clever and popular Mr. George Le Clerq, whose impersonation of Johnny Stout is full of sprightly witticisms which always succeed in delighting the audience. He has the drollest of comrades in Mr. Ben Brown, who puts plenty of fun into his rendering of Jimmy Green, and gives a whimsical performance; Mr. Walter Wade capably fills the rôle of the village Squire, and scores with some well-rendered numbers; as the Widow Horner, Mr. Harry Nelson, the favourite Tyneside comedian, has a part which exactly suits him, and provides ample scope for the humour which he possesses. Mr. Alfred Bennett has plenty of chances for his abilities as Pepper; and Mr. Will Cutler is highly amusing as Peter Piper. Mr. Fred Zaranella gives a capital portrayal of the Wolf, and is a contortionist of exceptional merit.

"THE BABES" AT WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

On Wednesday, Dec. 26, Mr. John A. Thomson produced his fourth annual pantomime at the Knightstone Pavilion and Opera House. The Babes in the Wood is divided into ten scenes, beautifully painted by Mr. W. H. Banks. Scene 10—the Banquet Hall in Huntingdon Castle—and the transformation scene, entitled "The Old and New Year, are perfect works of art. The dresses are very handsome, and the ballets arranged by Miss Rita Frederika are admirably executed. Mr. Henry Eglington, on whose shoulders the onus of the production has fallen, is to be heartily congratulated on the success he has achieved. He also plays Dame Durden, enacting the character with a refined humour that is greatly appreciated. It would be impossible to speak too highly of Mr. Bob Lord's Baron Graball. He makes every line tell. Another character most comically played is the Horatio Fitzsparkle of Mr. Harry Lane Scorey. Mr. Jack Randsford as Dusty Rhodes and Mr. Harry Randsford as Casual Ward, the two ruffians, are screamingly funny. There is nothing but eulogy for Mr. Henry Scorey's Jack o' the Lantern, and Mr. Tom Walker is a praiseworthy Allan Dale. The principal boy, Miss Beatrice Wadham, makes a handsome and débonair Robin Hood, who sings "Hello! hello! hello! it's a different girl again," to the great delight of the audience. Miss Dena Druid makes a hit as Maid Marion. She is a winsome little lady, who acts most intelligently and possesses a captivating voice. Miss Claire Wadham is distinctly good as Fairy Glowworm, her fine voice finding plenty of scope in "Mr. Moon winks his eye"; Miss Bertha Hall looks charming as Will Scarlet and distinguishes herself in the part; the Phyllis of Miss Nellie Hill Storey is an admirable impersonation; and Miss Vera Hazen as Daisy and Miss Connell as Willie, the Babes, are entitled to the highest praise, Miss Rita Frederika being excellent as Storm. The terpsichorean efforts of the Rita Trio of dancers and the Butterfly Troupe of lady dancers are most cordially received.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The author of Robin Hood; or, the King of Sherwood Forest, has certainly written a strong and interesting drama which should prove most acceptable to playgoers. The romance attaching to the career of the bold outlaw is well preserved, while there is introduced a love story of a very pretty character. The drama opens with the return of Richard the First from abroad. Having reason to believe that his brother John, who was Regent during his years of absence, is not altogether true to his trust, and also that some of the barons are unfaithful, he visits in disguise Robin Hood and his outlawed men, from whom he obtains information as to how Court events have been proceeding. It transpires that Lord Fitzalwyn has been endeavouring to bring about a marriage between Marion Gilfain, who is a ward of King Richard, and Baron Le Beau, at the same time endeavouring to capture Robin Hood, with whom the maiden is in love. In the second act, Fitzalwyn, during the holding of a banquet, announces the betrothal of Marion and Le Beau, but the former startles the company by declaring that she is already the wife of the outlaw. The next turn of events finds Robin in the clutches of the soldiers, and in order to make him reveal the whereabouts of his followers Fitzalwyn has him tortured. Marion, who is present, cannot endure the sight, and in order to save her husband supplies the necessary information. The stronghold of the foresters is raided by the soldiers, but when the fact that Robin Hood is the real Earl of Huntingdon (being the son of Fitzalwyn's elder brother, who was stolen away when a child) is revealed, the King forgives the outlaws, and everything ends happily. Mr. F. B. Woulfe, who controlled the company, displayed marked ability in the title-rôle, being a manly Robin with a capital delivery; very much credit is due to Mr. William Macready, who looked the part of the villainous Earl Fitzalwyn, and had a commanding presence, in addition to a fine voice; Mr. Clifford Rean was a dignified King; Mr. Bob Anderson did the most with Friar Tuck, and was responsible for a deal of humour; Mr. A. Edward Dunstan afforded every satisfaction as Baron Le Beau; Miss Ethel Griffies was particularly fine as Marion, showing at times high accomplishments; Miss Edith Lorraine as the waiting-maid, Maude, filled the position very acceptably; Miss Winifred Symonds made the most of Elwynna, Friar Tuck's housekeeper; and among other well-drawn characters may be mentioned Mr. Henry Ernestine (Prince John), Mr. E. Holland Day (Little John), Mr. Alfred Ward (Much the Miller), Mr. E. J. Crane (Will-o'-th'-Hollow), and Mr. Sidney Churchill (Jack-o'-th'-Green). The music, specially composed by Herr Schwalter, was very pretty and appropriate, and a quartet of glee singers rendered several pieces with pleasing effect. The scenery was extremely picturesque, and the costumes copied from designs of the period. The whole production, in fact, is most complete in character, and we understand that the bookings are already considerable.

THE matinée hat has been effectively disposed of in Toulouse, the Mayor having issued a decree that in future ladies who occupy stalls must either be bare-headed or wear toques of small dimensions. In order that the ladies who have to discard their headgear shall have no anxiety as to safety of their precious possessions, racks have been placed by the municipal authorities in their cloakrooms, and hooks at the back of the stalls, while mirrors are provided in the promenoirs.

At Holloway's beautiful theatre on Boxing Day two immense audiences paved the way for the success of Cinderella, whose adventures have been set forth in the book of Mr. Stanley Rogers, who has had as collaborator in the music Mr. Harry Richardson. The story is told in the good old-fashioned way beloved by children, and the heroine of the hearth is sustained in her tribulations by the words of the Fairy Godmother, who aids her in the forest. "Take courage, child. As the shades of winter depart from the earth, so shall the clouds pass away from your young life, and happiness reign supreme." The shades of winter do actually depart, and the trees, liveried by summer leaves, wave their branches in the radiance of the sun—a pretty scenic effect that immensely took the fancy of the Marlburians on Boxing Day. The Baron and Baroness have very little in common with the originals of Perrault, but they have an individuality of their own that is of immense service in the general scheme of fun in Mr. Ernest Stevens and Mr. R. C. Buchanan's annual. They are the head and front of many scenes, and their comic business will become the talk of Holloway. Mr. George French as the Baron, otherwise known as Hercules, has a broad view of his responsibilities. As a punishment for his second venture in the troubled sea of matrimony, Hercules is saddled with the housework, the situations evolved from this scurvy treatment of a representative of the vieux noblesse being extremely droll. Mr. French has a capital contribution in Mr. Harry Lauder's famous number "She's ma Daisy," in which he is heard to considerable advantage. As the Baroness, known to her intimates as Tiny, Mr. Tom W. Conway makes a hit. In expressing her fixed determination to rule the roast and to hold her own as a domestic tyrant of the true pantomime order, the comedian has a nice derangement of Malapropian "epitaphs," and is consistently funny. That the genuine nature of his drollery is amply recognised may be judged by the hearty laughter he evokes from every part of the house. Mr. French and he have an excellent comic scene on the return of the "happy pair" from the ball, and their playful confidences on a wheelbarrow form an interlude of fun that will establish their claim to the rank of chief funmakers in a production which is largely ruled by mirth.

A chivalrous Prince is at hand in Miss Lelia Roze, a gallant that would realise the courtly grace of a Watteau hero of the Petit Trianon. A beautiful figure, a charming voice, and clear and expressive elocution enable Miss Roze to score in the romantic part, and her number, "Hello, Hello, Hello!" sets the whole house singing the swinging refrain. In another contribution, "My Banjo Lou," she is also very successful. Miss Daisy Revett's Cinderella is tenderly sentimental and joyous by turns. With Mr. William Pringle, who makes a welcome appearance as Capers, the page, she shares the success of "Parrots," a descriptive duet and dance, and altogether makes a pretty and capable heroine. Contrary to the general practice, the ugly sisters are represented by their own sex, and it is a decidedly refreshing experience to find so clever an actress as Miss Louie Tinsley in the part of a gushing elderly spinster, her scenes with Dandini being excellently conceived and carried out. As the other sister, Miss Adelaide Gracey aids the fun in a quarrelling scene. Mr. Harry Welchman acts well as Dandini, and sings very capably. Miss Kitty Dale, as the Fairy Godmother, sings "Once," the pretty song by Arthur Hervey, the verses being by Mrs. Arthur Hervey. On the occasion of our visit she was rapturously encored. Mr. Charles Kean, as Joseph, is concerned in a burlesque wrestling sketch with the Baron, and renders a good account of himself. Miss Ellaline Thorne makes an excellent Duke of Whistbridge; and personable representatives of Viscount Euchre, the Marquis of Gamesby, and Lord Dice—representative peers of pantomime only—are found in Miss Marian Roberts, Miss Doreen Vaughan, and Miss Rose Vane. The Doreen Girls figure to advantage in the ballets, which have been well arranged by Mr. Paul Valentine. One of these is danced in the Palace of the Fairy Godmother, a dwelling of sweet daintiness, with delicate tracery of ivory white everywhere. This comes from the atelier of Mr. Fred Karno. Other pictures of beauty are supplied by Messrs. Stafford Hall, R. C. Oldham, D. G. Hall, Alfred Terraine, and E. Grimani. In the lovely ballroom, with its Corinthian arches, a fine procession of nations immediately precedes the wedded happiness of Casimir and Cinderella. The splendid dresses are by Mr. Robert Crafter. The electric crystal coach, drawn by four diminutive ponies, a most beautiful equipage, evoked shouts of admiration from the youngsters who proclaimed their gladness on Boxing Day when the most popular heroine of fairy lore sat in the beautiful equipage ready to take her departure for the ball. We expect to hear of crowded houses at the Marlborough for some time to come.

The playgoers of Hammersmith and district know when they are in possession of a good thing, and therefore no apprehension need be felt by Mr. Mulholland as to the success of his fifth annual. On Boxing Day the capacious and handsome theatre was packed, and the uproarious and continual laughter heard all over the house from children and grown-ups proved conclusively that the pantomime had met with an instantaneous and deserved success. The pantomime is on the ever-popular theme of Cinderella, and is written by that fertile author Mr. J. Hickory Wood. The story follows on the usual lines, and is too well known to require repetition. The artists engaged in the production work hard and satisfactorily. Miss Hilda Guiver is a handsome and brave-looking Prince, whose acting and singing will compare most favourably with many a better-known pantomime favourite. Miss Guiver is well provided with popular songs, notably "Hello! Hello! Hello!" "A different girl again," and "Zuyder Zee," which, sung by her with great verve and dash, are bound to increase her popularity. As Cinderella, Miss Ethel Ward makes a sweetly fascinating picture, and her acting and singing are refreshingly natural and dainty. She sings the songs allotted to her—"Hyacinth" and a coon ditty—with great taste and expression. Miss Norah Emerald is a smart and showy Dandini, and soon ingratiates herself into the favourable opinion of the audience. She dances excellently. Mr. W. H. Kirby as the page Alphonso causes genuine and hearty laughter for an exceedingly humorous impersonation of the character. His by-word "That will be nice" will inevitably catch on and be heard all over the district in a short time. He works very energetically, and not a little of the success of the pantomime will be traceable to Mr. Kirby's efforts. The Baron is Mr. J. G. Taylor, who gives a quaintly dry and humorous representation—one which will no doubt be worked up even funnier than it is after a few performances. Gertie, one of the Ugly Sisters, is played by Mr. Will Johnson, a popular comedian from the halls, who, with something of the methods of the late Dan Leno, gives the audience cause for rollicking laughter every moment he is on the stage. He is certainly a safe card to play in any pantomime. Mr. Jack Denton is eminently successful as the other Sister, Lily, and in his caricature of the Gibson Girl he is screamingly funny. The New Macs are very humorous as Hob and Nob, and, given opportunities, will be more so. Miss Cordelia Knight as Deadly Nightshade is good; and Miss Dorothy Southgate gains many friends by her pleasing looks and bearing as the Fairy Crystal. The Melody Four, the Astoria Flying Ballet, the Sisters Dorrell, and Miss Madeline Rossiter all contribute their speciality turns with good effect, the latter one being particularly well received. The Donaldson Brothers and Ardel in their Zoological Gardens Comedy meet with a huge success, their clever antics in the monkey-house gaining special approbation. The scenery by Mr. E. G. Banks is as artistic and picturesque as it could be, and is always in harmony with the very elaborate costumes provided by M. Alias. The music, including most of the popular melodies of the hour, has been composed, selected, and arranged by Mr. Herbert Simpson and Mr. Fritz B. Hart, the talented resident musical-director of the theatre. A word of praise should be given for the well-selected chorus, which contains a number of pretty faces and shapely figures.

The palmy days of pantomime seem in a fair way to be restored at the Crystal Palace by Mr. Bannister Howard, who, on Christmas Eve, presented his first annual in the theatre at Sydenham before an audience of gratifying dimensions. The pantomime is equipped with fun, spectacle, and melody in equal proportions, and no expense has evidently been spared to render the production complete. The story of Aladdin is based on traditional lines, and begins with the release of the Genii of the Ring by fairy influence from an immense crystal. Familiar faces appear in Scene 2, the Market Place at Pekin, a well-arranged set, where merriment is started by the appearance of Wishee-Washee, a mandarin, and Widow Twankey, closely followed by Boo-Bee and Bob-Bi, two Celestial policemen, whose pranks are very diverting. Mirth grows still more hilarious at the entry of Abanazar, the magician, and his scheme to obtain possession of the lamp is duly arranged with Aladdin, whose infatuation for the Princess Badroulbadour, leads him to embark upon his perilous mission. Scene 3 reveals the Imperial Baths. The establishment is evidently open to the public, and the eccentricities of the various customers provide an inexhaustible means of comicality. Among the most laughable items of this scene is a travesty of the "Sandow Girls," done by a number of the characters, which was encored. The Exterior of the Cave, where more fun is made, speedily gives way to a realistic representation of the interior, which sparkles gorgeously with many hues, the effect of distance being skilfully secured.

The second act of the pantomime begins in Widow Twankey's Laundry, where all the characters lend a hand to pile up the fun, and songs and dances give pleasing variety to the proceedings. In the following scene, the Palm Grove, a ballet of bats takes place, fair ladies with suitable headgear moving about in picturesque array. Scene 3, the Interior of the Pavilion, is chiefly remarkable for the chase after the demon, who takes headers through the stage, and shoots up with startling suddenness from below, high into the air. It is a remarkable piece of trap-work, and was rightly accorded an ovation. The Exterior of the Palace is a brilliant set, glowing with colour, the tints harmonising agreeably. Opportunity is here taken for the parallel bar display by the Onda Brothers, who have been working indefatigably throughout the piece as the two Chinese policemen, but have energy enough to enable them to execute a series of astonishing feats on the triple bars. The progress of the story lies through a Desert of Despair and a Flying Palace, and eventually reaches its conclusion in the Throne Room of the Palace, an imposing pictorial display, where Aladdin is crowned Emperor, amid great pomp and splendour.

The admirably chosen company played together with a unanimity rare on a first night, and no hitch of any kind was discernible. Aladdin had a buoyant and alert representative in Miss Lillie Lassah, who has a powerful but sympathetic voice, admirably adapted to the singing of a number of tuneful songs which fall to her. "By the side of the Zuyder Zee" was particularly charming, and a neat and varied step-dance quite enraptured the audience. "It's a different girl again" afforded Miss Lassah further chances of displaying her vocal accomplishments. She looked very "fetching" in her white satin suit, and her comely presence and winning ways made the audience willing victims to her fascinations throughout. An equally entrancing Badroulbadour was found in Miss Lily Gullick, who exerted an agreeable influence by reason of her sparkling vivacity and dainty style. The song of "Shy Ann," in the refrain of which she was assisted by a little girl, was prettily rendered, and furnished one of the most tasteful morsels of the evening. Miss Gullick's share in the "Snowflake" duet with Aladdin was also well done, the interlude quite taking the fancy of the house. Fun-makers are furnished in liberal quantities, chief among them being Mr. Arthur Poole, who made Abanazar effervesce with humour without stint. Wherever the fun was thickest, the tall, lank figure of the wily magician loomed prominently. He had many encore verses to add to his topical song, "Early in the morning," in which the most up-to-date allusions were made, and, whether taking part in the travesties of the Sandow Girls or sharing in the drollery of burlesque statuary, he was the cause of incessant mirth. Good service in the cause of merriment was also done by the Onda Brothers, who, beside giving funny impersonations of Boo-Bee and Bobbi, gained high honours for their gymnastic exercises. Mr. A. E. Passmore made a "goey" Widow Twankey, full of the eccentricities which appertain to elder femininity, but strictly avoiding any appearance of vulgarity. His singing early in the evening of "Waiting at the church" put the audience in an excellent temper that lasted till the end. Mr. Frank Weir, too, made a valuable contribution to the mirth by his antics as Wishee-Washee; and Mr. E. Oxlee as the Emperor was not too dignified to join in the revels, which he did effectively. Mr. J. Devereux Cawdrey was an impressive Genii of the Ring, and was responsible for the trap-scene to which we have alluded. A prepossessing Fairy Aureola was furnished by Miss Josephine Sullivan, whose cultivated voice was heard with pleasure in a melodious address to the moon, which won well-merited approval. Miss Nellie Barnwell made a dashing Pekoe, rendering "My little Hyacinth" with a daintiness and charm that could not well be surpassed; and an engaging Pitti-Sing was found in Miss Gladys Ray. All the other parts had adequate exponents, and the chorus and orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Joseph Sainton, who composed and arranged the music, was of unusual excellence. Miss Lottie Stone's troupe of speciality dancers tripped gaily at intervals, and the unaccompanied glees of the London Quartet gave unqualified delight. A feature of the pantomime that will be hailed with joy by the youngsters is a real old-fashioned harlequinade and comic shadowgraph, with Mr. J Devereux Cawdrey as clown.

THE CAMDEN.

On Wednesday, Dec. 26, the Pantomime entitled
"CINDERELLA."

Prince Peerless .....MISS NANCY LANGTYRE
Cinderella .....MISS LILIAN HUBBARD
Dandini .....MISS MEG HAMYLTON

Baron Balderdash .....MR. GEO. HUGHES

On Boxing afternoon Mr. Robert Arthur produced his third pantomime at this theatre, and scored a pronounced and immediate success. The choice this season has fallen on Cinderella, and though it is a popular theme in London this year, it is safe to say that none will excel this one for daintiness and good wholesome fun. Mr. Frank Dix is the author of the book, which is well written, and though it follows the story much on the usual lines is nevertheless full of originality and freshness. The music, which at times assumes quite an operatic style, has been composed and selected by Messrs. J. H. Wilson and J. G. Shepherd, and most of the popular airs of the day are to be found in the score.

The pantomime is divided into two parts, and the scenery, which is by Mr. J. Fowler Hogg, is artistic and pretty. The opening scene of Flora's Bower is most effective, while the Forest Glade, which immediately follows it, is a particularly charming set. The Fairy Boudoir is another fine picture, and when Cinderella's coach, with all its little electric lights and small ponies, is driven in, the scene is most charming. The second part opens with the Royal Ball Room, a very fine interior and brilliantly lighted; while the last scene of the Rose Garden and Floral Fête will be remembered as one of the prettiest that has been witnessed at this theatre. It is a splendid piece of colour blending, with all the magnificent dresses, and when the festoons of flowers and electric lights are lowered the effect is superb, and called forth the loud applause of the audience, bringing the pantomime to a brilliant conclusion.

The cast has been most judiciously chosen. For the hero, Prince Peerless, no better choice could have been made than that of Miss Nancy Langtyre, who is so well suited to the part, and plays it admirably. Miss Langtyre has a fine presence, and is the possessor of a good voice, and she has several capital songs. "The Zuyder Zee" is a very pretty number, and "What has the night-time to do with a girl," is another; but she scored her biggest success with "Au revoir, my little Hyacinth." Miss Lilian Hubbard makes a dainty and charming Cinderella, and she soon became a very big favourite. That bright little actress Miss Meg Hamylton is Dandini, and she plays it excellently, and seems to be possessed of unbounded energy. Her song "Bridget" is sure to be heard all over Camden Town before long. Another song of Miss Hamylton's, too, was most successful, "The Ice Cream Girl," which has some very pretty business introduced. The capital duo, Alexandre and Hughes, are a great acquisition, and their contributions on the concertina and other instruments are quite a leading feature. Mr. Hughes makes a capital Baron, playing the character with great humour, and he gets right there with his topical song, which is very funny, and has endless possibilities. His other song, "Hours, weeks, and months," is a cleverly written one, which should catch on. Pickles as played by Mr. Alexandre is a very droll person, who always raises a laugh by the catch-phrase, "Has anyone been asking for me?" and it is easy to see that before long his gags will be a great point in the show. He made a big success with "A different girl again" and "There's always room for a girl," while not the least mirth-provoking scene in the pantomime is his little bit of mock drama with Cinderella. As the sisters, Bedelia and Anona, Miss May Lilian Levey and Mr. Harry Herbert are intensely humorous. They play together on rather novel lines, and Miss Levey has a good song on the suffrage question. Mr. Harry Herbert is a capital comedian, and he causes shouts of laughter; his parody on "The old apple tree" went very strong indeed. His opening duet with Miss Levey, "Sweet Seventeen," is good, and their other duet, "Our hands have met, but not our hearts," was extremely funny, and brought down the house. Another prime favourite is Little Cliff, who is seen as Shrimp, the tiger. He is a clever dancer, and his song, "Good-night, Mr. Brown, I'm out," with a capital dance after, was among the chief successes of the pantomime. Mr. Frederic Jacques is so excellent as Mr. Beerfoam Wood—once an actor, now a broker's man—that one wishes he had more to do. Miss Ethel Dunbar is very good as the Fairy Flora, and she sings well, especially in the opening scene. Mr. T. H. Wood as the evil spirit, Aconite, sings "Will o' the Wisp" in effective style. Mr. Bert Coote's original Yankee Doodle Girls appear in various scenes, and contribute some clever dancing and also some catchy songs, and there is no doubt of their being a great help to the success of the production. In one scene Miss Lucy Wilson appears in a Sandow Girl song, which is a clever satire on the muscular woman of to-day. The dances have been arranged by Mlle. Elsie Clerc and Miss Enid Errol, the première danseuse, gives some fine specimens of her art. The chorus and orchestra work splendidly, and Mr. George F. Ford, who wields the bâton, is to be heartily complimented on the musical portion of the production. The dresses are very tasteful and elaborate, and Mr. T. Blacklock is deserving of highest commendation for his noteworthy stage-management. The whole has been produced under Mr. Robert Arthur's personal supervision, and its success was never for a moment in doubt.

Counted in numbers, the Alexandra pantomimes now amount to eleven, and the Yuletide entertainment provided this year is by no means the least attractive. It is entitled Goody Two Shoes, Dame Trot and Her Cat; or Harlequin Robin Hood, and Mr. Paul Valentine has had ample scope to develop his inventive genius. The fun commences in the second scene—the Village of Deardale—and the introduction of the May Day festival and rustic revels. Here Robin Hood, with Thomas Tiles, the Cat, and others, indulge in some amusing pleasantries. In Scene 4 Goody Two Shoes' school, which is left under the care of Dame Trot, is shown a specimen of up-to-date learning—scholastic excellence and the reverse—which skit is directed at the Board Schools of to-day. Little Miss Muffet introduces with excellent results a drum dance. A capital piece of funny business is the wooing of Dame Trot by Squire Broadbent, the Lord of the Manor; and a trio by Demonia, Dame Trot, and the Squire met with instantaneous success, whilst another number, the duet "I want no other girl like you," was commendably prominent, and received a deserved encore. In the final development, the Grand Toy Scene—a somewhat novel artistic display of scenic effect—everything is settled for the best: good overcomes evil, and the grand finale is reached,

Miss Elaine Gryce as Robin Hood was most effective. She has a happy style and graceful manner, while her playing was bright and full of energy. Her musical contributions were smartly rendered, and none were more highly appreciated than the popular number, "The Greenwood Tree." As Goody Two Shoes Miss Winnie Raynor has a pleasing stage appearance, possessing a pleasant voice. Her song of "Take me back to London Town" was an immediate success. She danced well, and presented a picture of pretty rusticity in her neat dress, and she was equally as winsome in her later splendour. Miss Doris Nelson as Bluebell filled her part in a clever and suitable fashion; Miss Agnetta Dorina was a charming Fairy Goodheart, and her rendering of "The rose of my heart" won golden opinions; Margery Daw, the See-saw Girl, was well entrusted to Miss Kate Robins. A word of praise is due to Miss Mabel Denison for her attractive and sprightly delineation of Tom Tucker; Miss Dorothy Penrose as Screna and première danseuse was noticeable for her agility and cleverness, and was enthusiastically received by her many admirers. Mr. George Lake Grange acted his part of the Demon with becoming ferocity. He gave evidence of his ability as a genuine comedian, and his rendering of the catchy song, "When there's a girl about," afforded additional proof of his talent as a singer. The Two Ottos as the attendants Hob and Nob were amusingly business-like with their grotesque antics of the acrobatic-knockabout order, and deserved commendation for their performance. Mr. Stanley Greene played for all it was worth his rôle of Johnny Green; Mr. Arthur Partell made capital out of the small part of Peter Piper; a humorous study was that of Simple Simon, by Mr. Fred Hammond, who instilled into it a welcome quaintness; Squire Broadbent had an interpreter well able to depict the Lord of the Manor in a very smart exponent of comedy, Mr. Harry Monkhouse, whose humour and originality of conception were proved when in Scene 7 his number, "Beds," was introduced, arousing appreciative merriment; the Cat was skilfully played by Mr. Reg. Roffey, an animal delineator of merit; and as a good old-fashioned Dame, Mr. Walter Champney earned his laurels, being admirably fitted.

The several other characters contributed their share to the fun, and a harlequinade, selected from the company, added extra zest to an already well-sustained pantomime. For the attention paid to the production, Mr. Edwin Goodship (the manager), Mr. Francis Bull (for the scenery), Messrs. C. W. May and Mr. M. Gladman (for the beautiful costumes), Mr. Ernest Collini (for original and carefully-arranged music), each deserves mention; and Mr. John Wilson conducted a well-trained and efficient orchestra with exemplary skill. Indeed, all concerned are to be congratulated on the attainment of a potential success.

"SINBAD" AT THE WEST LONDON.

Pantomime, by J. Hickory Wood, Produced on Dec. 24.

Sinbad .....MISS BELLE HARCOURT
Mrs. Sinbad .....MR. CHARLES DILLON
Hindbad .....MR. DAN WHITLEY
Captain Scuttle .....MR. WILLIE PAGE
Ben Bunk, Sanders McBobstay .....ESMONDE AND VERONA
Hassan .....MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS
King Tibbles, Princess Naggles .....SNOW AND FARRON
Fairy Crystal .....MISS MARION MARTELL
Agrippa .....MR. E. STEPHENS
Badoura .....MISS LUCY COVENTRY
Zoe .....MISS EDIE ANDERSON

Again this year Mr. William Bailey has arranged with Mr. George Brydon-Phillips to supply his annual pantomime, and we cordially wish it a repetition of last year's success. The story is well told by Mr. Wood, the pantomime being divided into ten scenes, several of them being very effective sets. The opening scene of the Port is a pretty one, and here we witness the setting off of Sinbad, Mrs. Sinbad, Hindbad, Badoura, and Zoe to find the Diamond Valley. On the way thither the good ship, the Merry Matilda, encounters a severe storm, due to the vengeance of the Old Man of the Sea, Agrippa, owing to his failure to obtain the chart of the Diamond Valley from Sinbad. The next cloth, After the Storm, shows us Sinbad on the raft, being guided by Fairy Crystal to her realms under the sea, which is a clever bit of stage setting, bringing the first part to a close. Part 2 opens with the Harem of King Tibbles, and the scene changes to the Diamond Valley, which makes a charming picture, wherein opportunity is found to introduce a gorgeous jewel ballet. The next scene, and last, the Palace, is another fine bit of stage setting. The grand transformation scene, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," is from the skilful brush of Mr. R. Burris, and the best traditions of this old playhouse are well upheld. The harlequinade is full of interest to the children, who renew their acquaintance with Mr. Harry Ewins, their old favourite, who "clowns" in his own inimitable style. Mr. Willie Page is pantaloon, Mr. James Cornish harlequin, Mr. Fred Damary policeman, and Miss Marguerite Erroll columbine. Miss Belle Harcourt plays Sinbad with charming vivacity and sparkling gaiety. Her voice is extremely tuneful and well modulated, being heard to good effect in "Stowaway" and "There's a man in Manitoba," the latter being an especial favourite already. Miss Harcourt has a good stage presence, and altogether makes an ideal Sinbad. As principal girl Miss Lucy Coventry is quite at home, playing with archness and vim, and she bids fair to make a huge success as Badoura. She sings and dances well, her songs including the tuneful "Zuyder Zee," with its clever sabot dance. Miss Edie Anderson makes the most of her many opportunities as Zoe. Possessed of an attractive personality, she dances with real dexterity. One of her songs, "Good-night, Mr. Brown, I'm out," is already a favourite item, due in a great measure to the originality with which she sings it. In Mr. Charles Dillon Mr. Phillips has been fortunate enough to secure an excellent dame, who well contributes to the fun as Mrs. Sinbad. He makes up well and dresses humorously, his performance having the merit of being entirely free from that exaggeration and vulgarity which too often mar the efforts of many a pantomime dame. As Hindbad Mr. Dan Whitley makes the hit of the evening. There is never a dull moment whilst he is on the stage, his unflagging energies and resourceful by-play being most noticeable. He is provided with a part that affords him practically unlimited opportunities, and he never lets a chance slip by of displaying his quaint methods and funny mannerisms. Mr. Willie Page cuts a comical figure as Captain Scuttle, his performance being a humorous one throughout; Mr. George Williams is fiercely stern as the slave-dealer, Hassan; Mr. E. Stephens is grotesquely made up as Agrippa; and Miss Marion Martell is pleasing as the good Fairy Crystal. Esmonde and Verona are blithe and gay as Ben Bunk and Sanders McBobstay, their business being exceptionally funny. King Tibbles and Princess Naggles are speciality parts absolutely safe in the capable hands of Snow and Farron, their whole performance being a striking one. The dressing and staging of the pantomime are in excellent taste, and much credit is due to Mr. George Taylor for the admirable way in which he has produced it. Mention must also be made of the musical arrangements of Mr. Frank Dawes, many of the numbers being most tuneful.

"BABES IN THE WOOD" AT FULHAM.

Produced Dec. 24.

Jack Hayseed .. MISS MARGUERITE BROADFOOTE
Maid Marian ..... MISS LILY BLACK
Colin .....MISS VERA CAREY
Mavis ..... MISS RUBY FORBES
Edna and Egbert ..... THE SISTERS HERBERT
The Baron .....MR. JOHN E. COYLE
Mrs. No-Luck Jones ..... MR. LEONARD THIEL
The McGuffin ..... MR. JOCK MCKAY
Life Buoy Beaucaire, Sunlight Jim ..... THE POLUSKIS

On Christmas Eve Mr. Robert Arthur produced his third pantomime at the Fulham, and it was received with every mark of favour. The subject selected this year is that tragic episode known to childhood as the story of The Babes in the Wood Needless to say, Mr. Dix, the author of the "book," has eliminated the tragedy, whilst retaining the fine melodramatic flavour of the old story. The opening scene shows a farmstead, with a very effective landscape in the distance. The action begins with the usual chorus and dance by reapers and labourers, &c. We are now introduced to the leading characters—Jack Hayseed (ably represented by Miss Marguerite Broadfoote), Maid Marian (Miss Lily Black), and the Baron Bullanbush (Mr. John E. Coyle). There is also a musical interlude by Mr. Jock McKay, as The McGuffin, a Highland musician, who proves no mean performer on the pipes. Next comes an old Fulham favourite in the person of Mr. Leonard Thiel (as Mrs. No-Luck Jones), who again enacts the part of a sprightly lady of uncertain age but undoubted agility, and he promptly scores a hit with a song on "Men." The Baron is duly informed of the decease of his brother and the pending arrival of the Babes. These latter are charmingly represented by the Sisters Herbert. It is not long before the two chief funmakers appear in the shape of the Poluskis. These comic villains enter with thoughts of murder, and the laughter is kept going by their methods of burglary, which are the reverse of noiseless. The signs of the coming rift in the lute soon appear, for Sunny Jim is comically unequal to the task of murdering children. Interrupted by Mrs. Jones, the villains have to sleep in the bedroom. This is not quite what it seems, for the art of the stage carpenter and mechanician has turned it into a haunted chamber, and the furniture and fittings all play the most surprising pranks. This gives place to Scene 4, the Fair, an effective and highly realistic set. Jack Hayseed is now heard in one of the most successful songs of the evening—about the two little dicky-birds that flew away and came back. The topical verses deal with sundry persons and things that are invited to go away or come back, and the experience of the first night shows that Miss Broadfoote will have to be prepared with a very long list of encore verses to this song. Next follow a song and dance by the Babes, very prettily done. The younger Miss Herbert is going to be a dancer of more than ordinary excellence, for she executed with wonderful grace and precision a pas seul on tiptoe, after the manner of the great dancers of sixty years ago. Next comes a song of Mr. Thiel's, "The Sandow Girl," and this is followed by the kidnapping of the Babes, which, to be up to date, is, of course, done by motor-car. The scene ends with a brilliant and effective ballet of showmen, clowns, poodles, ringmasters, &c.

In the second act comes the famous quarrel between the villains. In the hands of the Poluskis this is indeed a terrific combat. Mr. Sam Poluski plays the transpontine drama ruffian to perfection, and his companion opposes his dramatic onslaughts with delightful stolidity. The fight is cleverly worked up into a travesty of the stage fights in melodrama, with a deal of hitting and little striking. The next scene is a corridor in the Castle, lanterns, when the Babes are discovered and rescued. The next scene is a corridor in the Castle, where the Baron delivers a good comic song, "Don't be silly." Miss Broadfoote follows with a lively song, "Trixie of Pimlico," and the Baron and Mrs. Jones take part in a topical duet, "The Birthday Party." The McGuffin wanders in, and entertains with some Scotch songs and some good stories. The following and final scene represents the ballroom of the Castle, an elaborately built-up and brilliantly lighted interior; and the play ends with a final ballet and dance of Holly and Mistletoe and Red and Yellow Wines, amid a blaze of light and a veritable feast of colour and movement.

Miss Broadfoote makes a vigorous principal boy, and acts with plenty of spirit. Miss Lily Black's graceful person is seen to advantage as Maid Marian, and she sings well. Miss Vera Carey, as Colin, and Miss Ruby Forbes, as Mavis, form another attractive couple. The youthful representatives of the Babes, the Sisters Herbert, are already quite at home in their parts, and act with delightful earnestness, and the younger one will probably be heard of again as a dancer. Mr. Coyle, as the Baron, works hard all through, and contributes largely to the fun with songs and business. Mr. Leonard Thiel is as active as ever in his characteristic part, and Mr. Jock McKay's Scotch humour is quite a pleasing novelty. As for the Poluskis, they are a host in themselves, and their business is always remarkably well worked up. Most of it is far above the ordinary knockabout business, and requires considerable dramatic ability, while, above all, it is never in the least vulgar. The music by Mr. Jullien Wilson is suitably bright and pleasant, and the scenery by Messrs. Hogg and Stafford Hall is exceedingly good, particularly the woodland sets and the final tableau.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, Dec. 24, the Pantomime, entitled

"ALADDIN."

Aladdin	Miss Winifred Hare
Princess Badroulbadour	Miss Mary Hay
Pekoe	Miss Marion Hargrave
Pitti Sing	Miss Ethel Ivimey
Hi Tid Li	Miss Vera Thompson
Hi Ti	Miss Ethel Ford
Widow Twankey	Mr. Mark Melford
Abanazar	Mr. Arthur Reynolds
Wishee Washee, Ki Ki	The Ethairien Brothers
Ping-Pong	Mr. Dan Lyndon
Bobby Bob	Mr. Gus Granville
Slave of the Ring, Slave of the Lamp	Susie and Protti

Mr. H. G. Dudley Bennett's eleventh annual pantomime, produced here on Christmas Eve, bids fair, judging by the enthusiasm which prevailed throughout the opening performance, to eclipse his previous successes. The story chosen is Aladdin, and Mr. Mark Melford, the author of the book, has treated the subject with a freshness that should appeal with irresistible force to all lovers of pantomime. The music by Mr. Sidney Shaw is very tuneful, and the various melodies are cleverly arranged.

The pantomime is divided into eleven scenes, of which the opening one, The Market Place in Pekin, is very pretty. Another effective set is Outside the Grotto, in which the See-Saw Girls introduce a novel and clever speciality swing song and dance. This was greatly enjoyed by the audience, who demanded an encore. The concluding scene of Part I. introduces a Grand Procession of the Guardians of the Cave. The groups are arranged with great care, and the whole effect is very striking, and evoked great applause. The most notable scene in the second part is The Banqueting Hall of Aladdin's Palace, a veritable triumph of scenic art, which affords an opportunity for a clever mechanical illusion, the production of a banquet from what appeared to the audience to be an empty table.

The cast is a very strong one. Miss Winifred Hare as Aladdin was an attractive and dashing principal boy. Possessed of a fine voice, which was used to the best effect, Miss Hare was a decided success, and was accorded numerous encores for her songs, the chief of which were "Why do the girls love Charlie?" "A cosy little flat," and "A different girl again," and her duet, "Men and Women," with the Magician (Mr. Arthur Reynolds) was one of the hits of the evening. A charming Princess Badroulbadour was seen in Miss Mary Hay, who has a dainty and captivating personality. Her songs, too, were rendered with much expression, especially "My Prince," which elicited rounds of applause. Another of her successes was "Zuyder Zee," in which she was assisted by the See-Saw Girls dressed in Dutch costumes. Miss Marion Hargrave as Pekoe was thoroughly satisfactory; and Miss Ethel Ivimey was a fascinating Pitti Sing, and acted with much vivacity. Miss Vera Thompson as Hi Tid Li and Miss Ethel Ford as Hi Ti also rendered good service. Mr. Mark Melford was decidedly original and versatile as Widow Twankey, and his quaint drollery and mannerisms kept the house well amused, and to a large extent ensured the success of the piece. Mr. Arthur Reynolds achieved distinction as the magician, Abanazar, and was also responsible for a good deal of the fun. He was particularly amusing in the song "Let me sing," into which he introduced some smart business. Mr. J. H. Goldsworthy as the Emperor was also very good. The Ethairien Brothers as Wishee Washee and Ki Ki had ample opportunities of displaying their talents, and their clever gymnastic and knockabout business kept the fun going fast and furious. Mr. Dan Lyndon as Ping-Pong and Mr. Gus Granville as Bobby Bob also contributed their share of the hilarity, and were very successful.

One of the most interesting treats of the evening was the speciality dancing of Susie and Protti, who assumed the parts of Slaves of the Ring and Lamp. These artists quite impressed the audience with their clever and original dances, which were executed with much gracefulness. The See-Saw Girls also gave an exhibition of troupe dancing, and were the recipients of hearty applause. The whole production was under the direction of Mr. Robert Crossman, and he was assisted by Mr. Fewlass Llewllyn as stage-director. The lyrics are by Mr. T. H. Goldsworthy, the dances arranged by Signor Protti, and the scenery and mechanical effects by George Dance and assistants.

Mr. Samuel James produced, on Boxing Day, at the Grand, his second annual pantomime, Jack and the Beanstalk, the book, as before, coming from the prolific pen of Mr. Newman Maurice, the popular actor-manager of the theatre. Mr. Maurice is an experienced hand at Christmas annuals, and has supplied a résumé of the fable admirably adapted for the somewhat irresponsible nature of the production. The music has again been entrusted to Mr. William T. Gliddon, the accomplished chef d'orchestre, with very happy results. The entire scenery for the production is from the brush of Mr. George Tweddel, and very excellent examples of his skill they are in every respect, the three most noticeable sets being the opening scenes of the pantomime proper—a pretty rustic set; the last scene of the first part—a brilliant fairy scene—embellished by a ballet and some effective electrical lighting; and a gorgeous set to conclude the pantomime, the Giant's Palace.

Miss Blanche Vincent, as Jack, brings a good stage presence, powerful voice, and vivacity, to her aid with the happiest results. To her fall some of the most popular songs, and she soon gained lusty assistance from the audience in "Hello! Hello! Hello!" and "London Town," both being, of course, encored. Her duets with Miss Florence Watson and with Mr. Charles Austin proved her versatility, and, altogether, she is to be credited with a distinct wit. Miss Florence Watson, as the Princess, proved herself to be a very refined and dainty artist. Her songs, "Farewell, my Little Hyacinth," and the "Zuyder Zee," found immediate favour, her reception being deservedly cordial. Miss Marie Ault, as the Baroness, plays a comedy rôle with success, and her song, "What are they doing it for?" was well sung. Miss Marie Altino, as the Fairy Queen, acts with dignity, and proves herself the possessor of a good voice in her vocal number. The Sisters Bartholomew, as Philomel and Phyllis, played second boy and girl brightly, introducing a special duet and dance with effect. Miss May Lurlin and Miss Queenie Gordon, in small parts, were also acceptable. For the principal comedian the management have again engaged Mr. Charles Austin, who made such a hit here last year. As Mrs. Jack, he carries the brunt of the heavy work on his shoulders, and, altogether, he is to be credited with a great share in the general success. Mr. Nat Wilkins, as the Baron, gives a good performance. Messrs. Harley and Harden, as the knockabouts, are amusing, though their chances to shine are somewhat limited. Their dancing and business are smart. Mr. James Wilson, as Discord, acts a good old rôle in the old-fashioned way. Mr. Dick Tubb, as the Giant, acquits himself well; Mr. Fred Melros as the Clown, Mr. Harry Adlin as the Pantaloon, Mr. Robert Sawyer as the Harlequin, Miss Connie Ford as Columbine, and Mr. Ninety as the Policeman present all the humours of the harlequinade to the unbounded delight of the youngsters. Mlle. Luma introduced as a special feature a dance in which revolving slides illuminated her flowing robes, the effect produced being very beautiful. Mr. Sydney Morton, who is responsible for the production, is to be complimented on a remarkably smooth first performance.

PRINCE'S THEATRE, POPLAR.

The Pantomime, produced on Wed., Dec. 26,
entitled

"THE FORTY THIEVES."

Ali Baba	Mr. Edwin Adeler
Ganem	Miss Lily Iris
Cogia	Mr. Frank Gee
Morgiana	Miss Florence Beech
Lola	Miss Lillie Chappell
Boris	Miss Rosa Sullivan
Cassim	Mr. Geo. Villiers-Arnold
Mustapha	Mr. Chas. H. Ross
Abdallah	Miss Margaret Radcliffe
Princess Zoe	Miss Rosie Bartlett
Hassarac	Mr. Arthur Ricketts
Cassarac	Little Dando
Abbas	Mr. Frank Francis

Mr. Clarence Sounes' second annual pantomime at the Prince's Theatre is a brilliant and gorgeous spectacle, with a bright and well-written version by Mr. Fred Bowyer of the good old story of the Forty Thieves and their tragic ending. There is much to charm the eye, and the pretty faces, ravishing costumes, and magnificent scenery all go to make up the most attractive of pictures. Good fun abounds of the character which appeals to old and young alike; there is music of the popular order and high-class music, and, taken altogether, all the elements lend themselves to the making of an excellent pantomime.

Miss Lily Iris makes a vivacious and pleasing Ganem, full of life and gaiety. She has a well-modulated voice, which she uses with excellent effect. Her contributions to the entertainment include, amongst others, the well-known "Hello," "Nelson's Monument," and "The Zuyder Zee," all of which were heartily received. Morgiana, which should have been played by Miss Ruby Verdi, who is, unfortunately, ill, has an able exponent in Miss Florence Beech, a leading member of one of the Prince of Pilsen companies. She took up the part at a few hours' notice, and renders it with excellent effect and style. Her songs were much appreciated, especially "Over a cup of tea" and "Hyacinth." Miss Lillie Chappell is distinctly fascinating and chic as Lola, and one regretted she had not more to do. As Boris, Miss Rosa Sullivan looks and acts well. Her boy's dress suits her admirably, and she cuts a dashing figure. Miss Margaret Radcliffe, as Abdallah the Robber Chief, makes an imperious and imposing principal boy. She is possessed of a commanding presence, and has a fine voice, which greatly pleased the audience, especially in her singing of "Queen of Old Samara" and "Bamboo Bungalow." Miss Rosie Bartlett plays the Princess Zoe in sweet and winsome fashion, winning great applause for her rendering of "Barbadoes." Mr. Edwin Adeler, by his representation of Ali Baba, proves himself to be a finished comedian of no mean order. He has a neat and quiet style of his own which is very effective. In conducting the comical quintette about Little Willie's Whiskers he displays humour of a clever and unusual brand. He works throughout with unwearying effort, which brings about the happiest results. His "Nightmare" song, with chorus, was received with great applause. Cogia is admirably portrayed by Mr. Frank Gee. He is funny without being vulgar, and particularly happy in his selection of songs. Cassim is well represented by Mr. Geo. Villiers-Arnold, who displays dramatic talent of a high quality in the cave scene already referred to. He sings the Drinking Song from "Martha" with considerable effect. The rôles of Hassarac and Cassarac are played respectively by Mr. Arthur Ricketts and Little Dando, a quaintly humorous pair, who might aptly be described as the long and the short of it. Their scenes are quite one of the features of the pantomime, and full of fun and merriment; Mr. Dando particularly scores with his song and dance about "The Ladies." Mr. Chas. H. Ross is well placed as Mustapha, his efforts to amuse being much appreciated. High commendation must be bestowed upon Mr. Frank Francis for his representation of a very comical and intelligent donkey. Minor parts were well handled by Miss Clara Edwardes, as Gertie, a village belle, and Miss Lucia Edwardes, as Moonshine. These ladies contributed two or three special items to the programme which were much appreciated, amongst them being a song with drum chorus and "The Starlight Queen," with dance, which was received with much acclamation; Mr. H. E. Evans, as Zambuk; Mr. G. A. Holmes, as Pierri; Mr. W. H. Bull, as Alikar; Mr. T. Hammond, as Malikar; Mr. G. H. Baker, as Caliban; and Mr. W. Crouch, as Maliban, were all highly satisfactory.

The Three Delaries contribute an excellent gymnastic performance of great cleverness and merit in a special scene. Miss Maude May Murray deserves praise for her illuminated serpentine dance, and the Sheppards, with their Spider and Fly song and dance, were well received. The vocal efforts of the London Comedy Quartette were loudly applauded. Their contributions were of the highest class and excellently rendered. The harlequinade has received special attention, the Sheppards, Mr. Frank Francis, Mr. Chas. H. Ross, and Mr. Len Loan taking parts therein. The pantomime is produced by Mr. Lloyd Tounrow, who has had no light task, and from which he has emerged with the highest credit.

Mr. Stephen E. Blythe is responsible for the music, and he must be congratulated on his excellent original work therein, especially a capital march number.

Mr. Harry Lyons, assisted by Mr. E. H. Grime, still looks after the comfort of the patrons of the house, and Mr. Clarence Sounes is to be highly complimented on a pantomime which has all the component parts of a pronounced success.

"THE FORTY THIEVES" AT THE CORONET.

Pantomime, by Frank Dix, produced on Christmas Eve.

Ganem	Miss Cressie Leonard
Morgiana	Miss Beatrice Willey
Abdallah	Miss Jose Hammersley
Kogan	Miss Bijou Dreno
Zabarah	Miss Dorothy Firmin
Lily of the Waters	Miss Nellie Harcourt
Ali Baba	Mr. Harry Cole
Cassim	Mr. George W. Cockburn
Mustapha	Mr. Bert Noels
Abbas	Mr. Harry Zietz

Cogia	Mr. Johnny Schofield

Mr. Robert Arthur's third Coronet pantomime was presented on Christmas Eve with every token of success. There is a picturesque glow about the subject and its Persian setting which lends itself to elaborate and tasteful staging and interesting treatment, and Mr. Frank Dix must be congratulated on a brightly-written book and a striking and effective illustration of his theme. The good old fairy story is closely followed, and the fun of the fair is not allowed at any time to interfere with the coherence of the plot or to puzzle the student of fairy lore. Spectacular embellishments, the harmless necessary fun of the festive season, and several interpolated songs are furnished in goodly array. Many of the spectacular effects which caused such delight at Fulham two years ago are reproduced. We have the cave of the forty thieves with its vista of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice, the grand spectacular scene of the temptation and death of Cassim Baba, the courtyard of the Seraglio, a sweetly pretty "set" with distant palm-trees spreading o'er a moonlit lake, the white terrace of the Sergalio, with a statue ballet and dance of flowers, and the wedding match, which brings the pantomime to a fitting close in one blaze of splendour.

Miss Cressie Leonard as Ganem is a graceful, refined, and dainty principal boy, and her songs and dances are given in quite unexceptionable manners; her unfailing good humour, freshness, and spontaniety are irresistibly captivating, her "Zuyder Zee" song being capitally sung. Miss Beatrice Willey as Morgiana looks pretty as a picture, and is admirably suited by the Eastern robes which she dons; her duets and dances are pleasantly rendered, and her method is well suited to the style of the part. Miss Jose Hammersley as Abdallah, captain of the Forty Thieves, is a dashing and distinguished leader of the band, and cuts a very taking figure in her robber's robes. Mr. Harry Cole as Ali Baba, the presently metamorphosed woodcutter, does all that is required of him, and joins in the fun wherever necessary. Mr. Johnny Schofield, who enacts the part of Ali's wife Cogia, alias Weed o' the Desert, is well known and deservedly popular at the Coronet, where he took pride of place as the Wicked Squire in Mr. Robert Arthur's Coronet pantomime of Red Riding Hood the year before last. He makes a first-class comic female, and is indefatigable in his highly successful effort to amuse the audience; his ditty, "Let me sing," is immensely popular and repeatedly encored. The donkey, Abbas, is impersonated by Mr. Harry Zietz, who makes an ass of himself to some purpose in that he causes the audience to rock with laughter; his droll antics in the stable and both inside and outside the robbers' cave are a continual cause of merriment. Mr. George W. Cockburn repeats his successful assumption of Cassim Baba, and is highly dramatic in his scene of his subjection to the drink fiend, ending in his temptation and death in the robbers' cave. Miss Bijou Dreno as Kogan and Miss Dorothy Firmin as Zaborah are a pair of lovers, and a particularly bright, pretty, and attractive pair they are; their duet and dance, "Waltz me around, will you?" is very daintily rendered. Mr. Bert Noels as Mustapha is well in the picture as the proverb-quoting cobbler. Messrs. Dale and O'Malley as Hamdallah and Cazvini, the lieutenants of the Forty Thieves, act as first aid to the other comedians, their business being very funny and their ditties drolly delivered. A bevy of beauty is supplied in the shape of Misses Nellie Harcourt (a water-carrier), Adah Cameron, Marie Howcroft, Georgie Maby, Mary Thomson, Flo Elliot, and Grace Winter as the six little wives with the high-sounding names.

The scenery is by Stafford Hall. The music, which is eminently tuneful and appropriate in its Oriental significance, is by Mr. J. O. Shepherd, with additional numbers by Mr. Jullien H. Wilson; whilst Mr. W. Meyer ably wields the bâton in the conductor's chair.

The costumes do credit to Comelli, who designed them, and to Hugo Baruch, Elkan Brothers, and Miss Hale, who executed these designs. Naturally, W. Clarkson supplies the wigs. The properties are by Geo. Corney and W. Brydon; the mechanical effects are by G. Sinnott and W. Hollis Davis; and the electrical effects by David Marshall, C. Ballantyne, and W. M. Joncke.

Mr. Charles A. James stage-manages the show, with Mr. Henry Watson as assistant. Mme. Elise Clerc, from the Empire Theatre, is ballet mistress; the whole being produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Robert Arthur. The Royal Peri Troupe of Oriental dancers trip on the light fantastic toe in fine fashion, and the Steinway Quartette do good work.

The book of words, by the way, contains capital portraits of all the principals, of Mr. Dix, the author, and Mr. Robert Arthur, the lessee and manager.

THE ELEPHANT AND CASTLE.

On Monday, Dec. 24, the Pantomime entitled

"CINDERELLA."

Baron Seedy	Mr. Herbert Rule
Mildred Ann	Mr. Willie Scott
Jane Ermyntrude	Mr. Arthur Watts
Cinderella	Miss Alice Digby
Prince Splendid	Miss Gracie Taylor
Dandini	Miss Nora Morra
Toddles	Mr. Arthur Carlton
Count Claude	Miss Violet Vercoe
Lady Maud	Miss Maggie Edwards
Eric	Miss Jessie Salisbury
Phyllis	Miss Essex
Herald	Mr. S. Liddard
Snatch	Mr. Mount Stephen
Catch	Mr. Harry Rennior
The Fairy Godmother	Mme. Van Dalle

In deference to the festive season, this popular South London drama house again gives itself up to the fun and frolic of King Pantomime. The story chosen for illustration is Cinderella, written by Brian Daly and John M. East, who very wisely keep closely throughout to the delightful old nursery tale. The production is divided into two parts, which together contain no fewer than twelve elaborate scenes, the changing and setting of which are very smartly effected. The opening scene, the Water Mill in the Royal Forest, is very pretty and most realistic. The Kitchen of Hard-up Hall is another picturesque set, in which every attention to detail is apparent. Here Cinderella (Miss Alice Digby) and the Baron's Page (Mr. Arthur R. Carlton) give a very diverting burlesque drama, which evokes peals of merriment. Fairyland, which concludes the first part, is pre-eminent from a spectacular standpoint; a beautifully-dressed ballet, who throughout show evidence of careful training and rehearsal, magnificent electric lighting effects, creditably managed by Mr. J. H. Waters, and a gorgeous state coach drawn by four of the smallest possible ponies all help to make up this magnificent picture. A scene during which the laughter is loud and long is entitled "The Wrong Way Home (by 'Bus)." The 'bus is fixed, but the wheels revolve, the panorama goes flying past, and there is a moving track, which is traversed more or less successfully by various characters. The heroine Cinderella finds a fascinating and romantic representative in Miss Alice Digby, who dances with exquisite grace and sings delightfully with a youthful freshness quite appropriate to the character. Her felicitous rendering of "Firefly" and "My bungalow in Borneo" is much applauded. As Prince Splendid Miss Gracie Taylor sings and dances with charming abandon and refinement. It may safely be predicted that Miss Taylor will quickly be a great attraction. Her songs, "In Far Siam" and "When there isn't a girl about," prove to be very popular, whilst "Zuyder Zee" is one of the greatest successes of the evening. Nothing but praise can be accorded Miss Nora Morra, who fills the rôle of Dandini; she fully realises the pert, saucy retainer, and by her vivacious singing contributes much to the success of the piece. Her songs, "Peggy Machree" and "Rosie is waiting," are much to the taste of the audience, who join lustily in the refrain of each. Mr. Herbert Rule invests the character of Baron Seedy with much merriment, and contributes many good songs to the performance, his greatest success being undoubtedly "Songs with a Chorus." Mr. Arthur R. Carlton, already well known here, is never-tiring in his successful efforts to amuse as Toddles, the Baron's page. As the two ugly daughters, Messrs. Arthur Watts and Willie Scott, one very tall and the other short, make a splendid pair of quarrelsome sisters, and without a trace of vulgarity keep the fun going merrily whenever they are on the stage. Mr. Scott makes a great hit with a topical song dealing with "Suffragettes." Boisterous fun and grotesque humour are amply supplied by Messrs. Mount Stephen and Harry Rennior as two broker's men; they are responsible for some of the heartiest laughter, their dialogue is excruciatingly funny, and their perverted proverbs provoke much mirth. The fine voice and presence of Mme. Van Dalle lend distinction to the part of the Fairy Godmother; Mr. S. Liddard declaims well and distinctly as the Herald; Miss Violet Varcoe and Miss Jessie Salisbury make handsome and attractive courtiers; whilst Miss Maggie Edwards and Miss Essex are indeed a pretty pair as ladies of the Court. The Aroza Belles during the evening give pleasing turns in varied clever styles of dancing. One of the most noticeable features of the pantomime is the excellent chorus, quite on a par with that of a first-class comic opera company. The mounting, effects, and costumes are on a lavish scale. The lyrics by Brian Daly are written in admirable taste; whilst the music composed and arranged by Mr. J. Nurnberger is both melodious and tuneful, and the augmented orchestra under his efficient bâton do extremely well. Mr. Charles A. East must be heartily congratulated on his splendid production, the performance going with a swing and smoothness seldom attained on a first night, giving evidence of the value of having the supervision of so experienced a manager as Mr. East. He has the aid of Mr. Edward Godfrey as assistant-stage-manager. Mr. R. A. Neville is an ever-pleasant, courteous, and business-like acting-manager.

Every Christmas Mr. Clarence Sounes sets himself resolutely to an increasingly difficult task, that of beating his previous achievements in the way of pantomime production, and it must be admitted that, so far, he has each year been successful—at any rate, the present pantomime, produced on Boxing Day, is fully up to, if it does not actually surpass, the high standard already set at this theatre. The actual production was in the able hands of Mr. Arthur Linforth, under the general supervision of Mr. Sounes, and a lavish outlay of time, trouble, and expense has resulted in a production which, in point of scenery, dresses, and performers, is a memorable one, and subsequent audiences will doubtless for some time to come heartily endorse the verdict of Wednesday's crowded and enthusiastic house. The subject chosen for presentation is the story of The Babes in the Wood, the book being by Mr. St. John Hammond, who has eschewed the time-honoured rhymed couplet for ordinary modern and concise prose, while additional lyrics are supplied by Messrs. J. McLaren and C. W. Anson, and the music, which is beautifully orchestrated, is from the pen of Mr. Ernée Woodville. The story readily lends itself to scenic illustration, a fact of which full advantage has been taken.

An excellent representative of Robin Hood has been found in Miss Mary Ambrose, whose commanding presence and fine figure admirably fit her for the rôle of principal boy, while her good resonant voice is heard to full effect in several songs which will doubtless soon become favourites. Decided hits were "Sweet dreams of my home-land," in which Miss Ambrose accompanied herself on the violin, and "Wake up, John Bull!" Miss Lily Maxwell makes a fascinating Maid Marian, looking so pretty that it is small wonder that Robin Hood would go through fire and water for her, and acting and dancing with a demure archness that is taking in the extreme. Her song and dance, "The Cigarette Girl," and her rendering of "Sailing in my balloon" were notable successes. A dashing rendering of Will Scarlett comes from Miss Violet Worth, who plays with charming assurance, and whose song, "Cupid," was well received; while a duet, "I love you all the time," with Marjory, is another much-appreciated item. The last-named character is played with good taste by Miss Nellie D'Alvo, who sings and dances nicely, and makes a hit with a lullaby song in the second act. The comedy element is particularly strong, and first and foremost in this connection must be mentioned the Brothers Harrison. This indefatigable pair seem to have a positive genius for the invention and carrying through of laughable business, and, whether they were making a tremendous din as a couple of timid burglars, or were engaged in a burlesque duel, or, again, were running a sideshow at a country fair, the audience were kept in convulsions of laughter the whole time. Their songs, "Studying for the Bar" (accompanied by a wonderfully clever dance) and "On the Links," secured perhaps the heartiest encores of the evening. As Baron Verdigris, Mr. Charles W. Anson proves himself a comedian of no mean order, his eccentric make-up and mannerisms as the Babes' "dear uncle" and his particularly funny business in the bedroom scene being notably successful, while his comic version of "What a happy land is England!" was well received. Mr. Fred Lincoln makes a capital Dame, and puts plenty of clean, wholesome fun into his representation; his make-up is excellent, and he gives his various songs and tales with much spirit. His best song was, perhaps, "Good-bye, my lady-love," while the humour of a cross-purposes speech in which he consistently speaks of a ship while one of the other characters thinks he is referring to a girl is admirably maintained. As Winston, Mr. Frank Lawton is provided with a part which, of itself, does not give him much scope, but which he makes extremely acceptable by his clever whistling and performance on the "bones." His imitation on the latter of a train (a South-Eastern one, of course) is very realistic, and was enthusiastically re-demanded. Mr. Jack Hughes makes the most of Friar Tuck, and sings the Bandolero song with good effect; Mr. John Sandbrook does as well as possible as the Demon, though he has few opportunities for the exercise of his powerful voice; and Miss Daisy Webb, as the Fairy, speaks her lines with distinction. Last but not least must be mentioned the excellent Babes of Miss Maisie Richardson and Miss Zeta Russell. Little Miss Russell is, indeed, by way of being an infant prodigy, for not only does she act naturally and sing nicely and clearly, but she proves herself an accomplished performer in the difficult art of toe-dancing. The pantomime is followed by a harlequinade, which will doubtless develop into a great attraction for the children, though time did not allow of its full performance on Wednesday. The comfort of the audience was, as usual, ably looked after by Mr. Jack Gladwin, Mr. Sounes's popular acting-manager. A word of praise must be given to the excellent work of the orchestra, under the bâton of Mr. J. Klee.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Wednesday, Dec. 26, the pantomime, entitled

"BLUE BEARD."

Blue Beard	Mr. Edwin Brett
Sister Ann	Mr. Sydney Young
Mustapha	Mr. Harold Carson
Selim	Miss Nell Richardson
Shacabac	Mr. Wilson Blake
Esaw	Mr. F. Frost
Lieut. Pursey Pride	Miss Nellie James
Midshipman Myte	Miss Dorothy Green
A Mysterious Visitor	Mr. Harold Clemence
Fatima	Miss Nellie Groves
Wilhelmina	Miss Edna Seaton
Miss Silvery Thames	Miss Dorothy James

Kingstonians had a surprise rushed on them on Boxing Night. They had come to understand—at least they imagined they had—Mr. Peter Davey's level of a pantomime, for had they not followed his progress during nine successive years. But they had made a mistake, and readily they acknowledged it at the close of the performance of Blue Beard on Wednesday evening. In his latest and tenth "annual" Mr. Davey has struck a higher mark than formerly, and that is saying a great deal. A better-dressed pantomime has not been seen on the boards at the Royal County Theatre; and here comes in the benefit of the co-partnership at Kingston which has helped Mr. Davey in most of his enterprises. We refer to Mrs. Davey, than whom none has worked harder towards the picturesque setting of the show by her colour schemes of dressing. A young Surbiton man, Mr. Hugh Mytton, wrote the libretto and lyrics, and his local knowledge gave him excellent scope. While he took liberties with the story, liberties were also taken with his "book" by Blue Beard (Mr. Edwin Brett), who, along with Mr. Sydney Young (Sister Ann) and Mr. Harold Carson (Mustapha) did not fail to introduce some excellent stage business and gags. And "what excitement!" Mr. Edwin Brett was the life and soul of the piece. He was very happy in his song "When there's a girl about you"; but undoubtedly the ditty that will take some beating is his parody on the "first lines" of well-known songs. He also made a hit as Sheeny after being deposed from power. Sister Ann is the sister to everybody, and the talk of the town. She sings a good song, and leads the "Suffragettes" to gaol; and not only plays Romeo to Blue Beard's Juliet, but ultimately runs off with him on a motor-car. Harold Carson's is a familiar voice, and stands well in honours; and Mr. Wilson Blake gives undoubted pleasure with his fooling as Shacabac, the private secretary to Blue Beard, in love with the little Dutch maid, Wilhelmina. Miss Nell Richardson makes a fine Selim. She is tall and graceful, and possesses a sweet voice, which she uses well, singing easily and clearly. She won her audience with "Hello, hello! a different girl again." She distinctly scored with her duet "For You" with the imprisoned Fatima; and this number should prove one of the best items. The tableau at the conclusion of the first part is a very effective scene, in which Miss Richardson sings "Snowflakes." The masterpiece of conception, however, is the scene The Fête of Roses, which opens in the pale moonlight, with Selim on the crescent of the moon, warbling advice to lovers when they spoon. Her partner Fatima (Miss Nellie Groves) brings a sweetness of smiles to her part that will win her a place in the hearts of Kingstonians. She has already won the first-nighters with "Wouldn't you like to love me?" and her way of asking it and her "Sunshine" under the canopy of roses and coloured electric lights. The brightest spark of a lively evening's enjoyment was the little Dutch girl of Miss Edna Seaton, who comes all the way from Australia and makes her first appearance in pantomime. She is not new to the boards, however, and her sprightly songs and dances and pretty naughty ways made her a first favourite. Miss Dorothy James (as Miss Silvery Thames) leads on her Six Gibson Girls. They fall to the wiles of Blue Beard and go searching in the East for a husband; and being imprisoned have, of course, to be rescued by six jolly tars of the "Merrie England," who are gallantly led by Lieut. Pursey Pride (Miss Nellie James), an old favourite, and one whose skill is seen in the dances, which have been arranged by her. Some special dances are given by Miss Dorothy Green as little Midshipman Myte; her prettiest efforts being Pas du Moulin Rouge and Pas Pirouette. The scenery, which is a fine feature, is the work of Julian Hicks and George Miller. All the music has been selected and arranged by Mr. J. H. Russell, the popular bâton. The whole is stage-managed by Mr. H. B. Cook, who deserves a word of praise for the smoothness of the opening run.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Squire and Lady Bancroft were among the first subscribers to the Irving Memorial Fund, giving a donation of fifty guineas. On the 19th inst. Sir Squire journeyed to Yeovil, to fill the place rendered vacant by his late friend, by giving a recital of Dickens's "Christmas Carol" at the local assembly rooms, in aid of the district hospital. Shortly before his death Sir Henry promised to give a Shakespearean reading for that purpose, but as this unfortunately became impossible, Sir Squire Bancroft was appealed to, and he very kindly volunteered to give a recital from the works of Dickens Sir Spencer Ponsonby-Fane, who presided over a large and influential audience, in introducing his distinguished visitor, alluded to the great reputation which Sir Squire enjoyed as an actor, and spoke of the universal regret felt at his and Lady Bancroft's retirement from the stage, of which they were such brilliant ornaments.

Mr. John Hare was among the distinguished congregation at a memorial service for Mr. W. R. McConnell, K.C., the late Chairman of the County of London Sessions, held at the Temple Church on Thursday. Dr. Woods, Master of the Temple, conducted the service.

Mr. Edward Terry, who has devoted long years to useful work in municipal and social matters, has been made a Justice of the Peace for Mortlake. The esteemed proprietor of Terry's Theatre is treasurer of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, and among the offices held by him are those of guardian of the poor for the Richmond Union, a churchwarden, grand treasurer of the Freemasons, president of the Theatrical Fire Fund, trustee of Barnes charities, and member of various hospital and orphanage councils.

Mr. Arthur Conquest accomplished a remarkable feat in taking up Mr. Harry Randall's part in the Drury-lane pantomime after only forty-eight hours' notice. His method of mastering the lines is interesting and instructive. "When I was handed Mr. Randall's part," he said, "I took it home, and on the night of Christmas Eve had two hours at it before going to bed. On Christmas morning I copied it out—that is one of the best ways of memorising anything, you know—and had another hour's grind. Then I dropped it altogether, and went for a couple of hours' walk, dismissing it entirely from my mind. I came back, and ate a good Christmas dinner. In the afternoon I went into the garden, and had some exercise with the punching-ball. In the evening I gave Mrs. Sindbad another couple of hours. At half-past ten I went to bed—and that was how it was done!"

Mr. Richard Green will make an addition to the small body of Savoyards available for the present revival, Mrs. D'Oyly Carte having engaged the popular baritone to appear in some of her intended reproductions. Mr. Green was formerly with Mr. Carte at the Royal English Opera House, and afterwards played principal parts in Haddon Hall and The Vicar of Bray at the Savoy.

Miss Annie Hughes, who made such a striking success just recently at the Camden Theatre in Tommy, by Jerome K. Jerome, starts a tour with the play at Eastbourne on Jan. 17. Miss Hughes will play in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dublin, and all the big cities, and will be seen in the suburbs in the part after Easter. The accomplished actress is also playing her famous character of Nan in Good for Nothing, which precedes Tommy.

Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, writing in the Atlantic Monthly, makes the alarming revelation that the "matinée girl," hitherto thought to be restricted to America, exists in large numbers in this country. At a recent matinée given in an English city by one of our most deservedly popular stage heroes, he states it is credibly alleged that at the opening of the doors 279 ladies consecutively passed the pay-box! Then a single man entered. But he was a curate.

"I do not think," continues the eminent dramatist, "that any explanation can be offered of this incident that would flatter the dramatic taste of the town, or indeed that concerns the drama at all. I think the only explanation that can be given of these matinée phenomena is to class them with the nursemaid and the soldier in the park; except, indeed, that the nursemaid has this great advantage, or disadvantage—she does actually talk with her hero, and in many cases is made the veritable heroine of the story."

Mr. J. Hickory Wood, the author of the Drury Lane "annual," has an enlightening story to tell of a theatrical manager who shared his box at a provincial theatre where a pantomime was in progress. "He surveyed the show gloomily," says the prolific author, "and when the principal comedian entered and did his best, the manager, with a scowl on his brow, leant over to me and remarked: 'I want to engage that man for next Christmas.' 'Do you think he is funny?' I inquired. 'Screamingly funny,' he replied, frowning heavily. 'Then why don't you laugh?' I asked. 'Laugh?' said he. 'Laugh, when he's got his eyes on me, and every smile means that he'll ask another "fiver" a week?'"

A few nights prior to the Christmas holidays two well-known private constables drove to one of the Blackpool hotels and asked to see Miss Florence Baines. A page-boy, who had to transmit their request through a speaking-tube, immediately called into the mouthpiece: "Miss Florence Baines is wanted by the police." To the numerous guests assembled in the corridors and ante-rooms this statement was startling in the extreme. The band ceased playing, and quite a number of people assembled at the foot of the staircase ostensibly for the purpose of witnessing the arrest. Many were the expressions of sympathy as the well-known artist was seen descending the staircase, when the two officers handed to Miss Baines an official-looking document, which read as follows:—

"St. John Ambulance Brigade,
"Blackpool, Dec. 20.

"Dear Miss Baines,—I heard last evening that you were spending a few days in Blackpool, and I wish to take the opportunity of informing you that we are now busy in preparing for our annual distribution of clothing to the poor of Blackpool, so if you care to see what is done by the ladies of the nursing division in connection with this work, and you will name a time and date when you will call at my office, I will remain in and wait for you.—With kind regards, yours respectfully, J. C. Derham, Chief Constable."

During the reading of this letter the hotel guests took in the situation, the band played on, and not a little merriment was caused by the incident. Miss Baines, it may be added, has appeared at the matinée organised by the Chief-Constable for two successive years.

Mr. Gaston Mayer will commence his fourth French season at the New Royalty Theatre on Monday, Jan. 21. The season will open with Lavedan's comedy, Le Marquis de Priola, the chief parts in which will be played by M. Le Bargy and Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat. During the season, M. Coquelin aîné will appear in two plays new to this country, and Jeanne Granier will also be seen in a new piece, by Georges Berr, one of the foremost actors of the Comédie Française, and the author of L'Irrésolu, the French original of The Indecision of Mr. Kingsbury.

Mr. Norman V. Norman hopes to add four more plays to his already large répertoire in the spring, namely, two Shakespearean comedies and two plays of modern life.

The pit queue has formed the subject of warm debate, and the messenger boy has been discussed almost out of existence. Mr. Carl Hentschel, to whom the interests of the playgoer are ever dear, is of opinion that the practice of allowing messenger boys to reserve places in the queue is manifestly unfair. "Why," he writes, "should the humble playgoer who can only afford his 2s. 6d. or 1s., but is able to give an hour or two of his time to wait outside, be ousted by the man who can, and is well able to, pay for a higher-priced seat? After all, why should not the queue system be done away with altogether? The late Mr. D'Oyly Carte instituted the queue many years ago, when the Savoy first opened. It was not popular at first, and was well abused as being a foreign custom repugnant to the ideas of independent playgoers, who loved to scramble and struggle for their seats. But certainly it was an improvement on the old method, and as time went on the queue became universal; but it is really serious matter that the humble playgoer desirous of patronising the theatre and enjoying himself should have to risk his health and wait in discomfort under conditions which are really unbearable."

"There is only one remedy," continues Mr. Hentschel, "and that is to let all parts of the theatre be booked. Let Mrs. D'Oyly Carte be the first to set the example. The general excuse is that it may mean keeping the box-office open all day. Well, at the Savoy this is already done. Secondly, it is argued that as the pit is the best place for seeing, 2s. 6d. is too cheap, and you will have people who now patronise the upper boxes come into the pit. Well, it may perhaps be a little revolutionary to old pittites, but if the pit is worth more money, why not change the seating arrangements, and make the pit 4s. and the upper boxes 2s. 6d., although in my opinion in some of the theatres a good large pit at 2s. 6d. might prove very profitable.

"For many years past I have advocated the booking of all parts of the house. It is the only fair means of getting out of the present difficulty, and the humble patrons of the theatre ought to be put on the same footing as those who pay for the higher-priced seats. There should be one law for all. Managers should realise that a playgoer's judgment and appreciation are affected by his surroundings, and one goes to the theatre for pleasure. Under present conditions, during the winter months many are prevented from going to the theatre, for, quite apart from the bodily discomfort, they cannot afford to risk their health by waiting; and, secondly, their means will not permit them to patronise the higher-priced seats."

Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, on the other hand, has reason for the conviction that playgoers are not desirous of a general booking of seats. "During the many years I have been in management," she said to an interviewer, "I have had hundreds of letters from theatre-goers—I am always glad to hear from them and to carefully consider any suggestions they may have to make—but I do not remember that I have received a single letter containing the suggestion that they should be allowed to book the pit seats. And you may take it from me that the pittites who patronise the Savoy know what they want, and if they had wanted to book their seats in the pit we should have heard of it long ago. And you may also take it from me that we value the support of our pit patrons to such an extent that we should very carefully consider any suggestion from them, and endeavour to meet their wishes, if it were possible."

Miss Mabel Love starts at the Coronet on Feb. 4, for a special tour of the suburban theatres, in The Freedom of Suzanne, under the above management. Miss Love has made a very great personal success in the title-rôle, one of the most trying and difficult parts of any piece now touring.

The benefit of Mr. Wm. Peacock, the managing-director of the Harrogate Grand Opera House, was a record as regards numbers, the theatre being packed in all parts. The Burnells and Miss Carrie Moore were prevented from appearing by regrettable illness. Mr. Fred Allandale started with "All the girls," for which he received a well-deserved encore; Miss Lilian Payne sang "Kathleen Mavourneen" excellently; Mrs. Wm. Peacock had a tremendous ovation when she appeared to recite "The Charge of the Light Brigade"; Mr. Albert le Fre's turn of dancing was a great success; and Miss Florence Smithson accompanied herself at the piano in two songs. Mr. Neil Kenyon proved himself to be inimitable, and his turn was productive of screams of laughter.

A violin solo was played by Miss Marie Peacock, who also sang delightfully, and Miss Violet Lloyd and Mr. E. Statham Staples were seen to great advantage in the "mad" duet from The Dairymaids. The sketch, Becky Bounder, went with a scream from start to finish. Miss Ada Blanche, as the irrepressible Becky, was excellent, and had good support from Miss Edith Blanche as Emily Tompkins, while the two men parts were played by Mr. J. T. Hollins and Mr. Douglas Blair. Miss Emily Breare was heard to advantage in "La Serenata"; the Harrogate Quintette, trained by Mr. Frank Staveley, proved very capable dancers; Mr. Witty Watty Walton did his polyglot song, which went well; Mr. C. L. Naylor, Mus. Bac., leader of the Harrogate Kursaal, conducted the overture, Poet and Peasant, and had a most hearty reception. In the interval Mr. Peacock spoke a few words of thanks, and had the reception of the evening. Mr. Harry Marshall's company of amateurs finished the bill with the third act of The Second in Command

A score or so of children obtained licences for theatrical performances at Marlborough-street on Monday. In one case Mr. Oscar Barrett asked for a permit for five girls to take part in The Beauty of Bath, transferred from the Aldwych to the new Hicks Theatre, Shaftesbury-avenue, on Thursday. In the second instance a solicitor applied, on behalf of Mr. Austin Fryers, manager of Hengler's Circus, for licences for nineteen children to perform in Red Riding Hood.

At the same Court on Thursday application was made, on behalf of Mr. Beerbohm Tree, for licenses to permit a boy and girl to take part in Antony and Cleopatra, produced at His Majesty's Theatre. Sub-divisional Inspector Smith offered no objection on behalf of the police, and the licenses were granted.

The very successful matinées at the Criterion Theatre last week in aid of the funds to be raised by a fête to be given next June in aid of the Belgrave Hospital for children, have been followed by a meeting of the organising committee which took place at Kensington Palace on the 18th inst. H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg presided, and it was decided to summon a meeting of the general committee early in the New Year.

Mr. Hugh Fleming, who for the past three weeks has been lying dangerously ill with pneumonia at a Buxton hydro, has, his numerous friends will be pleased to hear, sufficiently recovered to enter upon his duties this week in Manchester as advance director for Baron Harris's principal Prince of Pilsen company.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Cecil have returned from South Africa after a successful ten months' engagement with Mr. Leonard Rayne, having visited all the largest and most important towns. Miss Elgin made a great success out there as the vivandière, Cigarette, in Under Two Flags, a part she played in England for over a year with Mr. Mark Blow

Miss Lily Hall Caine, who has already acquitted herself so well in Drury-lane drama, will be the Greba of Mr. Hall Caine's play The Bondman, which is to be revived at the Adelphi Theatre on Saturday. The cast of The Bondman will otherwise be practically the same as at Drury-lane. Mr. Frank Cooper has been specially re-engaged for the part of Jason. The character of Michael Sunlocks will be played by Mr. Walter Hampden, and Mr. Henry Neville, Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Oscar Adye, and Mr. Austin Melford will play their original parts. Miss Marie Illington will again appear as Mrs. Fairbrother, with Miss Florence Wood, Miss Grace Edwin, Miss Rhoda Ray, and Miss Eily Malyon in the other ladies' parts.

Miss Stella Gastelle, after many thousand performances in La Poupée in London and the provinces, is taking a "busman's holiday" by appearing in pantomime. She appeared on Boxing Day at the Borough Theatre, Stratford, in Robinson Crusoe.

Royal Academy of Music competitions have resulted as follows:—The Potter Exhibition (pianoforte playing), Christian Carpenter (of London), the examiners being Messrs. Thomas B. Knott, Herbert Lake, and Septimus Webbe (chairman); the Hine Prize (for Composition), Olive M. Turner (of New Barnet), the examiners being Miss Ethel M. Boyce and Messrs. E. H. Thorne and F. Cunningham Woods; and the Broughton Packer Scholarships, violin, to Evan Williams (of Llanelly), and violoncello, to Harry Wm. Lodge (of Clapham), the examiners being Messrs. Josef Bláha, Herbert Walenn, and Hans Wessely (chairman).

Baron Harris's Prince of Pilsen company terminated its brilliantly successful autumn tour on Saturday week at Derby, amid a scene of enthusiasm rarely, if ever, witnessed in that Midland town. The house was filled at early doors, many being turned away, and during the performance bouquets and bonbons were literally showered upon Miss Sophie Harriss, the prima donna of the company, who was the recipient of an ovation at the fall of the curtain. The company embarks upon its next tour at Manchester, where it forms the attraction for the Christmas and the New Year holidays.

We record with regret the death of Mr. Olly Deering, an old and popular Australian actor, who passed away suddenly on Nov. 16 at the Commercial Hotel, Sydney. The veteran performer was well and cheerful at the Criterion Theatre the night before, chatting with Messrs. Meynell and Gunn, in whose Fatal Wedding company he was acting. The funeral took place at Waverley, the coffin-plate giving the age as sixty. The deceased's widow is professionally known as Miss Linda Raymond.

The competition originated by Miss Marjorie Slaughter, daughter of the well-known composer, for the best pianoforte performance of her intermezzo, "Betty," in connection with Mr. Seymour Hick's production of Alice in Wonderland will take place at the Prince of Wales's Theatre at noon on Tuesday, Jan. 8. A great number of musical students in London and the country have sent in their names, and Mr. Walter Slaughter will be glad to receive the names of other intending competitors at the earliest moment.

The report of the Organising Committee of Actors' Day will be presented at a meeting at the St. James's Theatre on Thursday, Jan. 10, at 3 p.m. The appointment of the Advisory Board will also be submitted for confirmation.

An awkward incident occured at the Royalty, Glasgow, on Monday. In consequence of the non-arrival of the dresses and "props." belonging to The Catch of the Season company, which was due to commence a month's run, the theatre had to remain closed, and the initial performance was given on Tuesday. A Glasgow daily paper humorously recorded the affair as "The Hitch of the Season." It is twenty-five years since a similar occurence took place in Glasgow, the last occasion being when A New Magdalen was snowed up on a journey from Aberdeen, necessitating the Royal Princess's being closed on a Monday evening.

Famous songs from the Savoy opera, rendered by their original singers, will be an interesting feature of the celebration dinner to be given by the O.P. Club at the Hotel Cecil to-morrow. Miss Isabel Jay will sing "The Moon and I"; "Brightly dawns our wedding day" will be rendered by Miss Agnes Fraser, Miss Jessie Rose, Mr. Scott Russell, and Mr. Richard Temple; Mr. Courtice Pounds will be heard in "A pair of sparkling eyes," and Miss Lilian Coomber, Mr. Henry Lytton, Mr. Robert Evett, Mr. C. H. Workman, and Mr. Walter Passmore will also repeat selections from their old sucesses. A specially illustrated menu is being prepared by Mr. Carl Hentschel as a memento of the occasion.

Mr. Arthur Rodney, who has been unwell for the last fortnight, is now, we learn, quite recovered, and anxious to resume business.—Miss Queenie Fraser-Brunner, who recently created and made such a success in the title-rôle in Servais Le Roy's mystical play Lady Kinton's Necklace, has been engaged to play the heroine and do a specially-arranged pas seul in Her Last Dance, by Roland Oliver, at the Chelsea Palace during the week beginning Jan. 7.

A comedietta and recital will be given by the students of the London Dramatic Academy and School of Elocution at the Victoria Hall, Bayswater, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 29. In addition to a programme contributed by her students, Miss Nora Hastings, the principal of the Academy, will appear during the evening by general request.

Messrs. Shubert Bros., of New York, who hold a long lease of the Waldorf Theatre, have made arrangements by which London artists who wish to appear in the West End in new plays will be able to do so at the Waldorf in precisely the same way as they are now able to do in provincial houses. In other words, the Waldorf Theatre will play high class companies on the travelling sharing plan, giving them hospitality for a week, a fortnight, or for just as long or short a period as the attraction warrants. This new idea robs the West End production of all the attendant disadvantages of large financial arrangements for advance rent, dead rent, and other expenses, and should help materially towards the creation of new dramatic material. The arrangements under this new departure are exclusively in the hands of Mr. Edward Michael, of 15, Craven-street, Strand.

Mr. T. W. Rawson, we are glad to learn, has now recovered from the effects of the serious accident he met with at Morecambe in June last, and after his six months' sojourn in the Lancashire seaside resort has come up to town.

Mr. Lawrence Leyton, who has been playing Mr. Aubrey Smith's part in The Fascinating Mr. Vanderveldt, concludes to-night a special engagement with Mr. Charles Steuart's The Little Stranger company.

On the afternoon of Christmas Day a treat was given at the Queen's Theatre, Fleetwood, for the local children about one thousand free tickets being distributed. Mr. and Mrs. Snelson gave each child a present of oranges and sweets, and a much-appreciated performance was also provided by the various artists

Miss Emma and Mr. Percy Hutchison's companies finished their winter tours last Saturday week, at Bristol, Dundee, and Bournemouth. Their spring tours will start earlier than usual, the first commencing at Eastbourne on Monday, when Mr. Hutchison will produce Peter's Mother, with Miss Ruth Mackay in the title-rôle, supported by an exceptionally strong company. Two other companies of this play will also be sent out later in the year.

"Carmen," an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Prosper Merimée, is to be produced on Monday at the Theatre Royal, Bury St. Edmund's. The title-rôle will be played by Miss Florence Glossop-Harris, and Mr. Frank Cellier, jun., will be the Don Jose. Other parts will be entrusted to Messrs. Duncan Yarrow, Edward Landor, A. Cotton Holmes, A. Wilson-Wynne, Stanley Roberts, Percy H. Vernon, Basil Dean, Walter Carr, Edwin Beverley, Herbert Halford, Frank Spenser, Henry Craddock, and Master Sydney Skipp; Misses Nora Goulden, Nita Ashby, Kate Turner, May Saker, Irene Woodford, Marion Bird, and Mrs. Edward Saker. The new piece will be embellished by incidental music from Bizet's opera, arranged by Mr. R. B. Creak, of the Savoy Theatre.

Mr. Henry Taylor celebrated on Thursday the twenty-fifth year of his management of the Lyceum Theatre, Crewe. The special performance, which was under the patronage of the Mayor and Mayoress (Alderman and Mrs. Hoptroff), consisted of a sketch by members of Messrs. Phelps and Tilbury's Blind Foundling company, engaged at the theatre this week, another by members of the local Dramatic and Comedy Company, and a number of excellent professional and amateur turns by Cris (ventriloquist), Mr. F. W. West (baritone), Mr. Walter Huber (tenor), Miss Mabel Hall (descriptive vocalist), Miss Ray Watson (comedienne), Mr. Robert Earle (patter vocalist), Mr. H. Phelps (elocutionist), and the popular local humorist, Mr. Will Horabin; whilst the stage-management was successfully carried out by Mr. William Ellis. At the conclusion of the entertainment Mr. and Mrs. Taylor entertained the theatre staff and a few friends on the stage, the company numbering close on a hundred.

At the rehearsal of Blue Beard at the Empire Theatre, Southend-on Sea, on Monday night, Mrs. Danby, the wife of Mr. Gus Danby, one of the principal comedians, met with a serious accident. The unfortunate lady was entering the auditorium from the stage, when she fell down the corridor steps, and it was at once seen that she was badly injured. She was promptly removed to the Victoria Hospital, where it was ascertained Mrs. Danby had fractured her skull. She now lies in a very critical condition

"Anna of the Plains," adapted by H. A. Saintsbury from the novel by Alice and Claude Askew, was copyrighted on Saturday at the Court Theatre. The new play will be toured by Mr. Saintsbury early in the new year with a carefully-selected cast and special scenery and properties. The business arrangements are in the hands of Mr. Percy J. Purdey.

Mr. J. Fred Watson, the energetic manager and licensee of the Victoria Theatre, Broughton, had a capital house on the 21st, when he took his first benefit. Mr. Allan Wilkie and his company contributed the screen scene from The School for Scandal very creditably; Mr. Edwin Garth (a Broughtonian), in Matrimonial Bliss, kept the house in laughter; and Mr. Frank Crimp, of The Prince of Pilsen company, gave a smart mimetic act. A large number of artists from other theatres in Manchester and Salford also appeared, amongst whom were Ted Saunders, in imitations of music hall artists; Maud Beaumont, with her catchy songs; Tom Sullivan, eccentric comedian; Premier Yankee Quartette of lady dancers; Pryde and Payne, sketch artists; Frank Exley and Alice Hamilton, instrumentalists and vocalists; Ernie Williams, vocal comedian; Sisters Temple, duettists and dancers; Mannatti, with coon songs; Miss Clare Wolverson (Mrs. J. Fred Watson), a charming vocalist; Mr. Bert Gibbons, humorist; Gus Hindell, comedian; and Miss Renee Graham, male impersonator.

Miss Winifred Pearson, who has just concluded her third engagement with Mr. C. W. Somerset, has been engaged by Miss Annie Hughes for Mr. Robinson in her forthcoming tour of Tommy.

Mr. George Unwin has just returned from Paris and the Riviera, where he has been attending to the business arrangements for Mr. Edgar Vaughan Grey, who is giving a series of his afternoons of Recitation and Recitative. Mr. Grey's success is assured, for the entire house is sold out for his first recital at Nice in January. Mr. Unwin expects to return to the South of France shortly, in connection with an English scheme there, which is now under consideration.

Two new plays will be produced at a series of Tuesday and Friday matinées at the Court Theatre, beginning on Jan. 8. The first will be a "very light comedy," in three acts, by Cyril Harcourt, entitled The Reformer, the parts in which are allotted to Messrs. Allan Aynesworth, Sydney Brough, O. B. Clarence, John L. Mackay, Hubert Harben, Edmund Gwenn, and Allan Wade, and Miss Eva Moore and Miss June Van Buskird. The second novelty is The Camden Wonder, a play in three scenes, by John Masefield, with Miss Dolores Drummond, Mr. Edmund Gurney, Miss Carlotta Addison, Mr. Norman McKinnel, Mr. H. R. Hignett, and Mr. Norman Page in the cast.

During the indisposition of Miss Beatrice Homer this week, the part of the Ugliest Woman on Earth was played by Miss Nell Oliver at the Theatre Royal, Cardiff.

It is agreeable to note that Miss Millie Lingard was sufficiently recovered from her indisposition to be able to appear at the first performance of the pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham.

"Schneewittchen und die Siebenzwerge" provided an acceptable Christmas piece at the Scala for the German community in London, who took full advantage of the opportunity afforded on Boxing Day of witnessing an excellent performance under the direction of Herr Hans Andresen. The tale of "Snowwhite and the Seven Dwarfs" is familiar through the medium of English story-books, and the adaptation prepared by A. Görner is skilfully done. The play was admirably enacted by the German company, Herr Andresen himself taking the part of the wicked Queen's Minister and playing with much humour.

"Mr. Bernard Shaw," says the Daily Chronicle, "is indulgent to the amateur actor. Certain enthusiasts in a South London suburb were recently contemplating a performance of You Never Can Tell, and applied to the author of the play for permission to give it. This was G. B. S.'s answer:—'Dear Sir,—Amateurs cannot perform my plays. Professionals cannot unless I am there to help them. By all means do it if you want to, and God help the audience!'"

Amongst the subscribers to Owen Hall, Ltd., which has gone to allotment, are Mr. S. B. Joel, Lord Weardale, Colonel Sir Theodore Brinckmann, C.B., Mr. George Edwardes, and Mr. Ascherberg. Another £1000 is needed in order that the company may be able to open the Waldorf Theatre at the end of March with King Silly, the book of which is by Mr. Hall, the lyrics by Mr. Adrian Ross, and the music by Marie Horne.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree, in mounting Antony and Cleopatra at His Majesty's, was in the happy position of having a "clean slate" as far as artistic splendour was concerned. Neither the revival of the play at Drury Lane in 1873, with Mr. James Anderson and Miss Wallis in the principal parts, nor Phelps's production at Sadler's Wells in 1850, could be compared in beauty and accuracy with the present prodigious achievement. Curiously enough, there has never hitherto been a revival of Antony and Cleopatra the acting of which could be termed satisfactory. When the Cleopatra was good, the Antony was bad; and sometimes both were inadequate. Macready admitted that he could not grasp the character of Antony, and his Cleopatra, Miss Phillips, was insignificant. Miss Glyn was, perhaps, the best of the Shakespearian Cleopatras; but Phelps failed from natural causes to "realise" Antony. Of the Cleopatras who have appeared in plays founded on the theme, the most unsympathetic was apparently Mrs. Siddons; and the most sinuous and passionate Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who represented the Egyptian Queen in MM. Sardou and Moreau's Cléopatre at the Porte St. Martin in 1890.

"There are many reasons," says Mrs. T. P. O'Connor, in an article in the Daily Mail, "why English companies in English plays can no longer look to America for a rich harvest of dollars. America is rapidly finding herself; she has discovered her own value, her own individuality, and her own independence, even in the subject of plays. The fashionable and the cultivated set, who wish to be au courant with every movement abroad, no doubt still go to see English plays, and profess to admire and to understand them, but deep down in their heart of hearts they prefer an American atmosphere, which, in spite of the same language, is quite different from England; they are as widely asunder as the two poles.

"One of the most prominent managers in America, who has successfully fought the theatrical combines said to me, 'It isn't necessary for us to have one English play in this country. When you realise that if an American play is successful it takes five years to exploit it, with companies travelling from Maine to Florida, and from California to the East, you can fancy that an American success is worth working for.' There are plays in America that have had a twenty years' run. The Old Homestead has run in America for twenty-five years, and Shore Acres has had a success of similar duration."

Recalling the submarine scene in Mr. Cecil Raleigh's White Heather at Drury Lane, a writer in the Daily Mirror reminds us of some strange things which happened while it was in process of preparation. At one of the many rehearsals Mr. Arthur Collins asked the author to give his opinion of the submarine effects. He was to go in front, and to watch every detail closely, but not to say a word until the scene was over. Mr. Raleigh took his seat in the stalls, and was then surprised to see that, by some mistake in the lighting, the fish that were supposed to be frisking about in the depths of the green water appeared really to be flying in the air above it. But he said nothing. At last, when the curtain came down, Mr. Collins's voice was heard from the stage: "Well, what do you think of our scene?" And Mr. Raleigh answered, "The scene is splendid, but the fish are high."

At the same rehearsal another incident occurred. One of the sea scenes showed a little boat, with a man in it, who was supposed to be feeding the pipe that supplied the diver below with air. As the diver sank, the boat was slowly raised, so that you had the illusion that you were descending into the sea. In reality, the boat was drawn up high above the scene, out of sight of the audience. This mechanism was at length got into satisfactory order late one night. Mr. Collins accordingly dismissed the rehearsal, and everybody went home—everybody except the unfortunate actor who played the man in the boat. He sat in mid-air for many hours, quite alone, out of sight and out of hearing, under the impression that the rehearsal was still going on far below. At last one of the watchmen, going his rounds at about four in the morning, heard a plaintive voice praying from above, "Please, may I come down now?"

These trivialities of stage-management are often very amusing. In the old days at the Adelphi Theatre it was customary to pull the wooden bâton attached to the stage carpet down to the footlights by means of two lines of sash-cord, which ran through two box-eye holes in front of the stage, and, on being pulled from underneath, brought the carpet down to the extreme front. On one occasion, however, one of these lines had become broken, and a green-coated wing man was sent on in front of the act drop to put the remnant of the cord through the hole. Of course, the musical-director would not play any entr'acte selection while this was going on, and the orchestra remained idle; but one of the violinists found some mischief still for his idle hands to do, and no sooner did the greencoat man try to push the cord through the hole than this waggish violinist, from under the stage, just inside the door of entry, put his second finger in the bottom of the hole, and prevented the cord passing through it.

In vain did the unfortunate greencoat, kneeling and perspiring through anxiety and the heat of the footlights, try and try again to effect a passage for the cord. In vain did the stage-manager on one side of the act drop, and the master-carpenter on the other, exhaust their communitive vocabulary; all was in vain. As to the orchestra and the occupants of the circle and gallery, who could see the joke and its cause, they were in fits of laughter. Then came the usual chaff from the gallery-boy fiend: "Twist it agin, ole chap!" "Spit on the hend!" "Try it agin; keep yer 'eart up," &c. At last, driven to desperation by heat, anxiety, and chaff, the poor greencoat, thinking that the hole was stopped up with dust, drew a penknife from his pocket, opened a small sharp blade, and jabbed it quickly into the obstruction; the yell of anguish emanating from the unfortunate violinist was drowned by the satirical applause of the audience. The pizzicato passages of the poor musician were for many weeks conspicuous by their absence.

Some of those who witnessed at the rehearsal of Antony and Cleopatra at His Majesty's Theatre on Boxing afternoon the experiments with the lighting of the Sphinx may have remembered the following incident:—Dion Boucicault, nicknamed playfully by John Hollingshead "Dionysius the Tyrant," was wonderfully gifted—an author, actor, stage manager, and a man of vast commercial aptitude; but he was a stern martinet in business, and brooked no "back answers." When The Colleen Bawn was in process of production at the Adelphi, he left word overnight that the Cave Scene should be ready set for his inspection the next morning. Entering the theatre by the front, he saw a ray of light playing on the gauze waters; and ruining the effectiveness of the "set." "Put out that limelight!" he roared in stentorian tones to the gasman, who replied, "It's the——" "Put it out, I tell you!" "If you please, sir, it's the——" "Silence!" roared the angry manager. "Put it out, I tell you!" "I can't, sir. It's a sunbeam from the skylight!" "Oh, is it? Very well, then; let it alone."

One of the most wonderful things about Shakespeare is the way in which he, with the instinctive insight of genius, seizes the pith and essence of an historical period. He often goes quite behind his "authorities" by virtue of the divine right of imagination, and grasps the essentials which they were too close to the events they recorded to perceive. Antony and Cleopatra is practically a continuation of Julius Cæsar. The "conquering hero" is Octavius. Shakespeare shows us the precocious pupil of the late Julius already opposing Mark Antony at Philippi, and what is more, getting his own way; and he hits off Octavius's cold-blooded reserve as opposed to Antony's generous appreciation in the remarks of the two men over Brutus's body. From the moment that the adopted son of Julius Cæsar comes back from Apollonia Antony's fate is sealed. He will have to go the way of Pompey and Lepidus in order to make room for the coming Augustus. Octavius's virtuous indignation at Antony's "wassails," and his ingenious idea of an alliance, the results of which will serve him, eventually, as an excuse for "suppressing" Antony, are so thoroughly well done that they have deceived commentators as they did courtiers. Later criticism has been more intelligent.

But the "love-interest" is the predominant interest in Antony and Cleopatra; and the historic purport of the play sinks into secondariness compared with the immortal amours of Antony and the Egyptian queen. Here Shakespeare had only a few phrases of Plutarch and his general knowledge of a certain kind of womanhood to "go on," and marvellously did he utilise his experience of the type. His Cleopatra is unique.

In a play of this kind accessories are invaluable in creating an atmosphere. The sense of proud pomp and exuberant luxury is admirably supplied by the superb production which Mr. Beerbohm Tree gives us at His Majesty's. And it is not only elaborate. It is accurate, judicious, and artistic. It is impossible to describe in detail this prodigious exploit of scenery and stage-management. What will appeal to everyone is the poetry of many of Mr. Tree's embellishments. The idea of the Sphinx grimly watching the careers of Antony and Cleopatra as she has watched the up-risings and down-fallings of countless generations is awe-inspiring. Another poetical touch may be noted. At the conclusion of the banquet which celebrates the delusive amity of the world-sharers, after the guests have gone over the side into the boat, a servant passes round and extinguishes the lamps. There is a muttered growl of thunder in the distance; then all is dark, and the curtains fall. Such details as these come within the compass of possible description. But can one give the expectant reader any idea of the classic splendour that pervades the piece? We pass from Cleopatra's palace, with its winged attendants, its decorations of strange and quaint formality, and its exuberance of colour and cloth of gold, to the severer beauties of a Roman mansion, with its stately marble columns and its solemn corridors. Here the gold is on the men's armour, on the suits of ceremony which they wear at their momentous meetings. As for Mr. T. E. Ryan's tableau, "The Return of Antony to Alexandria," in the third act, it simply "beggars description," and Mr. Joseph Harker deserves the warmest praise for the way in which he has painted most of the scenery. It is an achievement of which Mr. Harker may well be proud. Mr. Percy Macquoid's designs for the scenery and properties have been done with care and knowledge; Mr. Raymond Roze's fine compositions are a valuable adjunct to the effect of the whole; and Mr. Carlo Coppi's arrangement of the dance in the second act is very effective. Messrs. B. J. Simmons, of Covent Garden, have supplied the dresses with marvellous taste, skill, and completeness of workmanship. The union of all these forces has resulted in a superlatively splendid and successful production—a triumph of art, knowledge, and invention.

The part of Mark Antony is a difficult one. Garrick, Macready, and Phelps all failed in it. Garrick's chief trouble was that he was unable to "look the character." This is certainly not an obstacle to Mr. Beerbohm Tree. With his tall and commanding figure he carries the gorgeous armour and sumptuous apparel of Antony with dignified ease, and his whole bearing is large, noble, and magnanimous. His love passages with Cleopatra are full of fervour; and he uses excellent discretion in his scenes with Octavius and the other "notables." Antony's more dramatic opportunities come as the tragedy thickens and as the clouds of ill-fortune close in around the lovers. Here Mr. Tree acted with all his accustomed power and earnestness, and with touches of the most tender pathos. The poignant bitterness of Antony's self-reproach could hardly have been better expressed. Miss Constance Collier's Cleopatra was overpowering in the plenitude of its majesty, in the abandon and energy of its passion, and in the seductive eloquence of its sensuous languor. Every phase of feeling and fancy in the part was treated with marvellous completeness of accomplishment; and in the later acts Miss Collier rose to a very high pitch of grandeur and intensity. From a pictorial point of view Miss Collier was most happily chosen. In her splendid attire, and with her fine physique and features, she looked every inch an Egyptian queen. Mr. Tree was indeed fortunate in securing her as his Cleopatra. Mr. Basil Gill played Octavius Cæsar with much spirit, but rather represented him as a sincere, hot-blooded young warrior than as the precociously crafty politician who was adopted and "formed" by the great Julius. In the scene on board the galley Mr. Gill suggested tipsiness rather than the reserve and mere toleration of the revels which are indicated by history and Shakespeare's text. Mr. Gill, however, carried out his conception of the character with admirable ability, and looked the future Augustus to the life. Mr. Norman Forbes infused a novel touch of quaintness into his reading of the rôle of Lepidus, and supplied the "comic relief" in the gallery scene quite cleverly, his business with the ballet girls "at back," while Menas was making his proposals of assassination to Pompey, being very funny indeed. Mr. Julian L'Estrange was entirely satisfying as Sextus Pompeius, hitting off excellently the quick, impulsive nature of the man. As Enobarbus Mr. Lyn Harding scored very highly by the humour and emphasis of his treatment of the rôle generally, and by the unblemished excellence of his delivery of the great Cydnus speech, which Mr. Harding spoke with fine phrasing and acceptable ease and freedom. Mr. Harding's was really a memorable interpretation. A sweet and simple Octavia was Miss Maud Cressall, who did full justice to the retiring modesty of the sister of Octavius; and Miss Alice Crawford made a handsome, buoyantly effusive, and comely Charmian, the bright contrast of her gaiety in the earlier acts being as commendable as the brief expressiveness of her death scene later on. Miss Hilda Moore was an agreeable exponent of Iras; and Eros was well represented by Mr. Hugh C. Buckler, Mr. J. Fisher White, well made up, being a most grim and impressive Soothsayer. Mr. Charles Quartermaine depicted terror very graphically as the Messenger to Cleopatra; and Mr. E. Egerton Hine spoke his lines well as the Messenger from Sicyon. Mr. Herbert Grimwood gave a firm and concrete embodiment of Menas; and Mr. J. Cooke Beresford was an entirely efficient Alexas. Mr. Bruno Holmes hit off the Clown happily; and Mr. Robert Atkins did extremely well as Ventidius, Scarus and Demetrius having competent representatives in Mr. A. B. Imeson and Mr. Harry C. Hewitt. Mr. Edward Ouston was good as Mecænas, and Mr. Alfred Goddard played Agrippa creditably, Mr. A. Corney Grain and Mr. S. Yates Southgate deserving praise as Proculeius and Thyreus, and Mr. Clive Currie and Mr. C. H. Sworder supplying able impersonations of Menecrates and Varrius. Mr. James Smythe was excellent as Euphronius; and the little part of Mardian was safe in the hands of Mr. Henry Williams. It is impossible to do full justice to Mr. Tree's revival within the limits of our notice. We can only say, in general terms, that it is grandly beautiful, nobly magnificent, and superbly and astonishingly sumptuous. It is a production that must be seen.

VAUDEVILLE HARLEQUINADE.

It is a very pleasing addition that the Vaudeville management have made to The Belle of Mayfair in their harlequinade, and not less pleasing is the manner in which it is introduced. In the second act Miss Billie Burke, who as Julie Caldicott gives us such a delightful heroine, tells us that she feels, oh! so tired. She sits down in a chair and falls asleep, but before doing so expresses a romantic desire to see a harlequinade in which her sweetheart, the Hon. Raymond Finchley, shall be the Harlequin and she the Columbine. A Fairy Princess comes to her aid, and after waving her magic wand over the unconscious Julie the latter is seen to suddenly spring up, her cloak falls from her, and she is attired in the gauzy, diaphanous raiment of a dancing girl. Then the voices of the other characters in the play are heard as if in continuance of the story of The Belle of Mayfair, but immediately they appear before us they lose their former characteristics, and the hero becomes a Harlequin in all his gaudy glory, and the stern parents of Julie and Raymond become Clown and Pantaloon respectively. They indulge in all manner of antics outside and even inside the time-honoured butcher's—or, perhaps, we should say poulterer's—shop, and ludicrous scenes are enacted. Mr. Charles Angelo, who plays the part of the Comte de Perrier in The Belle of Mayfair, is extremely entertaining as the Swell, who inquires in a haughty tone of voice how he can gain admission to the Zoo, and is recommended to go as an hippopotamus. Then in Mr. Courtice Pounds there is a wily and amusing Policeman, who, unobserved by Clown and Pantaloon, is an interested spectator of the wrangling between those two worthies over the sharing out of the sausages, turkeys, and chickens they have stolen. An aspect of modernity is afforded by the entrance of four suffragettes, waving banners which contain written demands for women's rights. They will fight to the end to secure what they think they ought to get; they will go at once to the House of Lords; they will——; but with magical rapidity a blind is drawn from a shop window, a variety of beautiful hats are exhibited, and the militant quartette fairly fight for the opportunity of a first choice of the confections. In a few seconds the hats disappear, and one sees seated on a chair before the shop window a beautiful Pompadour, who is lured to the outside by a Cupid, and there performs a stately, slow, dignified dance. The Pompadour is no other than the engaging Miss Camille Clifford, and nothing could be more graceful than her movements. Mr. Arthur Williams as the Clown, Mr. Farren Soutar as the Harlequin, and Mr. Sam Walsh as the Pantaloon are, indeed, a frolicsome trio, and their doings create endless merriment among not only the youthful but the older members of the audience; and there could be no more charming Columbine than Miss Billie Burke. There is a wonderfully quick change at the conclusion of this harlequinade, for in a very few moments after the black cloth has been lowered upon it, it is raised, and there before us, reclining in the chair in which we previously saw her, is the sweet Julie of The Belle of Mayfair. Julie wakes up, and comes to the conclusion that she must have been dreaming—that she could not have been a Columbine nor her lover a Harlequin. Then all the other characters troop in, the parents withdraw their objections to the marriage of Julie with the Honourable Raymond, and Cupid wins his way, as he should do in any self-respecting musical comedy. Miss Ruby Ray, by the way, makes a very attractive figure as Mlle. Amorette. The management of the Vaudeville are to be commended upon a most capitally-arranged harlequinade.

THE HICKS THEATRE.

One of the most noticeable features in the interior arrangements of the new Hicks Theatre, which was opened on Thursday night, is the ample space which is allowed between the rows of seats. Especially is this evident in the stalls and dress circle, where the moving from one seat to another does not involve any measure of discomfort to those already in their places. There is nothing displeasing to the eye in the decorations, which have been carried out in a warm ivory-white tone with plain gold enrichments. The upholstery, carpets, curtains, and wallpaper are of a pretty rose du Barri colour, which gives an aspect of warmth to the whole. The theatre throughout is constructed of fire-resisting material, the auditorium, saloons, and staircases being entirely of concrete and steel, and the stage throughout of teak or other hard wood, and the building generally embodies all the latest improvements. The auditorium, which has accommodation for about 1,200 persons, with standing space for a further 260, is constructed on the two-tiered principle, having some 180 stalls at the lowest level, with a good pit at the rear. A fine roomy dress-circle, having eight rows and seating 300 persons, occupies the first tier, and on the second tier is the family circle, slightly raised, above which is a spacious gallery. The auditorium is 50ft. wide by 70ft. deep, and the interior of the house has been designed by Mr. W. G. R. Sprague on a circular plan, the walls forming the segment of a circle. The dome and covings of the main circle present a very fine effect, and there is nothing garish in the scheme of embellishment. Nor could the visual sense be in any way offended by the electric lights, which are artistically toned down without prejudice to their illuminating power.

An atmosphere of pleasurable anticipation made itself felt on this, the opening night. It could scarcely have been connected with the play, which was The Beauty of Bath, transferred from the Aldwych Theatre. It was not the first night of a new piece, but it was the first night of a new theatre, and when Mr. Karl Kiefert's excellent orchestra struck up the National Anthem, it was with the utmost enthusiasm that the audience rose to honour the occasion. Then followed a number of popular airs, all admirably played, and ending with "For Auld Lang Syne." Immediately on the appearance of Miss Ellaline Terriss in her part of the Beauty of Bath, as well as, later, of Mr. Seymour Hicks as the sailor lover, the whole house manifested its good wishes by uniting in thunderous and continued applause, which lasted for some seconds, and slightly interrupted the progress of the play. At the conclusion the boisterous cheering indicated that nothing would satisfy the spectators but a speech, late as the hour was. So Miss Terriss appeared once more before the footlights, and in her winsome manner expressed her delight at the reception. "Mr. Frohman begs to thank you for your great kindness to-night," she said, "and he hopes you have been comfortable in our new theatre. I hope so, too. For ourselves, all I can say is that we thank you from the bottom of our hearts, and that I wish you all a happy and prosperous New Year." Then the National Anthem was again played to indicate closing-time, but the audience would not accept the hint, and resumed the hearty clapping of hands, which meant that they required a speech from Mr. Seymour Hicks. Mr. Hicks obeyed the mandate, and briefly expressed his hearty thanks.

Considering the difficulties associated with the opening of a new theatre, the performance of The Beauty of Bath went with commendable smoothness. Miss Ellaline Terriss, of course, brought her accustomed charms of individuality and acting to the rôle of Betty, and her singing of "How do you known when a little girl's in love?" was characterised by that vivacity of tone and expression and accompanying movement that have helped to make her so popular among playgoers. Buoyant and breezy, Mr. Hicks gave us a rare specimen of a spirited naval lieutenant, full of life and jollity. Miss Rosina Filippi was altogether a delightful personage as Mrs. Alington, and Miss Sydney Fairbrother was seen and admired in her capital sketch of an ex-Bloomsbury lodging-house keeper. Mr. Murray King as the gay Sir Timothy Bun, Mr. William Lugg as the aristocratic Viscount Bellingham, Mr. Stanley Brett as the entertaining actor, Mr. Beverley, Mr. Laurence Caird as the inane Lord Quorn, Miss Maudi Darrell as the engaging actress, Miss St. Cyr, and Miss Florence Lloyd as Lady Bun, not to mention the other members of the company, ably supported Miss Terriss and Mr. Hicks.

A CORRESPONDENT HAS SENT US A PHOTO, WHICH WE REPRODUCE ABOVE, OF THE LATE MISS KATE VAUGHAN'S GRAVE. MISS VAUGHAN DIED ON FEB. 21, 1903, AND WAS INTERRED IN THE CEMETERY NEAR JOHANNESBURG.

The Drury Lane pantomime is an English institution. A Christmas without one would be like a Christmas without roast beef, plum pudding, and mince pies. This comparison was made by a writer a quarter of a century ago. It is just as true to-day. Old customs die out, fashions are constantly changing, and the public taste in matters theatrical is as variable as a weathercock; but the Drury Lane annual remains with us. Its popularity, fostered by the enterprise and lavish expenditure of the management, is steadily maintained year after year, amongst old and young alike. The production this year has cost, it is said, no less a sum than £20,000, and Sindbad will surely be ranked as one of the most beautiful spectacles that has ever graced the boards of "old Drury." It is safe to prophesy that every performance will be crowded for weeks to come. Mr. Arthur Collins and his band of assistants have again scored a triumph, and have nobly fulfilled public expectation. The scenes that will be most talked about are a Persian Garden, the Valley of Diamonds, from the brush of Mr. Henry Emden, Palace of the Empress, by Mr. R. McCleery, and the Durbar, by Mr. Harry Brooke. All these scenes—and there are others—bear testimony to the skill of the scenic artists, while the dresses are equally significant of the admirable taste displayed by those who had their selection. Particularly striking is the Durbar, with its stately procession of elephants and their attendants. It is, indeed, a rare feast for the eye, and no mere description in print can do it justice. Remarkably realistic and cleverly worked is the shipwreck scene; and after this the chief characters seek refuge on a whale's back. Here much amusing business is introduced.

In one of the Egyptian scenes a motor 'bus is introduced, and the attempts of passengers to run after and get aboard this remarkable vehicle are the cause of great merriment, the effect of rapid motion being given by a moving platform, on which would-be "fares" are compelled to keep running. Other notable features are a snake dance and a monster centipede dragon, and a grand scenic ballet in which 150 performers take part. In the jungle scene appear some remarkably realistic elephants and lions, and Sindbad and a companion take refuge from the latter in a huge portmanteau—just the sort of thing to delight the children.

In the book, from the pen of Mr. J. Hickory Wood, there are plenty of topical allusions, the Education Bill, the House of Lords, and, of course, the Suffragettes, receiving the most attention. For instance, Mrs. Sindbad, addressing a crowd of Persian women, remarks, "How down-trodden you are in the East! In England it is the privilege of every woman to wrestle with policemen and break Cabinet Ministers' windows.

To Mr. J. M. Grover, the composer and arranger of the music, much credit should be given, and his energetic and inspiriting leadership of the fine orchestra should also be mentioned.

Most of the leading members of the company have already become renowned in pantomime at this house, and their re-engagement has met with general approval. Miss Queenie Leighton, who plays Hindbad, is quite an ideal principal boy, looking extremely well in all the costumes she wears, and meeting with success both as actress and vocalist, opening with "What is a fellow to do?" she makes a big hit with "Hello!" and later with "I want to be a popular millionaire." Miss Leighton's fine presence and easy, unforced style are of the greatest value. Miss Marie George is a winsome Ruby, and sings and dances with equal certainty of pleasing the audience. Her numbers include "Look out, Mr. Man," "That's a cinch," and "Sambo," a song and dance" in which she has the co-operation of children appearing as blacks. Miss Rosamund Bury is a stately and graceful Fairy, and her ballad singing is greatly appreciated. Miss Florence Warde is a handsome Abdallah, and Miss Ethel Oliver is a dainty representative of Zoe; Mlle. Rodriquez as Carmenita also deserves mention.

It was only to be expected that such an admirable comedian as Mr. Walter Passmore would give point and humorous distinction to the part of Sindbad, and we were not disappointed. There is more than a suggestion that the sailor's frequent voyages to all parts of the world are not altogether unconnected with the fact that Mrs. Sindbad is a lady who is accustomed to have her own way, and her judicious husband adopts towards her a policy of conciliation and self-sacrifice. Mr. Passmore plays the part on these broadly comic lines; but whether at home or abroad, this Sindbad is always a promiment figure in the fun-making. In one of the early scenes he sings a rollicking song of the sea, "Be a sailor," and a topical effusion, "The never, never land." Later he gives a very successful ditty, "The kangaroo," in which he has the assistance of a number of children, who, made up to represent kangaroos, go through a series of comic evolutions, finally making a most effective exit. In the much-regretted absence through illness of Mr. Harry Randall, Mr. Arthur Conquest played the important part of Mrs. Sindbad, and played it well. She is a severe-looking dame is the sailor's wife, and she stands no nonsense from anybody—least of all from Sindbad, in whose adventures in search of the Diamond Valley she shares. One of the funniest things in the pantomime is the quarrel which Mrs. Sindbad has with the Empress of the Saharas when the two ladies sit down to have a "friendly" cup of tea. Sindbad comes between the quarrelsome couple with the most disastrous results to himself, and the whole scene causes screams of merriment. Mr. Conquest has a capital song in "Down the Fulham-road," which met with immediate favour; and the usual topical duet is sung with Mr. Fred Emney in the scene already mentioned. Mr. Harry Fragson as the Envoy to the Empress again takes a full share in the fun and frolic of the Christmas piece. He makes his appearance on a real camel, and on its back he sings his first song, which, adapted to Offenbach's "Barbe Blue," is partly in English and partly in French. Mr. Fragson also gives a number of songs while seated at the piano, the most notable of these being "The Envoy of Sahara," with a capital chorus. Mr. Fred Emney is a delightfully humorous Empress of all the Saharas, the character being cleverly contrasted with that of the other dame. The imitation girlish manner and coquettish air are admirably assumed, while Mr. Emney's clear enunciation allows every word to be heard in the most distant parts of the huge theatre. Messrs. Drew and Alders as the eccentric English sailors, Bill and Tom, are always quaint and original. They play their parts in a broadly burlesque style, and introduce much novel business that cannot fail to evoke loud laughter, particularly amongst the younger members of the audience. "Smile, Bill," is a catch phrase that is certain to become popular. No better representative of the Old Man of the Sea could be desired than Mr. Edward Morgan. He is impressive and appropriately dramatic. Good work is done by Mr. Alec Davidson as Davy Jones, and Mr. Charles Ross as an Egyptian policeman.

The pantomime winds up with a harlequinade, with Mr. Leo Lester as clown, introducing a troupe of performing animals; Mr. Ernest Lester as pantaloon; Mr. Tom Cusden as harlequin; Miss M. Pannell as Columbine; while Messrs. W. Green and Chris Le Brun are the policemen. Mr. Ernest D'Auban is the stage-manager.

Two pantomimes are this year to be found in the immediate neighbourhood of the Strand, Mr. Samuel James, the well-known producer, of the Grand and other theatres, having secured Terry's for the production of a Christmas piece. Mr. Newman Maurice, the popular comedian and manager, is the author, and has served up a festive dish in which mirth and melody are pleasantly mingled, the result being a bright and merry production which met with general appreciation on Boxing Day. Discarding the familiar demon, the author has provided the evil genius in the person of Lawyer Fox, in whose office the pantomime opens. Red Riding Hood is introduced by means of a gigantic album, through whose illuminated pages she steps. In addition to Lawyer Fox, there are his two clerks, Pen and Ink, and the forces of evil are also strengthened by Baron Badlot, who plays the villain against his will. A deep plot is laid against Red Riding Hood in the village of Rusticana, where the heroine meets Robin Hood, and the pair fall in love, although Granny, the heroine's elderly relative, thought that she was the object of Robin's affections. The humorous characters join in mirthful fooling, until the Elfin Dell in Summer is revealed, giving place in turn, by a mechanical change, to the Dell in Winter.

The sixth scene is Granny's bedroom, where the traditional episode of the Wolf eating the old lady and taking possession of her bed to the subsequent dismay of Red Riding Hood, is enacted. The old lady, however, is more 'cute than her predecessor in the rôle, and manages to escape by taking refuge under the bed. On the arrival of Red Riding Hood the Wolf chases her round the room, but the plucky little lady, taking advantage of several articles of trick furniture, manages to elude him. Repentance eventually sets in in the case of all the bad characters, who, in a gorgeous Palace scene in which garlands of flowers figure charmingly, assist in the celebrations due to Robin's restoration to his ancestral possessions, among the gay revels being a minuet, gracefully danced by the ladies of the ballet.

The interpretation of the pantomime is in the hands of a highly competent cast, including some well-known names. Mr. Fred Storey, whose study of Rip Van Winkle will be favourably recalled, appeared as Lawyer Fox, and received a hearty greeting on his first entry. His make-up as the old lawyer was an artistic study, and he displayed wonderful agility in his leg-mania dance and his eccentric capers. A cordial welcome was also extended to Miss Lily Harold, who played Red Hood with her customary dash and finish. Her melodious voice sounded agreeably in "Rosie waiting," which boasts a tuneful refrain, and in the popular "Snowflakes" she had the assistance of a chorus robed in white satin, who lent an effective accompaniment, while a gentleman who took up a position in the orchestra repeated the refrain in a melodious falsetto. "A different girl again" was also vivaciously rendered by Miss Harold, who looked superb in her tasteful costumes. A pretty and refined Red Riding Hood was found in Miss Gladys Archbutt, who acted, danced and sang with gaiety and animation. Her rendering of Mr. Nation's song, "The flower girl," in which effective use is made of a bevy of comely ladies, was greatly enjoyed, and "The Zuyder Zee" also served to give further opportunity to Miss Archbutt's vocal talent. Mr. Phil Smith made a thoroughly amusing personage of the Granny, leaving undone nothing that might cause laughter. His make-up, eccentric all through, was particularly funny in the last scene, when he dressed up in a youthful fashion, with a short frock, which looked truly ludicrous. His songs were drolly rendered, though there was not a little harmony in the duet "An amorous breeze," imitated from the French by Mr. W. H. C. Nation, several of whose songs are included in the pantomime. Mr. Frank Collins and Mr. Frank Stanmore shared equally in the credit due to Pen and Ink, Lawyer Fox's servants, their various disguises causing endless merriment. They were responsible for many diversions, but the most effective was the travesty of a thought-reading séance, in which one comedian made a ludicrous appearance as a lady of uncertain age, who gives absurd answers, while a small boy stands by and derides their efforts. Such nursery favourites as Jack and Jill are numbered among the cast, and as impersonated respectively by Miss Amy Elcock and Miss Florrie St. Roy, added greatly to the enjoyment. Besides sharing in the success of a duet. "When love comes knocking at the door," Miss Elcock has a neat coon song and dance, and Miss St. Roy sings of the "Continong," with a speciality dance in illustration. Miss Nancy Freyne made a handsome Fairy Bluebell. She gave full value to the tunefulness of "My little Hyacinth," and also rendered "The tick-tack of the mill"—another of Mr. Nation's songs, composed by Wm. Corri—charmingly. Her adversary, the Wolf, was played in an awesome manner by Mr. Guy Williams, who sang the ballad "Blow, blow, thou winter wind," in meritorious fashion. Several other songs by Mr. Nation are introduced into the piece, "Harvest home," imitated from a French pastoral, and sung by Mr. Gilbert Martinengo and chorus, being the opening glee. "Love in winter," composed by H. G. B. Hunt, is sung by Miss Lucy Boswell, who made a smart Herald, her cultivated voice giving every expression to a pretty ballad, the accompaniment to which is very effective.

The scenery is by Mr. Geo. Sweddell and Mr. E. G. Banks, and the incidental music arranged by Leonard Leslie. The pantomime, which is produced by Mr. Gilbert Laye, under the direction of Mr. James and the author, is followed by a harlequinade energetically sustained by the Breton Troupe.

"THE COAL KING," under the management of Messrs. G. M. Polini and Lauderdale Maitland, commences its third provincial tour on Monday next, at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Grimsby. The drama has proved a phenomenal success, and the return visits of the play confirm in every sense the general demand for plays of this description.

The story of the pantomime at the Dalston Theatre this year is the well-known one of Robinson Crusoe. It is written by Mr. H. E. Bowes, and the music has been composed and arranged by Mr. H. Wellings and Mr. C. D. Fox, Mr. Alfred Whyatt being responsible for the scenery. The pantomime, which was produced on Christmas Eve, is played with considerable zest by members of Messrs. Fred J. Little and Fred Darcy's company; and Mr. Fred J. Little, who arranged and produced it, has every reason to feel confident of success.

The scenic effects are calculated to please everyone, and the dresses by Misses Hetty Bass and M. Bramley are tasteful and elegant.

The title-rôle is undertaken by Miss Marion May, who sings excellently. With Miss Nellie Moore, the Polly Hopkins, who captures all hearts, Miss May sings a very pretty duet. Miss Nellie Moore, it should be added, greatly pleases the audience with some lively dances, and praise is likewise due to Crusoe for a Dutch dance which fairly brings down the house. The duet entitled "It is the scarecrow" is most effectively rendered by Miss Nellie Moore and Mr. Sydney T. Russell, the latter appearing as Friday. One of the funniest personages in the pantomime is Will Atkins, who, in endeavouring to strike terror to the hearts of almost every other character in the story, produces the greatest hilarity. Mr. George Rapley's assumption of this part is certainly most humorous. He sings several songs, the most successful being "Oh, what a happy land is England!" Mr. Fred Lloyd gives a vigorous representation of Mrs. Sarah Crusoe. Messrs. Sandy and Carl, who appear as Billy and Jimmy Crusoe, introduce a really funny boxing act which keeps the house in a roar. The Silvos, who are attendants on King Hyapakoola, also cause some fun; while Mr. Tom Shenton is a success as the King. Miss Cissie Conyers presents a smart appearance as Captain Billie Taylor, Miss Bertha St. Ruth makes a vivacious Princess Flumeza, and Miss Beatie Moore is Fairy Queen. Others among those who help to maintain the fun are Mr. Will Hicks, who represents Richard Hopkins; Mr. George Jones and Mr. A. Selwood, who represent first and second mates of the Saucy Sally; and Mr. Charles Denman and Mr. Jack May, who appear respectively as dog and monkey, and prove most agile.

Among the specialities introduced must be mentioned the dances by the Sidney Quartette, some daring performances by the Zaracs, and the Marvellous Ladderites, who keep everyone on the tip-toe of expectation, at the same time contriving to maintain their own balance. Mr. Tom Shenton is stage director, and Mr. W. R. Parker musical director.

Enormous audiences packed the theatre at both afternoon and evening performances on Boxing Day, and manifested their delight by tumultuous applause. For pretty effects, side-splitting fun, and tuneful melody, the pantomime must be hard to beat. The production is fully equal, if, indeed, it does not actually excel, any of Mr. Cecil Paget's previous pantomimes at this house. The pantomime opens in unconventional fashion with a scene representing the exterior of the Crown, where a kindly policeman gives a ragged little urchin sixpence to witness Mother Goose. We are then taken to a pretty scene, the exterior of Mother Goose's farm, where a delightfully funny Mother Goose is presented to us in the humorous person of Mr. Tom McNaughton. The Goose (Mr. Leon Dubois) is introduced, and he is indeed a wondrous bird, causing endless delight to the youngsters. The goose is scolded, and told to go "on the knee" by its irate mistress. The old story is very closely followed, and we soon find ourselves in a brilliantly illuminated ballroom—the Hall of Gold—where a cleverly arranged bal masque is executed. The next scene of importance is another view of Mother Goose's poultry farm—a very pretty set, with a river and rustic bridge in the distance. Here Mother Goose is photographed by Snatchall (Mr. Ernest Rees), her face, unfortunately, breaking the camera. In the succeeding scene, "The way to the Well," Mother Goose goes to the Well of Truth to make herself beautiful, accompanied by Jill (Miss Lloyd) in a beautiful Princess costume of sky-blue velvet, representing Camille Clifford, and supported by a bevy of Gibson Girls. Another picturesque set follows, the Cave of Youth and Beauty; and this is succeeded by a huge motor-'bus, in front of which there is a moving track, the futile efforts of Mother Goose and her companions to enter the 'bus causing roars of laughter. The pantomime concludes with a gorgeous spectacle, entitled "Floralia," where there is a magnificent procession of ladies clad in sea-green costumes, on which various flowers are embroidered. Prince Lotharío (Miss Violet Lorraine) weds Jill, and all ends happily. It should be mentioned that at all the afternoon performances the pantomime is followed by a real old-fashioned harlequinade in three scenes, the last of which is the ever-popular "shadow pantomime."

The pantomime, as we have said, is rich in genuine fun, and foremost among the laughter-makers is Mr. Tom McNaughton, whose Mother Goose is full of quiet, unforced humour. His song "Let me sing" is excellently rendered. Mr. Fred McNaughton looks very comical in his pink sash and short frock as Jack, the naughty boy, and is responsible for many a hearty laugh. Mr. Ernest Rees is very droll in his dry style as the tutor Septimus Snatchall, and his two songs, "Tinned meat" and "All girls are fair to me," are decided hits. Miss Violet Lorraine makes a comely and dashing principal boy, and her chief song, "Rosie is waiting," is a very tuneful melody, the chorus of which is loudly taken up by the "gods." Miss Alice Lloyd, who is a great local favourite, has no less than four songs to sing in her rôle of principal girl, and "May," "The Gibson Girl," "Queen of Old Samara," and a topical ditty, "The Monocle Girl" are all very well rendered. Altogether a great deal of the success of the pantomime is due to Miss Lloyd's dainty impersonation of Jill. Miss Lena Verdi scores a notable success as the Dutch Girl. She plays with much vivacity and looks charming, her rendering of the song and dance "The Zuyder Zee" fairly bringing down the house. She also gave most admirable imitations of Miss Ella-line Terriss, Miss Connie Ediss, and Miss Vesta Victoria. Another great success was scored by Miss Edie King, who, as Phyllis, has a bright dancing song, "Let me show you," which she renders effectively. Mr. John M. Campbell as King Geezer has not been afforded many opportunities by the author, but he proves himself a genuine comedian. His song "How dare you?" was given with excellent effect. Miss Dora Poole makes a shapely Rustic Robin, and scores with her song, "It's a different girl again." Mr. Leonard Russell proves himself the possessor of a fine baritone voice as the Demon of Folly, acting with much distinction and singing a spirited patriotic ballad. Miss Edna Knollys is a handsome Fairy of Wisdom, and sings very sweetly; Messrs. William Phillips and Chris Zietz make a comical Family Cow; Miss Irene Ross is pathetic as the Waif; Messrs. Syd Raymonde, Will Phillips, Chris Zietz, and the Misses Marie Mitford and Bessie Royce supply ably the merry features of the harlequinade. The music for the pantomime, which is produced by Mr. John M. East, is composed and arranged by Mr. Louis La Rondelle, the musical director being Mr. W. W. Meadows. The scenery is painted by Mr. Alfred Terraine. The dances and processions are arranged by Miss Ina Alston, while the dresses are designed and executed by Miss Annie Burrows. Special praise must be awarded to the acting-manager, Mr. H. J. Brett, for the care and courtesy he displayed in seating his numerous patrons. In her tag at the conclusion of the performance, Mother Goose expressed a hope that "the pantomime would succeed in filling the coffers of the Crown Theatre," and without a doubt her wish will be realised.

BROADWAY THEATRE, S.E.

On Wednesday, Dec. 26, the Christmas Pantomime, entitled

"CINDERELLA."

Cinderella .....Miss Lucie Caine
Prince Perfect .....Miss Beatrice Edwardes
Princess Belle ..... Miss Maud Sprightly
Dandini ..... Miss Lily Sprightly
Baroness Ouncelight .. Miss Florrie Sprightly
Baron Ouncelight .....Mr. Eric Farr

Flossie ..... Mr. Edward Pollard
Gertie ..... Mr. Fred Pollard
Peter ..... Mr. Fred Cary
Fairy Godmother ..... Miss Lilian Cecil
Fairy Attendant .....Miss Dolly Hunt
The Boy ..... Mr. George Grogie
Dancers ..... The Eight Sunrays

The Broadway management must be congratulated on a highly successful production, and this, the eighth annual pantomime at this handsome and popular theatre, is worthy to rank with the best of those that have gone before it.

Mr. Frederick Stanhope, whose name is associated with all our pleasantest memories of pantomime at this house, is again responsible for the Christmas production, and Mr. Louis Calvert could have no more popular or capable lieutenant.

Scene 6, entitled the Cavern of Crystals, is a very beautiful set, in which we see Cinderella seated in her fairy carriage, which is drawn by four thoroughbred ponies. All the various scenes are admirably painted, and evoked, each in its turn, warm applause from the large audience present.

Among the artists, Miss Lucie Caine in the title-rôle must be mentioned first; this charming artist made an instantaneous success, and her songs, especially "Hyacinth" and "Whispers of Love," were capitally rendered. Miss Beatrice Edwardes as Prince Perfect was a dashing and handsome principal boy; her opening song, entitled "Every man will be a soldier," was greatly appreciated, as were her later efforts, "There's a man in Manitoba" and "A different girl." The latter was encored. The three Sisters Sprightly are a welcome feature in any pantomime. Miss Lily Sprightly as Dandini achieved a notable success, and her singing and dancing were excellent. Miss Maud Sprightly was a very charming and lovable Princess Belle; she sang and danced herself into instant favour. The third, but by no means least important of these clever sisters, is Miss Florrie Sprightly, whose wonderful ability of characterisation was seen at its best in the Baroness; her make-up and acting proved quite irresistible. Miss Lilian Cecil was an attractive Fairy Godmother; this lady is also a delightful vocalist. Mr. Eric Farr was a capital Baron; Mr. Erne Chester was excellent as Puffer, and Mr. W. Doust was equally funny as Duffer; these three gentlemen are known as The Tally-ho Trio. The Brothers Pollard were most successful—Mr. Fred as Gertie and Mr. Edward as Flossie; they sang "Trouble," "Waiting at the church," and "Interrupting you" in amusing style. Mr. Fred Cary has proved one of the hits of the production, his performance of Peter being exceedingly droll, and his songs, "Silence" and "Let me sing," were warmly applauded. Mr. George Grogie is very good as the Boy from the Corner Shop. Miss Elvira Stuart and Miss Dolly Hunt are charming Fairies. The Eight Sunrays are a delightful addition to the cast.

The entire production was an unqualified success, and a long and prosperous run may be predicted.

Mr. Fred Fredericks produced his eleventh annual pantomime at the Borough Theatre, at a matinée performance, on Boxing Day, and its enthusiastic reception from a packed house may be taken as an assurance that Robinson Crusoe will be added to the list of successful Christmas productions for which Mr. Fredericks has been responsible. The "book," which is from the pen of that clever extrepreneur who elects to be known as "Iam Query," is brightly written, and adheres closely to the familiar story. In fact, though the pantomime at present contains a plethora of interpolated songs and speciality acts, the plot is never long in abeyance, and this will be of much moment to the juveniles, to whom the career of the adventurous Robinson Crusoe is of enthralling interest. The opening scene is Davy Jones's Locker, and from there we are taken to the Bar Parlour of the Jolly Sailor. Here we make the acquaintance of our hero, who is in love with pretty Polly Perkins, the innkeeper's daughter. Crusoe has a rival for Polly's hand in the bad, bold buccaneer, Bill Atkins, and in the fine mechanical change which takes place to the Quay Side—with its picturesque view of the Port of Hull—we find our hero taking ship for foreign parts to avoid arrest as a smuggler, a fate designed for him by the wily Bill Atkins. A splendid scene depicts Aboard the Skylark, and the Snowstorm, the wreck of the Skylark by icebergs, and the Sea of Ice are all brilliant examples of stage illustration; while intense admiration is aroused at the fairy picture provided by the Coral Cave, with its wealth of colour and movement. The tableau is completed by the appearnce at the mouth of the cave of Crusoe asleep on a raft.

Part 2 opens with the Cannibal Island, where we meet Friday, Crusoe's protégé, whose touching fidelity to his young master at once commends itself to the children. The rest of the survivors from the wreck also manage to get to the island, and at Crusoe's hut there is a general reunion, and much rejoicing. As the Cannibal King turns out to be a disguised Englishman, and none other than Mrs. Crusoe's better half—being shipwrecked runs in the Crusoe family—a big fête day is arranged for the marriage of our hero and Polly, and we therefore pass on to the concluding scene, the Grove of Golden Palms—a gorgeous spectacle—which was most enthusiastically received. For the entire scenery Mr. George Dodson is responsible, and much credit is reflected on his artistic efforts.

As Robinson Crusoe Miss Stella Gastelle is highly popular. The part suits her admirably, and she is always vivacious, buoyant, and active. Her fine vocalism is greatly admired, and of her songs perhaps "Who's your tailor?" meets with the most recognition. Miss Rosie Sylvester is a very pretty and pleasing Polly Perkins, and is a great favourite. The coquettish invitation expressed in her song "I want a little man like you," in which different members of the audience are signalled out, is a most attractive item, and "Sailing in my balloon" meets with ready approval, while her neat dancing is much admired. Miss Mamie Stuart plays Captain Cutter with a breeziness and genial swagger well befitting the part, and sings "There's a man in Manitoba" with fine effect. To Mr. Ben Albert is allotted the important part of Bill Atkins, and a wise choice has been made. He is always amusing, and his songs, "Leave her alone with them" and "That's the end of the chapter," are among the best things in the pantomime. Mr. W. E. Richardson presents an excessively funny appearance as Mrs. Crusoe, and scores heavily with his quiet, dry methods. His songs and patter are in high favour, and throughout he works unflaggingly. Mr. Dan Paulton, an old Stratford favourite, plays with much resource in the character part of Peter Perkins, the jovial innkeeper being depicted in just the right vein, and he has some capital songs. A striking performance as Friday is contributed by Mr. Frank Hemming, who at his first entrance as the unfortunate savage plays with such dramatic intensity that involuntary imprecations are hurled at the offending savage chief by the more susceptible "gods." The character is always popular and Mr. Hemming further has an opportunity of exhibiting his dancing prowess. Miss Ethel Ashton, who has been principal dancer in many Stratford pantomimes, contributes several solo dances which are greatly applauded, and plays Mary Mayflower very appropriately. Messrs. Woodhouse and Wells as Starboard and Larboard are prime favourites, and their speciality duets and dances are vociferously received. Mr. J. A. McLaren is eminently successful as King Hullabaloo, and he has a topical ditty which goes wonderfully well. Miss Marjory Lytton is a very smart and alert Bob Ratling; Miss Ethel Verdi is excellent as Anthony Gill; and Miss Adelena Balfe plays with much charm and ability as Nicee Picee. Mr. James Laren declaims his lines with vigour as Neptune; Miss Marion Taylor plays with dignity as Amphitrite; and Mr. George Rogus contributes a grim sketch of Davy Jones. One pleasing element in the attractions of the production is the vocal ability of the large chorus of very pretty girls, in a splendid assortment of beautiful dresses, who show the result of much careful rehearsal. The melodious and very appropriate music is composed and arranged by Mr. Ben Barrow. For the comfort of those in front, the experienced Mr. Frank Rothsay is responsible; and Mr. Francis Maxwell Stewart's expert stage-management secures a smart performance of a brilliant annual.

It is our pleasant task to be able to record that Mr. Robert Arthur's ninth Kennington pantomime is likely to rank amongst his most successful productions from a material as well as from an artistic standpoint. The verdict of the large audiences which witnessed the two Boxing Day performances was entirely favourable, as shown by the enthusiastic call which was given at the close for author, composer, and acting-manager, and as Mr. H. B. Brandreth, who has worked untiringly to maintain in Humpty Dumpty the high standard always associated with the Kennington stage, appeared before the curtain, together with Mr. Dix and Mr. Wilson, the house broke into a furore of applause. The ovation was well deserved. The author has chosen a somewhat original theme. The curtain rises on Leslie Tremaine in his Portman-square nursery, a very effective set, by Mr. G. E. W. McKie, hearing from his mother the story of Humpty Dumpty. Leslie is a somewhat precocious youngster, and wants to know why Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall, and why he fell off, and various other things which Mrs. Tremaine cannot tell him. So, pondering over the subject, he falls asleep, and dreams of Humpty Dumpty and his ways. In the dream the Queen appears, awakens Leslie, and takes him off with his Great Gollywogs, which suddenly become animated, to Humptiland. His wanderings there through two acts, in which are incorporated nine more scenes, constitute the pantomime, and when he rouses from his slumber he finds himself in the nursery again. The staging is magnificent, and in the Kingdom of Humptiland we have Stafford Hall's first great scene, and one which reflects the greatest credit on him. When the King and Queen, accompanied by the chorus of guards and maidens, enter the spectacle is brilliant in the extreme. Here the varied and beautiful costumes designed by Comelli and executed by Baruch and Co., Berlin, Ellian Bros., London, and Miss Hale, the Kennington wardrobe mistress, are seen to advantage, and a fair sample of Mr. Wilson's tuneful music is heard in the rollicking chorus, "This is the kingdom of Humptiland." There are also some topical lines which go down well, and an extremely catchy song, "Sweetheart I love you," by Princess Curly Locks. The distinctive feature of the third scene, the Old Woman's Shoe, a faithful representation of which is given by Mr. McKie, is the Queen's slumber song, in which a number of children in night-dresses and carrying candles participate. The fourth scene, by Stafford Hall, "Venice," is a blaze of colour. For half an hour the fun is fast and furious, terminating with the riotous gaiety of the carnival, in which the brightest of Venetian costumes are worn. In the midst of it all, Humpty and Curly are borne away inside an egg trophy placed on a barge. It is a novel effect, and forms an appropriate finish to the first act. The opening scene of the second act is the City of Memphis, by Stafford Hall, which makes an interesting picture, whilst the Gates of the City by the same artist is also well done. There are a couple of railway station scenes by McKie, and a gorgeous setting by Stafford Hall of the Home of Twinkle star in Mars. But undoubtedly the most striking feature of the second act is the motor chase of Scene 5, in which biograph views thrown upon a succession of canvases, by McKie, produce a remarkable result. There are during the course of the pantomime some good electrical and mechanical effects by David Marshall and M. Ginnett and Harry Krott respectively, whilst the properties are by Georgo Corney and H. Longhurst. The company is an exceedingly strong one, numbering 120 outside the principals. The latter include some of the best known names on the suburban pantomime stage. Miss Yvonne Lamor as Humpty Dumpty is an excellent principal boy. Of dashing appearance, a good singer, fine dancer, and bright actress, she soon makes herself a warm favourite with all. In the Venetian scene she does a good deal of singing, and her Hyacinth song is one of the prettiest of the piece. A charming leading girl is Miss Georgina Middleton as Princess Curly Locks. She is full of girlish grace and vivacity, and acts with an unaffected simplicity of demeanour that wins everyone's heart. Miss Middleton scores with several catchy songs, one of which, "The Ice Cream Girl," brings down the house; whilst her duet with Humpty, "Love, love," is effectively rendered. The company is especially well cast on the comedy side. Mr. R. H. Douglass as the King and Mr. Arthur Rigby as the Queen are comedians of the first water, and the laughter is ceaseless whenever they are about. They introduce a lot of side-splitting patter, and their make-up is in itself immense. Mr. Rigby secures enthusiastic recalls for his two principal songs, "I never go beyond eighteen" and "Man," the latter teeming with suffragette allusions. In the Shoe scene Mr. Douglass has some amusing gags on modern love-making, which never fail to catch on. The Crystals, American vaudeville actresses, make a big hit as Jack and Jill. They are both wonderful dancers as well as good vocalists, and their song and dance in the Shoe scene, "My bungalow in Borneo," is accorded a thoroughly deserved encore; whilst the Cowboy song and dance in the second part of the pantomime is almost as equally warmly received. As Johnny Stout and Jimmy Green, Moon and Morris are responsible for a great deal of merriment, and their speciality dance in Venice was very good. In the railway scene, too, they both showed themselves to be fine knockabout comedians. The Sisters Crisp as the Little Gollywogs deserve a line for quite a clever dance; whilst Mr. R. W. Thomas doubled the parts of the Doge and the Wizard in highly commendable fashion. The manner in which as the Doge he told the story of Humpty will take a lot of beating. The Great Gollywogs were ably impersonated by Wally Scott and Seth White, and Mr. Edward Thirlby made an interesting Old Woman, his make-up being faultless. Miss Gladys Jones is an ideal Leslie Tremaine, making quite a nice boy of the Little Lord Fauntleroy type. Miss Elsie Hill is equal to all the calls upon her in the part of Mrs. Tremaine, and the same must be said of Miss Elinor Vale as Polly. There are some exceedingly artistic ballets arranged by Mlle. Elsie Clere, and in these the Martian Troupe of eight principal dancers give a graceful exhibition of the terpsichorean art. There are numerous rousing choruses and concerted pieces which go with a swing that must be mightily pleasing to Mr. Wilson, who conducts his own music. The stage-management is in the hands of Mr. Douglas, and it is a feather in his cap that the whole performance is completed without a hitch.

THE STANDARD.

On Boxing Day, Dec. 26, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Walter Melville, entitled

"THE SOLDIER'S WEDDING."

As the Christmas attraction here this piece is meeting with enormous success. At both the afternoon and evening performances on Boxing Day the house was crowded to excess, and the reception given the play was indeed cordial, and must have been highly satisfactory to Mr. Walter Melville, the author. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon Mr. Ashley Page for his masterly delineation of the soldier hero, Jack Brown. He plays with manly bearing and vigour, and is a decided success. Mr. Beresford Whitcomb supplies a capital study of Colonel James Graham, whilst Mr. Johnny Chippendale is the cause of much laughter as Tommy Spratt. Little Albert fully deserves to have his name brought prominently before the public; he cleverly undertakes the rôle of Teddy Munro, and fully complies with his description on the programme, that of "a saucy nipper." Mr. John Sargent is powerful as David Munro, alias Matthew McGuire, and shows ability; and Mr. Alfred Harding successfully impersonates the scheming villain, Charles Courtenay. A characteristic delineation of the old farmer, Nathaniel Lee, is given by Mr. C. A. Chandler, who deserves high praise for a clever piece of acting. Miss Nattie Everett proves of value in the part of Lizzie Walker; and Miss East Robertson acts with much dramatic force, and is eminently successful as Julie De Beauvrais. Miss Georgie De Lara skilfully presents the woman who left her husband, Peggy Munro; whilst Miss Marion Deuvil sweetly portrays the rôle of Nancy Lee, and fully deserves the applause which from time to time reward her efforts. The many minor characters in the drama are given due prominence by other members of the company.

The Paisley Theatre presented a brilliant spectacle on the 21st ult. Instead of the local battalion of Volunteers—the 2nd V.B. Argyll and and Sutherland Highlanders—having their usual annual dance, they arranged with Mr. J. H. Savile to take his theatre for a night, and witness the pantomime of Goody Two-Shoes. From the Colonel of the battalion down, the theatre was filled with the Volunteers in uniform, and their lady friends. At the close of the first part of the pantomime, the presentation of prizes for the past season's shooting took place from the stage.

ROYAL ARTILLERY, WOOLWICH.

As a Christmas attraction at this theatre a strong booking has been made in the shape of the Moody-Manners Opera Company with a considerable répertoire. The company, which is paying its first visit to this theatre, is a large one, numbering seventy in all, with a chorus of thirty-five voices, and, seeing that every member played throughout the Moody-Manners season at Covent Garden and the Lyric, it is not surprising that their welcome here was a warm one. On the evening of Boxing Day the ever-popular Bohemian Girl was played to a house crowded with an audience that was at once attentive and enthusiastic. A better choice than that of Miss Alice Boaden to play Arline could scarcely have been made, for not only is Miss Boaden the happy possessor of a naturally sweet soprano voice, but her acting is characterised by an easiness and a gay insouciance, tempered towards the end, by a regretful tenderness, that make her impersonation all the more valuable. Her rendering of many well-known numbers was much appreciated, her greatest success being perhaps with "I dreamt I dwelt in marble halls." Miss Mary Norton made a regal-looking Queen of the Gipsies, and sang and acted with real dramatic power; she is gifted with a good, resonant voice of remarkable carrying power, and her song, "Love smiles but to deceive," was enthusiastically redemanded from every part of the house. A manly, straightforward rendering of Thaddeus was submitted by Mr. Seth Hughes, who looked every inch a soldier, and whose proud defiance to the Austrian arms was given with force and dignity. Mr. Hughes is as good a vocalist as he is an actor—which is saying a good deal—and his rendering of the very popular "When other lips and other hearts" was one of the best received numbers of the evening. Count Arnheim found a thoroughly aristocratic-looking representative in Mr. Marshall Vincent, whose characterisation of the part was from every point of view satisfactory; his song, "The heart bowed down," was well rendered, and his acting, particularly in the dramatic scene where the Count recognises his daughter, was noticeably good. Mr. George Neilson was admirably suited as Devilshoof, his powerful, resonant voice enabling him to do full justice to the numbers allotted to him, his rendering of "In cellar cool" (specially introduced) in particular bringing down the house. Mr. Neilson has a very thorough idea of a comedian's business, and Devilshoof's uninvited exploration of the castle was a really excellent piece of fooling. Mr. R. Brookes made the most of the somewhat thankless part of Florestan, singing well when he had the chance, and looking and acting sufficiently fatuously at other times. The chorus of gipsies, peasants, &c., was tuneful, and went at their work with a will, rendering the concerted numbers with excellent effect. They were also very well handled, good stage-management being evident both in the grouping and the entrances and exits. The scenery was adequate and the dresses tasteful. A much appreciated item was the clever and graceful dancing of four little ladies becomingly dressed in red and white. The orchestra—a large proportion of whom are travelled by the company—were well up to their work, and the whole performance reflected credit on all concerned. The company's répertoire also includes Maritana, Carmen, Cavelleria Rusticana, I'Pagliacci, La Traviata, and Faust.

THE ERA ANNUAL, 1906.
"The Era" Annual for 1906, published at a shilling from 5, Tavistock-street, Strand, combines utility and entertainment. Its former aspect is exemplified by the record of the plays produced last year in London, the provinces, Paris, and Berlin; it also includes an obituary for the year, and lists of the United Kingdom's theatres and music halls. The attractive side of the Annual comprises numerous stories by stage celebrities, whose portraits illustrate the text. It is a delightful budget of good things. Mr. T. P. O'Connor's appreciation of the late Sir Henry Irving is brief, but tender and impressive.—Financier, Jan. 23, '06.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT FOR ACTOR AND COMPOSER,
BY
ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).

Chapter I.
COPYRIGHT AS OPPOSED TO PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter II.
PERFORMING RIGHT.
Chapter III.
Chapter IV.
MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.
Chapter V.
INTERNATIONAL AND COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

"The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer," by Albert A. Strong, LL.B., solicitor, author of "Dramatic and Musical Law" ("The Era" office), seems to be the one compendious and indispensable authority on the subject, as vexed as the "Bermoothes" and as tortuous as a Chancery suit, that has long been wanted. It is in every essential a text book for the perplexed layman, and no solicitor or barrister worth his salt ought to think of taking or appearing in "proceedings" without consulting its pages. It must suffice, after what has been said, to state little more than that the contents include five chapters, respectively named "Copyright as Opposed to Performing Right," "Performing Right," "Infringement and Remedies," "Musical Copyright," and "International and Colonial Copyright." The work, for all its precise authority, is not dry reading. The statutes, with the elucidatory notes, necessarily impose a task on the reader which takes some tackling, but they had to be there. The cases adduced, however, are full of interest. Certain of them might fitly find a place in the romance of copyright. There was the fight of Charles Reade with George Conquest over "It's Never Too Late to Mend," for instance, and the equally interesting conflict of Mr. J. A. Cave with Chatterton over "The Wandering Jew." The latter was a famous battle. Chatterton took it to the House of Lords, and was finally beaten, to the unspeakable relief of Mr. Cave, who is never weary of relating the story. Had the result been otherwise, it would have meant his ruin. I well remember meeting him on the day of his victory and "crashing a cup with him" in honour of the same. "The Law of Copyright" is dedicated to Mr. A. W. Pinero.—Sportsman.

THE DRAMA IN 1906.

The year that is now closing has been decidedly up to the average in its dramatic output. Yet we just missed having a great disappointment. It would indeed have been a sorry "list of plays" which did not contain the title of a contribution from MR. PINERO. Not only has he given us another sample of his genius; the sample has been successful. And this means a great deal. For no dramatist can ever attempt his best without encouragement. It looked a short time since as if Mr. PINERO were "going all wrong." We admit that the appreciation earned by Letty and Iris was enough to make any author cynical; and The Wife Without a Smile was a regrettable incident—a symptom of irritable eccentricity which made one nourish the most depressing fears for Mr. PINERO's future. Yet here he is again with one of the "big successes" of the London season down to his account; and the triumph is the more gratifying in being scored in connection with one of the most artistic and intelligent of London managements.

Were it only for His House in Order, 1906 would be a year whose dramatic history would be pleasant to look back upon; but it is also memorable for the best production of our chief dramatic poet. The value of elaborate mounting was never demonstrated more clearly than in the case of Nero. The author's work required and deserved assistance. It would have been so easy to have taken the broad and easy way in dealing with the Roman Emperor; to have made him a crude monster—unexplained, inhuman, and childishly non-complex. Mr. PHILLIPS grappled with the intellectual problem, and re-created a very interesting and not inhuman character. But, offered to a public like ours, Nero, on the strength of its psychology alone, would not have run a month. The magnificent mounting, Mr. BEERBOHM TREE's vastly popular personality, and the admirable acting of himself and his company were the jam which induced the British playgoer to swallow contentedly—indeed, without special observation—one of the few intellectual blank-verse dramas which has been written in England for a long time. Mr. H. A. JONES has been playing the part of Achilles this year, for The Heroic Stubbs was an effusion quite unworthy of his muse; but, if we may base conjecture on the scenario of The Hypocrites which has reached us from America, Mr. JONES has simply postponed his re-establishment till the piece is produced in London.

A phenomenon of the year has been the climacteric "fashionableness" of BERNARD SHAW. He has been, as we say of children, "spoilt." Mr. SHAW has never been subjected to criticism worthy of his steel. To quote him: "My tricks are never detected because of my trumpet and cartwheel declamation. Critics, like other people, see what they look for, not what is actually before them. In my plays they look for my legendary qualities, and find originality and brilliancy in my most hackneyed clap-traps." Mr. SHAW, we fear, is past praying for. He will go on to the end of the chapter, dissipating his quick wit and astonishing powers of observation in "scattery" concoctions like Major Barbara and The Doctor's Dilemma. When Mr. SHAW wrote Widower's Houses, Mrs. Warren's Profession, and The Devil's Disciple he owned himself a charlatan. But he went sufficiently in fear of criticism to "join his flats"; in other words, to construct his plays—simply and strongly, but still to construct them. Now that all wholesome restraint is removed, he "goes as he pleases"—still banging away at his drum and tootling on his trumpet. But The Doctor's Dilemma, from a technical point of view, is a great improvement on Major Barbara; indeed, up to the end of the second act it is a quite complete and consistent play, and the dialogue and characterisation are the best Mr. SHAW has ever done. We commend to this writer's notice the work of a less successful fellow-dramatist—Mr. JOHN GALSWORTHY, the author of The Silver Box, also produced at the Court. It was a really remarkable echo of the modern school of French pessimism.

All things considered, the above constitute a very fair crop of thoughtful plays; and the pleasant ones have been plentiful also. Could one wish for a more fascinating bit of erotic fantasy than the Morals of Marcus, for instance? Or a better example of the dashing, adventurous drama than Brigadier Gérard; or a more exciting, unsophisticated evening's amusement than Raffles; or a stronger mixture of the sensational and the deeply dramatic than The Bondman; or a more satisfactory solution of a dangerous difficulty than Colonel Newcome? The lighter entertainments showed an improvement in quality; and, though our American visitors have not been very fortunate this year, The Lion and the Mouse, at the Criterion, was an artistic work, which only failed because of its pronounced local colour. And when we recall such superb revivals as Mr. TREE'S Winter's Tale, Richard II., and Tempest productions at His Majesty's, when we remember Mr. COMYNS CARR'S Tristram and Iseult and Mr. RUDOLF BESIER'S Virgin Goddess at the Adelphi, we must admit that the serious and ambitious, as well as the frivolous and fantastic side of the stage, has been well supplied in 1906.

The distinctive feature of the year has been the plenitude of revivals. This is not a symptom on which it is safe to congratulate managers, for a revival is often the result of a failure or quasi-failure necessitating marking time for a while. But from the points of view of the actor and actress and of the public, revivals are "all to the good." Rising artists get more opportunities for personal distinction; those of established reputation have salutary changes; and the number of the playgoer's opportunities is increased. If many large fortunes may not have been made by theatrical management in 1906, much kudos has been won; and, artistically, the year has been one which it is most pleasant to look back upon.

HENGLER'S.

Hengler's Grand Circus offers admirable attractions this Christmas for the youngsters and for children of a bigger growth. First and foremost there is the petite pantomime, or "spectacle," as it is modestly called, entitled Little Red Riding Hood. Mr. Austin Fryers, the manager, reminds visitors that in the early days of Hengler's spectacles of a poetic and fanciful character were a special feature, and Little Red Riding Hood was one of the most popular of the successful series which Mr. Hengler produced. Miss Connie Gilchrist was the original exponent of the title-rôle, and the spectacle in which she appeared was so popular that it was transferred complete to Paris, where it enjoyed a good run. The Red Riding Hood which is now presented is on the lines of the original production, but includes electrical and scenic effects undreamt of in those days. Specially noticeable are the ruby footlights, which, contrary to the usual method, are directed towards the audience. In this way the auditorium is bathed in a warm light, and the ring is thrown in darkness so that the scenic changes are effected unseen by the audience. This is the first time this ingenious device (credit for which is due to Mr. Lionel C. C. Smith) has been used for stage purposes. Mr. Arthur Coomber is responsible for an ably-written "book," and he, by the way, plays in interesting fashion the part of the Grandmother. Mr. Coomber has a special claim to notice in connection with Hengler's, for as a boy he appeared in the original production of Red Riding Hood. There is a very engaging heroine in Miss Clarence Heney, whose adventures in the rôle are eagerly followed by the youthful spectators. Miss Maggie Robertson at once wins the admiration of the kiddies for her very attractive Prince Charming; and Miss Maie Hoey as a very graceful and gracious Fairy Queen, and Miss Ethel Terry as Red Riding Hood's mother capably fulfil the requirements of their rôles. Mr. F. Farreld makes himself cordially disliked as the Wolf, and that is synonymous with saying that he acts the part well. There are four scenes, Gloomy Dell, the Fairy Dell, the Village Green, and the Grandmother's Cottage, all of which are capitally staged and mounted. Some pleasing music has been composed for the spectacle by Mr. Denham Harrison, and the score includes the famous "Spring" chorus sung by a number of trained boys. The dances have been arranged by Mr. Edouard Espinosa, who is generally responsible for the stage production; and the dresses are the design and work of Miss Elva Dearen. The spectacle is followed by a rollicking Old English harlequinade.

And as if this delightful little pantomime were not sufficient there is quite a galaxy of good things in the remainder of the programme. In Caban's French Circus are to be seen some highly-trained miniature ponies, dogs, and monkeys, not to mention Puggie, a doggie who creates roars of laughter with his feats as a football player. Flying Fox, the pony who races on a revolving table, seems to possess gifts of nerve and agility not permitted to the average equine, and an indication of the difficulty of Flying Fox's daily task is given in the offer of £30 to any person who can remain on the revolving table, going at the same speed, for thirty seconds. Princess Fayette shows us the latest style of Parisian driving, and she cuts a very dainty figure as she cleverly manipulates the reins. Bob Hanlon's troupe of acrobats execute a number of aerial feats which are as varied as they are attractive; and there is plenty to interest one in the Animals' Kindergarten, in which, among other exhibitions of intelligence, ponies play at see-saw. Prince Fee Lung makes one almost gasp with wonder at his demonstration of Chinese magic and his juggling. He smashes a plate into a score of fragments, and these are placed under a handkerchief, one piece of the broken pottery being retained. A couple of seconds later the handkerchief is withdrawn, and there is the plate intact except for the single fragment, which is found to exactly fit so as to make the article complete. Fee Lung is equally successful with his juggling tricks. Felix, the musical clown, is as entertaining a fellow as one could wish to meet, and other commendable turns are given by Paddy, the retriever pony; Domino, the Arabian donkey; and Shamrock, on whom is bestowed the distinctive honour of being the smallest pony in the world. A series of praiseworthy animated pictures, supplied by Films, Ltd., conclude the show.

THE Leamington Theatre Royal re-opened on Boxing day, when Mr. Edward Compton and his comedy company gave an excellent performance of David Garrick. Mr. Compton appeared for the 1332nd time in the title-rôle, his favourite part, and gave a truly admirable portrayal of the character. Miss Mackenzie gave a charming delineation of the rôle of Violet, displaying in a remarkable manner all those characteristics which the part calls for. Alderman Gresham as played by Mr. Henry Crocker was exceedingly good; as was also the Hon. Tom Tallyhaut as interpreted by Mr. Dennis W. Cleugh. Other noteworthy performances were the Rumbelow of Mr. Philip Gordon, the Mrs. Rumbelow of Miss Marie Hassell, the Selina Sowerberry of Miss Barbara Pigot; the Sowerberry of Mr. G. Wallace Johston, and the Simpkins of Mr. Vernon O. Crabtree. Other pieces given during the week included She Stoops to Conquer, The School for Scandal, and Edmund Kean. On Friday night Mr. Compton was accorded a benefit.

"OU EST MOREAU?"

Vaudeville, in Three Acts, by P. Bonhomme and G. de Téramond, Produced at the Bouffes, on Dec. 21.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, Dec. 27.—Not long ago the Bouffes brought out a comedy. It did not succeed, and the management now tried their luck with a vaudeville, which, however, is not likely to fare better. It is a farce of "the rough-and-tumble order," with people hiding in all kinds of places and chasing one another in a bewildering manner, such as we would expect at Cluny and not at this little playhouse. If the situations are complicated, the same cannot be said of the plot. Fernand makes love to the pretty Mme. Moreau, who promises to make him happy the moment her husband has gone to Falaise for his twenty-eight days' military drill. And, in order to prevent Moreau from returning at an inopportune moment and surprising the lovers, Lieut. Lagripette, Fernand's friend, promises to heap so many punishments on Moreau's head as to make it impossible for him to come to Paris before he has served his time. Unfortunately—like in Champignol malgré lui—there are several Moreaus in the regiment, and whilst his luckless namesake remains in the guard room the betrayed husband returns to Paris on the sly to call on Georgette, his mistress. Fernand also receives the visit of Lagripette, who has travelled to Paris on pleasure bent, with his servant, the fiancé of Fernand's cook. Lagripette orders his servant to take Moreau back to Falaise because he has absented himself without leave. But another Moreau is arrested in his stead, and Mme. Moreau (we do not know why) faints, and tumbles into a huge basket which is sent to Falaise. At the station she creeps out, her place is taken (we do not know why) by Moreau and another man. Finally, in the guard room, we meet all the personages in the piece, plus Fernand's uncle, and a young girl, Lucile, who marries the lieutenant. And when the curtain falls on all this tomfoolery we cannot but regret that talent is wasted on so much rubbish. The piece was well acted, especially by Mme. Gense, who has the speciality of idiotic servants, and she made the house laugh with her drollery.

"BAT' D'AF,"

Play, in Five Acts and Eight Tableaux, by MM. Arthur Bernère and Aristide Bruant, Produced at the Théâtre Molière on Dec. 23.

Bruant	M. ARISTIDE BRUANT
Le Capitaine Berner	M. POUCTAL
Pierre Morin	M. BERTAUX
L'Anguille des Batignolles	M. VALNEY-CHARLET
Lieut. Henry Lejeune	M. COMBES
Le Sergent Thibaldi	M. DUVAL
Le Tétard de la Chapelle	Mlle. PREVAL
La Pouliche	MLLE. DIONE
Louisette	MLLE. BERANGERE
Mme. Morin	MME. ALIN
La Môme Torchon	MLLE. MARIETTE

The English visitor to Paris who only knows restaurant or hotel French will derive but little pleasure from an evening spent at the Théatre Molière, for the simple reason that he will not understand the slang terms with which the piece is interspersed; and, having gazed in bewilderment at the title, he may possibly come to the conclusion that it is the name of the hero or the heroine. Bat' d'Af is the abbreviation of "Bataillons d'Afrique," the punishment battalions in Algiers, wherein men are drafted who, having been imprisoned for some misdemeanour or other, are not allowed to do their military service with others whose record is clean. Unfortunately, young men who have only committed a breach of discipline are also sent out to Africa; and the play Biribi, now running at the Théâtre Antoine, deals with the same subject, as will be remembered by those who read the plot in these columns. But if the English playgoer does not understand the plot, he certainly will remember M. Aristide Bruant, one of the authors, who plays the principal rôle in the work. He owned a famous cabaret in Montmartre, where, dressed in a black velvet suit, a crimson scarf round his neck, and a large slouch hat, he used to attract all Paris by his songs, which generally described the sufferings of the oppressed. Dealing with the same subject as Biribi, there is of course some resemblance between that story and Bat' d'Af's. Pierre Morin, convicted for a crime committed by his brother, is, on his release from prison, sent to a "Bat' d'Af." His conduct there is so exemplary that he is on the point of being allowed to return to France when the sergeant Thibaldi, his mortal enemy, joins his company. The feud between them is on account of a woman, La Pouliche, who favoured Morin. The latter, learning that his sweetheart has just arrived at the settlement, leaves his post to meet her, and, caught by the revengeful Thibaldi, he would have been court-martialled and sentenced to death if Lieut. Lejeune had not helped him to escape. And his happiness would have been complete if L'Anguille des Batignolles, the villain in the piece, had not, in a fit of jealousy, stabbed La Pouliche. The scenes are sensational, and afford M. Bruant an opportunity to give us a few monologues, which he delivered in his usual impressive manner. The Théâtre Molière—at one time called Les Bouffes du Nord—is situated in one of the outlying districts (something like a Paris Whitechapel). That kind of piece, therefore, suits its public down to the ground, and is likely to have a prosperous run.

SOME time ago I gave the information that Mme. Sarah Bernhardt intended to appear chiefly in men's rôles. It sounded improbable, yet it is true. M. Henry Bataille is putting the finishing touches to a new Faust, founded on Goethe's drama, wherein the great actress will impersonate Mephistopheles. If Mme. Sarah Bernhardt adheres to her plan there is no reason why she should not appear in La Dame aux Camélias, not as Marguerite Gautier, but in the rôle of Armand Duval. The only thing to be feared is that other ladies will follow her example, and in that case we may well ask what is to become of the men. Will they don women's clothes? Mounet-Sulley in a tea-gown or M. Le Bargy with a stole and muff would have the charm of novelty. Who can tell? Ours is the age of evolution.

MME. OTERO—la belle—tells us that the report of her impending marriage is an invention. "I have," she says, "attempted many foolish things, except matrimony, and I have no intention to try the experiment now." Three other ladies in the theatrical world also send disclaimers. But the news that Mlle. Garrick, of the Comédie-Française, will soon become a bride is true. The charming actress will leave the stage, and we all will be sorry not to applaud her any more.

A PLEASING little function marked the conclusion of the performance of The Grip of Iron at the King's Theatre, Cardiff, on Christmas Eve, when Mr. George Denham was the recipient of a handsome travelling-bag, given by the members of the company. The presentation was made by Miss Rosabel Dodd, and acknowledged by Mr. Denham in a few well-chosen words.

"TREASURE SHIP" HIPPODROME.

That The Treasure Ship setting sail under direction of Mr. Frank Parker at the London Hippodrome on Monday last will prove an argosy laden with golden grain for the Moss-Stoll exchequer seems a certainty; for never have the mysteries of the lower deeps ruled by Father Neptune been fathomed so completely by scenic illustration as at the famous house in Cranbourn-street. Then there is the octopus, the "villain" of the piece, whose wonderful powers and terrible embrace are so graphically described by Victor Hugo in "Les Travailleurs de la Mer." He—even he—is baffled in his evil doings at pantomime time by the fascinations of the good fairy, who in this case is known as Aurelia, a water syren. The spectacle opens near a diver's hut, which is situated on a rock-bound shore, looking on a calm sea. In this peaceful spot, Amand, a young diver, pursues his avocations. His father, an old long-shoreman, has in his possession a chart, a present from a departed comrade, and the old man's ambition is to discover a sunken treasure. They set sail in their frail craft, a storm overtakes them, but eventually they reach the "fairy seas," and commence operations from their anchorage in a lonely bay. We are allowed to see the treasure ship sinking to the bed of the ocean—a very beautiful effect on which the engineering department of the Hippodrome may be heartily congratulated. The divers are, of course, successful in discovering the treasure; and when the octopus attacks them they are rescued by the radiant fairy already spoken of, who has power over the most uncanny denizens of the deep. The monsters depart, and the fairy conducts the toilers of the sea to view her realms of coral, where huge sea monsters and crustaceans of all kinds have their lairs. Rocks open, and mermaidens dive into a phosphorescent sea, and the whole concludes with a wonderful flying ballet just previous to the union of the hero and the fairy.

This pretty fanciful plot is told in eloquent pantomime, in the first place by Miss Simeta Marsden, who looks a comely young sailor as Amand, and sings prettily and acts with eloquent expressiveness. Mr. Lavater Lee does all that is necessary for the rôle of the aged fisherman, and more accomplished or more graceful mermaids than the Misses Annette Kellermann and Gladys and Maud Finney it would be impossible to see. The evolutions of this trio of naiads make up a most interesting interlude in the novelty. The dance of sea nymphs is at once recognised as a Tiller dance—a very appropriate guide this "Tiller" for an aquamarine novelty—and the perfection of the flying ballet, glittering with beautiful colourings, is reached when rainbow-hued scarves are held aloft by the bird-like figurantes and spread athwart the stage in the form of a star. The flying fairies are represented by Herr Heidenreich's Flying Ballet. An entrancing effect is the gradual sinking of the treasure ship, the lighting of the silver-laden craft seen through a veil of gauze being admirably managed. Mr. Bruce Smith has shown his customary artistic sense in the beautiful seascape that opens the spectacle, and again in the gorgeous coral cave. To the genius of Mr. Frank Parker, the equestrian and stage director, London is indebted for a most ingenious and pretty novelty, that should hold the Hippodrome arena for months to come.

Among the fresh features of the preliminary performances in the arena is the turn of Cruikshank, a comic musical clown and a jester with a happy faculty for producing laughter. He has an excellent vehicle for his humour in his "Song of Sixpence," which bears an up-to-date complexion, and is well written. The Chrono-Megaphone is a novel combination of the phonograph and animated photography, and a scene from H.M.S. Pinafore is given with such realistic effect that one seems face to face with the actual performers instead of their photographs. No more rapid equestrian act could be imagined than that of the Althoffs; the Kremos sustain their unequalled reputation as Risley performers; Chung Ling Soo reaches the highest altitude as a magician; Walter Bellonini keeps up his fame as a juggler; Tschernoff's dogs and ponies delight the youngsters; and other turns in an excellent bill are supplied by the Tupps, Morris and Vincent, Marzella's performing birds, the Rio Brothers, and the Maningoes. Mr. Fred Trussell, in the front of the house, is a courteous and cultured official whom it is good to meet, and he has an admirable coadjutor in Mr. Henry W. Garrick, of the Press department.

THE IRVING MEMORIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—We should esteem it a very great favour if you would kindly make it known that all actors and actresses desiring to support the Irving Memorial should send their donations directly to Mr. John Hare, 75, Upper Berkeley-street, W., or if they should be members of the Actors' Association, to the Secretary of that Institution at No. 10, King-street, Covent Garden. The names of all donors will be announced from time to time in the public Press.

The smallest and largest contributions will be received with equal gratitude by the committee, it being their confident hope that not one single member of our calling will fail to support the memorial to our dead chief.

The committee have very great pleasure in announcing that they have already received subscriptions which amount in the aggregate to fifteen thousand shillings.

The first subscription list, which will include donations of the actors and actresses of America and Australia, will be publicly announced three weeks from this date.—Yours faithfully,

For the Irving Memorial Committee

AT the present time France leads the way in the matter of State-aided theatres, for in Paris there are no fewer than four. To the Comédie-Française the State gives £9,000 a year, and exercises some right of selection in the plays produced. In Germany the little city of Weimar contributes £75,000 that it may have the best plays of its best dramatists played in the best manner.

...IETY GOSSIP.

columns to-day will be found Christmas ...s on behalf of the Music Hall Benevolent ...nd and the Music Hall Home. We can add nothing to the eloquence of Mr. Horace Marriott or Mr. Tom Barrasford's words; but the account on this page of the administration of relief by Miss Anna de Grey on behalf of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild should touch all hearts, and convince our readers of the deep distress existent in the homes of poor professionals, and the immediate necessity for contributions.

MR. and MRS. HARRY RICKARDS arrived home at Sydney, N.S.W., safely on Oct. 25, and the veteran Australian entrepreneur is pleased to report that business continues good. He has taken a five years' lease of the Palace Gardens, Perth, where he opened with a new company on Dec. 18.

MR. GEORGE LASHWOOD, "the Beau Brummel of the variety stage," recently sustained a severe accident in the collision of his brougham with an electric tramcar outside the Kennington Theatre. His physician now advises him that a month's holiday at least in the South of France is imperative to restore him to his former health and vigour. Very reluctantly Mr. Lashwood has cancelled his engagements at the Empire, Leicester-square, at the Hackney, Holloway, New Cross, Stratford, and Shepherds Bush Empires, and also at the Richmond Theatre, where he was engaged to appear during January. Accordingly, he will leave for Mentone about the end of next week, and hopes that a period of rest and complete quietude will enable him to resume work on the Moss-Stoll tour the first week in March.

MISS MILLIE HYLTON, a Gaiety favourite, as we anticipated, has scored an immediate triumph on her return to the musical comedy stage in the part of La Bolero in Mr. Popple (of Ippleton). Mr. Paul Rubens's piece has appealed most successfully to the public of Leicester at the Royal Opera House during the week. Miss Hylton is particularly good in her song descriptive of a stage career.

THE will of Mr. James Anthony Bailey, of the City of Mount Vernon, Co. of Westchester, New York State, managing director and chairman of Barnum and Bailey, Limited, is now the subject of an action pending in the High Court, but administration of his personal estate in the United Kingdom (pendente lite) has been granted. The gross value of the estate is £29,670 10s.

CHIRGWIN has been attacked by the prevailing influenza, and unhappily has not been able to answer to his number either at the Palace Theatre or the Chelsea Palace. Mr. Rex King, the rising young protean artist, came to the rescue of the Chelsea management, and he has during the week been heartily encouraged by the Chelsonians in his versatile and clever entertainment.

AMONGST those present at a dinner on Christmas Eve given by the Mayor of Grantham to the aged poor was Henry Johnson, who on Tuesday celebrated his hundredth birthday.

JOHNSON has had a most adventurous career, going as far afield as China with a circus. In his palmy days he was associated in partnership with Mullaba, the Chinese juggler, and he had the honour of performing before King William IV., Queen Victoria, and our present King when Prince of Wales.

MR. FRANCIS O'FLYNN writes: "I regret to say that my dear friend and late partner, Mr. Richard Williams (with whom I was until recently associated in the Earle and Earle banjo act) died in London on Thursday (20th) after a short illness. Mr. Williams was a fine banjoist, and, in addition, he was a mandoline virtuoso with few equals, and his loss will be deplored by an army of friends and acquaintances. R.I.P."

SIGNORINA BORDIN, who has been a triumphant success in L'Amour, ends her present season at the Alhambra this week, and leaves to fulfil Continental engagements. She will not have a part in the next Alhambra production, which is due in January, but she will return to London to fulfil an engagement in the autumn ballet at the Leicester-square house.

MR. W. S. BASSETT, the late musical director at the Granville, who has accepted a similar appointment at the Palace, East Ham—the newest addition to the list of London's syndicate halls, has been presented with a gold pin and cigarette-case by his musical comrades at Walham Green.

"THE SUFFRAGETTE'S TRIUMPH," an up-to-date duologue, written by H. M. Halles, was produced at the Foresters' on Thursday afternoon. Its success was immediate. The treatment of the Government difficulty with the petticoated campaigners is very happy, and the crowded house gave a hearty welcome to the novelty. The two characters, Clara Smith, M.P., and John (its wife) were cleverly sustained by Miss Mara Collings and the author.

MR. MATTHEW BRODIE and his company, including Miss Dorothea Vivian, will appear at the Empire, Hackney, on Monday, in Mr. Louis Cohen's stirring Napoleonic sketch, The Drummer of the 76th, which goes the week after to the Shepherds Bush Empire, with the full Moss and Stoll tour to follow.

MRS. BROWN POTTER and her company are appearing on Monday at the Holloway Empire in the dramatic historical sketch by Kennedy Cox, entitled Mary Queen of Scots, in which the popular actress will play the ill-fated queen. The episode chosen in her unhappy career is the murder of David Rizzio, of whom Darnley, Mary's second husband, was profoundly jealous. The accomplished scholar and musician, who came to Scotland in 1564 in the train of the Savoy ambassador, was murdered two years afterwards at the instigation of Darnley.

MR. GUS ELEN, accompanied by his wife, visited Clapham Common on Christmas morning and distributed amongst the children some thousands of toys. Mr. Elen drove up in his motor-car laden with an enormous box, filled to the brim with beautiful little gifts. This is the second year that the well-known comedian has successfully endeavoured to brighten the Christmas of the kiddies in his district.

A CONFERENCE took place on Friday between Mr. Frank MacNaghten, his London manager, Mr. Fred Baugh, and Mr. Frank Gerald, secretary Variety Artists' Federation, Mr. William Johnson, secretary the National Association of Theatrical Employees, and Mr. Jesson, of the Amalgamated Musicians Union, regarding proposals submitted by the Alliance on behalf of the societies named.

THE professional début of Mr. Dan Leno, jun., a son of the famous comedian, at the Holborn Empire, has had to be postponed in consequence of an unfortunate attack of influenza.

THE Zancigs went to Sandringham on Boxing Night by command of the King, so that they did not appear at the Alhambra. They, however, showed at the Boxing Day matinée, and Mr. George Scott, the popular manager of the house, started with them to Sandringham at five o'clock.

IN answer to her appeal in our columns for toys and comforts for the children this Christmastide, Miss Anna de Grey is pleased to acknowledge the following contributions, in money and kind:—Mr. George Page, £5 5s., for the Music Hall Ladies' Christmas Guild dinner and toys, together with his promise of making that sum an annual subscription; Miss Lottie Albert (Mrs. Osborne), toys and dinner tickets; Mrs. Fred Karno, children's clothing, and a gift of butter; Master Leslie Karno, toys, money-boxes (each containing a threepenny-piece), and large box of biscuits; Mrs. Lyons (of Sanford and Lyons), large box of sweets; the Misses Smytheson, box of toys; Miss Queenie Burnand, box of toys; Miss Lily Burnand, gift of tea and sugar; Mrs. Sheppard, Stork Hotel, Birmingham, £1 1s. (collected by Miss Lil Hawthorne); Mrs. Simmonds, Redhill, box of toys; and Miss Lil Hawthorne, clothing.

WITH the money sent by Mr. Page, sorely-needed boots were bought for men, women, and children. A little money was also given to each applicant for coal, and the guinea collected by Miss Hawthorne bought stockings. A good dinner of the best English beef was provided for twelve families, with half-a-pound of tea, same of butter, and the ingredients for a good Christmas pudding. In two cases of starving families, boots and stockings were giving to fathers, mothers, and six children, all under the age of twelve. In each case the father has been out of an engagement for months through no fault of his own.

IN all, the Guild has given boots, stockings, and toys for twenty-five children of distressed artists, who are well known to all of us, and who are sick with despair at the ebbing of the tide of fortune. "The past year," Miss de Grey writes to us, "has been a very hard one on many, and it is heart-breaking to listen to the story of the fight against Fate. It is the saddest Christmas I have known." Subscriptions and contributions in clothing and kind will be acknowledged in these columns if sent to Miss Anna de Grey, 69, Primrose-mansions, Prince of Wales's-road, Battersea Park.

THE remains of Paul Courtney were laid to rest in Norwich Cemetery on Saturday. The deceased comedian succumbed to pneumonia at the age of thirty-nine, and has left a widow and six children to mourn his loss. Six of his brother artists carried him to the grave, and among the lovely flowers laid on the coffin were wreaths from Mr. and Mrs. Fitt, of the Norwich Hippodrome, where the deceased gentleman fulfilled his last engagement, Mr. E. H. Bostock (Glasgow), Mr. Charlie Porter, Mr. Richard Mallett, and others.

THE widow desires to tender her gratitude and thanks to Messrs. Bostock and Fitt, and the V.A.F. for their generous help and timely assistance; also to Mr. Fred Baugh, Mrs. Rizeno, Mr. Thompson (Norwich stage-manager), Mr. Charlie Porter, and Mr. R. J. Mallett, all of whom rendered valuable help.

IN reference to Mr. Paul Courtney's death, Miss Anna de Grey writes:—"I went on Christmas Day to see Mrs. Paul Courtney, and I shall never forget it. Her cry was, 'If he had only had a decent pair of boots it would never have happened. He went for weeks with wet feet to pay back his debts, and when he did get boots it was too late!'" Miss De Grey adds:—"If boots are required the Music Hall Ladies' Guild will do their best for applicants coming to them."

THE scene-shifter, Frank Walters, who met with an accident at the Palace of Varieties, Northampton, on the 17th inst., is progressing favourably, considering his terrible injuries. Mr. Fred H. Anderson has opened a subscription list on behalf of the sufferer.

MR. WILL MURRAY, the popular manager, took his benefit at the Palace, Blackburn, on the 18th inst. There were two crowded audiences, who witnessed a largely augmented entertainment, the usual company being supplemented by some twenty artists from theatres in neighbouring towns, and several local amateur performers. At the second house Mr. Barney Vox, the ventriloquist, came forward, and, amid loud applause, presented Mr. Murray with a substantial cheque from the general public of the town, the patrons of the theatre, and personal friends, and a gold-mounted umbrella from Mr. Clough, the musical director of the theatre, and the band. Mr. Murray in reply warmly thanked his many friends for their kindness.

AT the Empire, Newcastle, this week, Chas. M. Daly, the author, manager, and producer of Chas. E. Machin's sketch, The Gorilla's Revenge, is giving a truly remarkable performance of the simian. The reception given to this successful sketch has been extraordinary, and its future is assured. It travels two trucks on the railway, having an enormous amount of fine scenery and effects, which include four large special cages, exhibited in scene 2, an exact representation of the interior of a menagerie. The animals are fine specimens, and the company includes such experienced artists as Miss Nita Langford, Mr. Henry Belding, Mr. Juan de Alberti, Mr. Victor Rae, and Mr. Fred H. Terrell.

"THE GORILLA'S REVENGE" is well booked up, and during the coming year six other sketches of a like nature will be produced. By August six companies will be touring these sketches, and a specially equipped company will visit in December next America, Australia, and South Africa. The big sensation, Three Thousand Years Ago, in which figure real mummies, an eruption, and an earthquake, will be produced in London in February. In December, 1907 and 1908, Robinson Crusoe, Cinderella, and Aladdin, under Mr. Chas. E. Machin and Mr. Chas. M. Daly's management, will also tour the variety theatres.

MR. W. F. FRAME, the Caledonian Scot, is by way of becoming author, and has written his reminiscences, which will appear in a Glasgow weekly. His account of an eventful career should provide most interesting reading.

MR. EDWIN CROUESTE left Tilbury Dock on Friday, the 18th, on the s.s. Orontes for Colombo as manager for the Fitzgerald Bros. Circus. He was accompanied by Mrs. Tom Fitzgerald and an efficient company of circus and variety artists. They hope to be in Australia about next November.

MR. ALFRED POYNTON, writing from the Blenheim Hotel, Brighton, says: "I am sorry to inform you I lost my dear kind father on the 19th inst. from chronic Bright's disease and heart failure. I shall have to give the stage up for a long period."

THE Miles-Stavordale Quintette have just returned from a Continental tour embracing Vienna, Prague, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam. They sail for South Africa by the s.s. Kenilworth Castle this morning under Messrs. Hymans' management.

MR. FRANK MACNAGHTEN'S Leicester Pavilion Theatre of Varieties presented a most charming appearance on Friday evening, Dec. 21, when, by the kindness of the proprietor, a benefit was accorded to the funds of the Leicester Licensed Victuallers' Association, who are hoping to endow a second cot at the Children's Hospital. It may be mentioned that this is the second time this year that the generosity of Mr. Macnaghten has been displayed in this direction. The artistic care displayed in the decorations of the theatre evoked unstinted praise.

THE Executive of the V.A.F. have decided that "tipping" on the part of V.A.F. members shall cease on January 1, 1907, and they are relying on their members for support. In encouraging the present system of gratuities, artists, they consider, are materially assisting in keeping the wages of stage employés at the lowest possible ebb.

MR. HERBERT DARNLEY, who wrote Mr. Wix of Wickham for Dan Leno, first met the great little comedian under circumstances that did not foreshadow a warm friendship. Says Mr. Darnley: "We did not meet again for many years, and then it was in Dublin, when he complained to me that he could not get anyone to write the sort of songs he wanted. I happened at that time to have by me a song I had written, entitled 'My sweet face.' This Leno performed the following year at Drury Lane Theatre, and it was the beginning of our long and pleasant business relations and intimate friendship. I wrote for him, amongst other successes, 'The Tower of London,' 'Mrs. Kelly,' 'The Horseshoe on the door,' 'Fancy dress ball,' 'The detective,' 'The fortune-teller,' and 'Buying a house.'"

THE FAYS, American thought-readers, who gave a Press show of their entertainment last week, are unable to appear on the regular bill of the Oxford, owing to the illness of Mrs. Fay, who is suffering from a serious attack of neuritis.

REPORT has it that we are to have a real live Princess on the stage. Princess Broglie, a beautiful American girl, some years ago went to Paris to study singing. There she met the Prince, who fell violently in love with her, and married her, much to the distress and indignation of his family. Cut off without even the proverbial shilling, they went to America, and the Princess secured an engagement in vaudeville. While the Princess sings on the stage, the orchestra is conducted by her husband, a cultured musician.

THE following circular has been sent to the Lyceum ordinary shareholders:—"As you were informed in the circular of Feb. 14, 1906, the debenture interest was in arrear, and as unfortunately this could not be paid by the end of that month, the property passed into the hands of the debenture holders. Actions have been brought to enforce the debenture holders' securities. In pursuance of orders of the Court the sinking fund has been surrendered, and the amount applied by the first debenture holders in reduction of their claim; and on the 13th inst. the property was sold for the sum of £119,500, which will probably be only just sufficient to meet the balance of the first debenture holders' claims, which includes interest and costs."

MR. NORFOLK MEGONE, who left the Richmond Theatre to take up his duties as musical director of the Palace, Stoke Newington, was presented on Saturday evening, the 22nd, on the stage of that house, with a silver cigar-case bearing the coat-of-arms of Richmond raised in enamel, and suitably inscribed. The presentation was made by Mr. Kay Draco on behalf of the management, staff, and friends.

LITTLE Maudie Francis has made a big success as Tommy Tucker in the pantomime, The House that Jack Built, at the Grand Theatre, Glasgow. The song presented to her by Miss Lottie Lennox, "Tommy Tucker's first smoke," goes wonderfully well.

THE following are the names of the members of Sydney M. Hyman's (Ltd.) company who leave Southampton to-day per the Kenilworth Castle for South Africa:—Miles Stavordale Quintette, musical act; Florence Esdaile, vocalist; Maud Mortimer, comedienne. Augustine and Hartley, acrobats and barrel jumpers, will also be opening at the same time as the above, but they are going direct from Australia. Amongst the artists arriving home per the Norman are Ted E. Box, Miniature Marie, and Hayes and Suits.

LORD BRASSEY maintains that the Crystal Palace should become a State-aided institution. Speaking recently to the students of the Crystal Palace School of Engineering, his lordship declared that if it became necessary to appeal to Parliament for a grant for maintaining the Palace it would be generally acknowledged. "It would not," added the distinguished speaker, "have been possible to maintain South Kensington Museum, the National Gallery, the British Museum, the Imperial Institute, or the London parks without public aid. The spirit of aid is to extend technical instruction by every possible means."

MR. ARTHUR WATSON and his company paid a flying visit to the Empire, Camberwell, on Dec. 20, in The Cruise of H.M.S. Victory, written by Miss Flo Stanley, with music by Mr. Harry Petersen. In this stirring nautical sketch Mr. Watson and Miss Flo Stanley achieved an instantaneous and overwhelming success, so much so that immediately after the show they signed four contracts with Mr. Jesse Sparrow for various houses, to commence immediately. In addition to Mr. Watson himself, who plays Jack Marlingspike, and Miss Stanley, who appears as Polly (a waitress), the company includes Mr. Bob Leardo, Mr. Billy Moss, Mr. Harry Watson, Mr. Joe Burley, Miss Maud Roberts, Miss Ethel Pryer, and others. The sole agent for Mr. Watson is Mr. Tom Claxton.

MISS ELIZABETH NEIMANN, the seven-year-old daughter of Mr. Frederick Neimann, made her fourth annual visit to the Music Hall Home on Christmas morning. The little fairy was laden with packets of tobacco, briar pipes, cigarettes, and cigars for the inmates.

MR. ARTHUR ELVY, the sporting comedian and "Up-to-Date Tipster," will shortly produce another novelty, entitled "The Bookmaker's Lament," founded on the Betting Bill. The song has a rattling chorus, and is bound to catch on.

MISS FANNY ROBINA on her birthday was presented with a contract to play the part of Sinbad in the Christmas production at the Queen's Theatre, Swindon. She has not played in a Sinbad pantomime since the last founded on that story at Old Drury.

PAUL CINQUEVALLI, who played the week of Dec. 10 at the Orpheum Theatre, Boston, Mass., with great success, is a great favourite in Boston, and he spent there his last week for the present in America before leaving for Europe. On the 17th Mr. August Luschow, the proprietor of the famous German Restaurant, gave a farewell dinner in honour of the famous artist, and many prominent people of New York were present. On the 19th Cinquevalli left on the Baltic for Europe. Mr. Sam Scribner offered him an engagement for the rest of the season at his own salary ($600 a week and all expenses), and Mr. Percy Williams also offered him several weeks' engagement in New York. Mr. William Morris also wanted him, and telephoned to Mr. Richard Pitrot (Cinquevalli's American agent), asking him if he could keep the popular artist in America a few weeks longer. A cable to Mr. Max Winter (director of the Wintergarden in Berlin), asking him to allow Mr. Cinquevalli to fill the engagements offered him in the States, elicited the reply, "Mr. Cinquevalli must open on Jan. 1, 1907, in Berlin," so "Cinq." will fill his engagement in Europe, and afterwards return for forty weeks to America.

MADAME ALICE ESTY, who is now appearing on the Moss and Stoll tour, has for years consistently refused to sing in a variety theatre, but Miss Marie Tempest's recent appearance at the Palace had as much to do with Mme. Esty changing her mind as anything else. Music-lovers in the provinces should accordingly rejoice. She has appeared in the rôle of Santuzza in Cavalleria Rusticana over 500 times.

"I ALWAYS appear in Cavalleria with renewed pleasure," she told the writer in a chat; "but I am also very fond of Puccini's music. I was the first to play in English the part of Mimi in La Bohème. I have not infrequently, too, sung in French, Italian, and German; but I confess I much prefer to speak in my own mother-tongue on the stage or anywhere else. If any rule were, however, to be laid down on this subject, I would not hesitate in saying that every opera is better sung in the language in which it has been written. Italian suffers more from translation into English than any other foreign libretto, but German is more easily adaptable."

MME. ESTY was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, thirty miles from Boston. Her maternal grandfather, an amateur flautist, was well known for his habit of going into the woods, which then surrounded her home, and piping to the birds, which used to flutter around him and even perch on his shoulder. One of her uncles was a cripple, and found solace in music, playing many instruments well; so from the first she breathed a musical atmosphere. At the mature age of five she made her first appearance in public at a concert in connection with their church, and appeared as a reciter, not as a singer. Although possessing an unusual voice for a child, her parents never dreamed of her becoming a professional singer.

IN common with their neighbours they rather looked down upon artists in general, and, as there had never been a professional singer in the family, it was not proposed that she should do anything except marry. She incontinently fell ill with typhoid, complicated with brain fever, and for long her life hung in the balance. On her recovery a sea voyage was ordered; and so it came about that in 1891 she landed in England on a fortnight's visit, and it has been her home ever since. An Englishman she knew in Boston had asked her to bring over a parcel for his friend, Mr. Henry J. Wood, then a comparatively obscure student. She duly sent off the parcel, and in reply Mr. Wood asked her to meet him, for the purpose of hearing her voice. She learned later that the sender of the parcel had written to Mr. Wood to be sure to hear her sing. She went and sang, and, either by accident or design, Mr. N. Vert and Mr. Edward Lloyd were present.

NOTHING much was said at the time, but a few days later, when at a Patti concert at the Albert Hall, Mr. Vert came up to Miss Esty and said, "How would you like to sing here?" At first she thought he was joking, and answered that it would be "Just too awfully nice." When he urged, she saw that he was in earnest, and she simply gasped, "Oh, I couldn't; I'm sure I couldn't!" "I think you could," he said, smiling; and the long and the short of it was that she sang for the first time as a professional at the next Patti concert. After the Albert Hall she appeared at the Crystal Palace, and next at St. James's Hall, and then received several offers from managers and agents.

ONE offer was from the Carl Rosa Opera Company, which she accepted. The six years spent in Carl Rosa Opera were full of hard work, and before she left her répertoire must have consisted of nearly fifty rôles. Of her work since, we may mention her creations of the rôles of Mimi in La Bohème and (in English) of Eva in Die Meistersinger. One Good Friday she sang at the Crystal Palace to the largest audience—over 29,000 people—they have ever had there—a memorable experience, and she also had the honour of singing before Queen Victoria at Balmoral. Alice Esty appeared at the Leeds Empire on Dec. 17 in a new grand operatic scena, written and composed specially for her, entitled Betta the Gipsy.

IN her artistic home in St. John's Wood Mme. Alice Esty treasures many a quaint souvenir connected with her operatic career. One which the prima donna especially values is a curiously-fashioned brooch made from an antique topaz trophy. This stone, explained Mme. Esty, was once possessed by a famous Indian necromancer, who claimed that by appealing to its power he was able to command the appearance of food and drink. One night the necromancer lay by a suffering comrade on a battlefield. Hearing the poor fellow moaning in an agony of thirst, he took the charm from his bosom and threw to the sufferer, saying, "Wear it near thy heart if thy parched throat would find relief." The strange command was obeyed, and when at dawn the grateful soldier looked for his benefactor no trace could be found.

MR. HARRY LAUDER, the canny Scotch comedian, is emphatically a "man of parts." He could sing from his cradle, and knew no luxury until he had persuaded his fellow-countrymen that he possessed humour. His first job was to pull strawberries. A condition laid on the boys so employed was that they should "whussle" all the time. Young Lauder couldn't whistle—so he left! He passed gradually to the stage, but it was a long, hard road to success there. For instance, he was so encouraged on one occasion by an engagement for ten performances, at three guineas, that he went and bought astrachan for his coat-collar!

SOME funny experiences have fallen to Mr. Lauder, and in the story of his life recently published is the following amusing anecdote about a Scottish farmer to whom Barry gave a cigar: "Mon, I havena' smoked a cigar since I got my eldest dochter aff my hands. I was that gled tae see her get a man that I didna' gie a d—— what I smoked."

A NIGHT he remembers well was at Glasgow, when a cruel voice from the audience cried: "Awa' back tae the pit, man!" As a set-off, there was the other night, in London, when the Scottish comedian got a "show"—because an artist was absent—at Gatti's, and promptly made his conquest of London. "Lauder, my lad," said Tom Tinsley, the manager, "you've done it." And he had.

THE best compliment ever paid to Mr. Lauder he heard outside the London, Shoreditch. "All right, 'Arry," shouted a young fellow outside the stage-door, "I vas so glad to see you doin' vell. You're a countryman of mine own—I vas proud of you." And then, with a typical Jewish waggle of his hands, "Vy, I'm from de Gorbals (in Glasgow). Scotland for ever!"

WHEN Mr. Lauder was sent to work early in life as a pit-boy, beginning as a "trapper"—or opener of the air-course doors—he soon was promoted to pony-driving. At the Alhambra matinée in aid of the victims of the Courrières coal mine disaster he gave touching expression to a song of collier life, which he sang in his former working clothes and equipment. His first fee for singing at a concert was 5s. In 1892 he gained a prize at a public competition in Glasgow, and this decided him to exchange the mine for the stage. He was then only twenty-two, and married.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

WE regret to learn, as we go to press, that Mr. William Francis, the head of the firm of Francis, Day, and Hunter, and founder of the Mohawk Minstrels, lies seriously ill. Mr. Francis is highly esteemed in every branch of the profession, and the news of his illness will cause the deepest sympathy.

MR. BERT H. DELMAR writes that the song, "I can't make it out, can you?" was written and composed by himself, and that Mr. Fred Erick has only been one amongst others who have made a success with it. "If there are any feathers to be had," he adds, "they should be worn by Mr. Frank Lynne."

WHAT has every appearance of proving a great favourite, owing to its fine melody and its rollicking, joyous vein of optimism, is the new ditty which Mr. Richard Green so ably sings, and which is called "Cheero!" It is by Percy Rhys and Gilbert Laye, and has just been published by Messrs. Francis and Day.

MISS VESTA TILLEY'S latest winner, "Jolly good luck to the girls who love the soldiers," by F. W. Leigh and Kenneth Lyle, will shortly be issued by Messrs. Francis and Day, among whose most recent purchases are also a novelty number, entitled "Epha Sapha Sampson," written and composed by Seth Weeks, and sung by Johnson and Dean and Miss Millie Correne; "'Twas the favourite song of the singer," by J. F. Lambe and Harry Castling; and "Half a loaf is better than none," a song by Harry Castling worthy to rank with the same author-composer's "It's the poor that help the poor.' Mr. Tom Yorke, the well-known coster comedian, is the lucky owner of the music-hall rights of this striking number.

MISS FLORRIE GALLIMORE'S newest song, "We are all stars," by Barnes and Weston, is in the press, having been accepted for publication by Messrs. Francis and Day. Miss Gallimore has just acquired a number by H. F. Greenfield, the first this new writer has written for this popular artist.

UNDOUBTEDLY an emphatic hit, and a prime factor in the success of the Alhambra's present fine programme, is Miss Annie Mars' rendering of "Home again, my Cherry Blossom," by Charles Wilmott and H. E. Darewski, jun. Messrs. Francis and Day are publishing the morceau.

THE Star Music Company, Ltd., has made an astounding leap into prominence considering they did not really commence operations till towards the end of November. Possibly the fact that those well-known writers A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott are on the board of directors may account for the firm's popularity. They themselves pooh-pooh this idea, and confidently find the necessary explanation in the instantaneous success achieved by their latest ditty, "Sailing in my balloon."

MESSRS. B. FELDMAN AND CO. are to be congratulated on having secured from A. J. Mills and Bennett Scott the big winner for pantomime, "By the side of the Zuyder Zee" is now freely acknowledged by all to be the one outstanding number of the present season. It has swept over the country from end to end like a huge tidal wave, and Messrs. Feldman find it well nigh impossible to cope with the enormous demand for copies.

MR. BENNETT SCOTT may consider himself doubly lucky in having also composed one of, if not the biggest number for Francis and Day. "Hello! hello! hello! It's a different girl again" (written by Geo. Arthurs) will undoubtedly prove one of that popular firm's largest sales for months to come, and if one may judge by the earlier pantomimes, will be the cause of uproarious merriment throughout the land. Much credit is due to Mr. Whit Cunliffe, the original singer of this infectious ditty, who has done so much to popularise it on the halls. Miss Letia Roze, the gallant Prince of the Marlborough Cinderella, is making it familiar in Holloway by her very breezy rendering.

AFTER Christmas it is a popular fallacy that Mr. Lester Barrett has breathing-time allowed him, but so widespread has been the success of the multifarious pantomime songs he has been engineering that the demand instead of slackening has increased, and business with the department he controls at Messrs. Francis, Day, and Hunter's is brisker than ever.

MR. TOM LEO opens on Monday at the Ealing Hippodrome with his now celebrated "Lazy" song, the popularity of which has been exemplified in no uncertain manner this Yuletide as evidenced by the demand for copies from the publishers.

MR. T. E. DUNVILLE has just produced with enormous success a new chorus-song, entitled "Down where the briny breezes blow," which has been secured for immediate publication by the Shapiro, Von Tilzer Music Company, Ltd.

MISS ETHEL RA LESLIE is featuring with much success on the Moss and Stoll tour Shapiro, Von Tilzer's publications, "Nana" and "Moonbeam." Miss Leslie will also shortly produce another of the above company's songs, "Little girl, tell me what I would know."

MENTAL MAGNETISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to correct a statement in some of the daily papers to the effect that "the séance of 'Mental Magnetism' was first presented at the St. George's Hall in the Easter of 1905."

This séance was studied and practised by Mr. Devant and my daughter Adela (who is now playing Dolly Dimple in the Paisley pantomime), and presented by them throughout the Maskelyne and Cooke tour of 1904-5.

During the last few weeks of the tour, and for the purpose of production in London, Miss Dora Devant understudied Miss Adela Crispin, who is the original lady medium of "Mental Magnetism," the character of which has not since been changed.—Yours very truly,

HOWARD CRISPIN.

Wave Crest, Whitstable-on-Sea, Dec. 27.

THE ball given at Covent Garden on the night of the 21st inst. proved most successful. The spirit of Christmas dominated the music and dancing, and the dresses were emblematic of the season and topical subjects. Among the more fanciful were "Nuts to Crack," "Winter," "A Suffragette," "A Clown," and "A Scotch Cold." Many other costumes showed invention, taste, and beauty. About twelve o'clock dancing began to the delightful strains of Dan Godfrey's band. The prizes included a Stanhope canteen fitted with a complete service of electro plate and cutlery, an inlaid mahogany enclosed writing table, a lady's dressing bag, an epergne, a tea and coffee service, a chiming clock, and other valuable objects.

PRESENTATIONS.—At the close of the Christmas Eve performance of Jack the Giant Killer at Falkirk Grand Theatre and Opera House, Miss Blane, on behalf of the staff and several patrons of the house, presented the baby son of Mr. Horace W. Ebbutt, the local manager, with a handsome baptismal bowl mounted on an ebony stand. Mrs. Ebbutt, in a neat speech, acknowledged the present for her son, and also the gift of a gold locket and chain to her little girl, Miss Edith Dorothy Gordon-Ebbutt. At the conclusion of The Still Alarm company's run a few weeks ago Messrs. Glenville and Osmond presented Mr. Ebbutt with an electro-plated tea service.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE OXFORD.

The principal novelty in Mr. Blyth-Pratt's Yuletide programme is The Sunny Seaside, the new and elaborately staged farcical sketch produced by the popular cockney comedian, Mr. Joe Elvin, on Monday evening. Mr. Wal Pink, who has written so many successes for Mr. Elvin, is the author; the music is by Mr. Orlando Powell; and the scenery is the work of Mr. Syd Cook, the whole being produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Blyth-Pratt. The principal characters and their interpreters are as follow:—

Jimmy Jubbles ..... MR. JOE ELVIN
Mrs. Jubbles ..... MISS AMY B. ELLIS
Tommy Jubbles ..... MR. KENNETH ALTAMONT
Aunt Emma ..... MISS BEATRICE GROSVENOR
Horace ..... MR. F. W. FORD
Mr. Harkwith ..... MR. HARRY LOW

The sketch is in two "splashes," and in the first—an apartment in the home of Mr. Jimmy Jubbles, manager of Sopperton's Stores—we quickly learn that the cause of the excitement which prevails in the Jubbles' ménage is the annual summer holiday. Mrs. Jubbles is very decided in her opinion that a month by the briny would be most beneficial to the children; but Jimmy is not at all anxious for a trip to the seaside. The wife suggests various well-known resorts, but none of them meet with the approval of her worried spouse, who would much prefer a few days' racing at "Epsom-on-the-'ill." The arrival of a substantial cheque from Jimmy's governor, however, considerably improves matters, and Jubbles consents to take all the family away at once—Aunt Emma, a portly and somewhat giddy lady, included. Then the real fun commences, and when a dozen or so huge trunks are stacked on top of a four-wheeler, and Mr. and Mrs. Jubbles and their little brood, and Aunt Emma, endeavour to squeeze themselves inside, laughter of the loudest is created, the cab collapsing just as they are about to start. The second "splash" of the sketch is a most complete representation of the sands at a popular watering-place. A merry throng of gaily-clad promenaders are enjoying the vocalism of a troupe of entertainers; from the side of a most realistic pier small boys are patiently waiting for a "bite"; children are building castles of real sand, and bathers are seen disporting themselves in real water—in fact, as the programme claims for it, there is all the "real fun of the sea-shore." The arrival of the Jubbles family livens up matters considerably, and the climax is reached when Jimmy paddles in the "briny," goes in for a donkey-ride, and joins in the frolics of the youngsters. Ere the curtain falls, Aunt Emma and three policemen are hurled into the vasty deep, numerous other incidents of a laughable nature adding to the fun of this most humorous playlet, the success of which was acclaimed in no uncertain fashion on Monday, Mr. Elvin and those associated with him in this lavishly-staged and most realistic production being recalled at its conclusion. Mr. Elvin is of course entirely in his element in the part of Jimmy Jubbles, and will be even funnier when relieved of the responsibilities of a first-night performance. Especially ludicrous were his antics on the sands, but his portrayal throughout was a most humorous one. He received excellent support from his company, Mrs. Jubbles having an excellent representative in Miss Amy B. Ellis; Mr. Kenneth Altamont evoking laughter for a funny portrayal of an attenuated youth; and Miss Beatrice Grosvenor also contributing to the hilarity created by her impersonation of Aunt Emma; the other parts being all ably enacted.

Early in the programme a most enjoyable and loudly-applauded turn was supplied by Mendel, the accomplished blind pianist, his contributions on Monday including a Mendelssohn Concerto, an imitation of a street-organ, and the rendering of three distinct tunes at the same time. Mr. Gus Elen, a favourite at the Oxford, amused greatly by his singing of "Mariar" and "The Pavement Artist," two humorous ditties which gain immensely by the finished renderings given them by the clever and popular comedian; and Mr. Harry Champion rattled off at express speed, "I see you've got the old brown hat on" and "What a month!" two comic effusions that were entirely to the liking of Monday's audience, Mr. Champion receiving a most flattering reception. Miss Clarice Mayne warbled of "Tricky little Trixie," a damsel who evidently knows her way about, and gave some excellent imitations of Misses Connie Ediss, Victoria Monks, Vesta Victoria, and Marie Lloyd, the two last being especially like the originals. Real cleverness and humour are combined in the acrobatic performance of Price and Revost, a turn that was heartily enjoyed; Miss Nina Martino vocalised agreeably; the sand-dancing of Miss Bijou Russel was applauded at its true worth; the D'Osta Trio, flying ring acrobats, and the Eugene Family, in their aerial performance and smart somersaulting, were rewarded with loud plaudits for their arduous and clever exhibitions; and Miss Nellie Wallace's eccentric style was largely responsible for the mirth aroused by her two songs, "In the cottage with the roses at the door" and "I can't go to sleep." Those expert cyclists, Lotto, Lilo, and Otto, executed many difficult tricks, with all their well-known ease and cleverness, the comedian of the trio adding to the enjoyment of an always acceptable turn; and Mr. J. P. Ling, an accomplished vocal mimic, was heard with decided pleasure in his imitations of various entertainers at a vocal concert, the singing of "Hail, smiling morn" by a glee party being an especially clever and laughter-compelling item. Miss Bonnie Goodwin and her quaint little piccaninnies aroused some of the loudest applause of the evening, the wonderful dancing of the darky youngsters being responsible for an exceptional display of enthusiasm; Mr. Ryder Slone sang a quietly-humorous ditty concerning a goose—truly a quaint old bird; and other enjoyable items were contributed by the Three Prestons, in their laughable absurdity, The Liftman's Rise; Mr. Will Van Allen, musical comedian; and Miss Ada Cerito, a smart comedienne.

THE SURREY.

The good old spirit of Christmas enjoyment started here on Christmas Eve, when crowded houses foregathered to sample Mr. Frank Macnaghten's splendid holiday programme, and the enthusiastic approval then bestowed on each individual turn has been heartily maintained throughout the week by packed audiences. Premier honours are accorded to that sterling sketch The Little Stowaway. The tale is too familiar to reiterate, and many capable artists have essayed the title-rôle, but none have done better in this protean character than Miss Eva Lumley, who in every phase of the trying representation hold the earnest, eager, and sympathetic attention of her audience. Miss Lumley so thoroughly realises the part that there is hardly a dry eye in the house when the poor little Stowaway, knowing he cannot survive the fatal shot, asks the kind-hearted boatswain, "Have I done my duty, sir?" in fact, throughout she easily leads her audience to alternate laughter and tears. Mr. J. K. Walton has fairly got inside the part of the bluff old sea-captain, Worsley; Mr. H. Shaw invests the unsatisfactory character of Lieutenant Burton with all the necessary force and brutality the rôle demands; as the good, motherly Widow, Miss Maude Osmond imbues her part with deep and tender emotion that adds not a little to the general success; as the jovial, singing Boatswain, Mr. H. Metcalfe proves he can sing as well as he can act; his rendering of the songs "Au revoir," "Somebody," and "The Handyman" wins marked and well-merited applause. In direct contrast is Fred Southern's exhilarating farcical absurdity, His Lordship's Birthday, and this clever comedian has made the title-rôle entirely his own, his delineation of the village tinker, who finds himself, through unforeseen circumstances, enforced to assume the rôle of a Lord, is full of fun, and his low comedy touches have not lost a particle of their humour by repetition. The same may be said of every member of his clever company, which includes Miss May Emery as the Cook, Miss Gipsy Alexander as the Housemaid, Mr. Charles Ashwell as the Butler, Mr. J. Priestley as the Footman, and Mr. Percy Emery as the perplexed and bewildered Lord.

Mr. Charles Vandyke and his company of pantomimists appear in a sketch, entitled Nicodemus, which, when played more briskly, will develop into a riot of mad movement and endless fun. As a strong extra turn comes Raleigh Abrahams and his company in an amusing comedy boxing scena, Fun in a Pawnshop. The fun is admirably sustained, and is varied with some clever boxing. Jenny Belmore also appears as an extra, and she receives an ovation for her chic rendering of her lively songs, "My old man's a sailor" and "The mischievous imp," with its accompanied energetic and clever dancing. Hyam Travers hits off to a nicety the eccentricities of "The Cockney costers' Bank Holiday at Rye House," and keeps the audience laughing with his merry patter, and is equally successful in his smart interrogatory song "Yes, yes, yes." The Singing Mill Lads, who have come from loom to stage, give a fine rendition of the ballad "Love, I will guard you" and the ever-popular "Excelsior." Bertha Winder is a marvellously clever dancer; Willie Gardener is an expert in the same line of business; and other contributors to the enjoyment are Pauldon, an athlete, who is assisted in his astounding exhibition of strength and endurance by H. W. Victor; and Gracie Kebble, a chic and smart comedienne and dancer. The perfect order maintained speaks volumes for the efficiency of the acting-manager, Mr. Chas. Craig.

MR. GEORGE BROOKS.

Mr. George Brooks, who plays the dame part, Sister Ann, in the pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Plymouth, this season, was born in Yorkshire, but brought up in London from the age of one year. He began his career as comedian in the music halls, one of his first engagements being at St. James's Hall, Plymouth, Dec. 10, 1888, with Jolly Little Lewis. He has played on and off at Mr. Oswald Stoll's and Mr. Horace and the late Mr. Lechmere Livermore's halls, nearly eighteen years. He also played the principal comedy part, Pillario, the quack doctor, in Mr. Fredericks' Rose of Alhambra burlesque, for three years, forty-two weeks a year.

Mr. Brooks's first appearance in pantomime was at the Theatre Royal, Stratford, where he appeared as Dame Ethelwyn Tompkins in Dick Whittington, 1891-2; since then he has played Seraphina, the ugly sister, in Cinderella, Pavilion Theatre, 1892-3; Mrs. Sinbad, Sinbad the Sailor, 1893-4; and Dame Durden, the nurse in Babes in the Wood, at the same theatre, 1894-5; Idle Jack, Whittington, Shakespeare Theatre, Liverpool, 1895-6; Widow Twankey, Aladdin, Grand Theatre, Glasgow, 1896-

He has played Widow Twankey, his favourite part, eight times. He was three years with Percy and Arthur Milton (Milton Rays), two years with Fred Wyndham, five years with J. F. Elliston, three with Fred Fredericks, and three years at the Pavilion Theatre, London, in pantomime. Mr. Brooks is well booked by Mr. Fred Higham, his agent, in Moss and Stoll's tours, Frank Macnaghten and Walter Gibbons' tours, and all the principal London halls for the next three years. His agent for pantomime for the last eleven years is Mr. Herbert Blackmore. He is the original singer of those successful songs, "And his day's work was done" and "Yarns the Captain told the Mate." His latest are, "Would you mind passing the salt?" "Thats' what they told to me," "He got the job," and "There is a happy land."

Mr. Brooks's favourite pastimes are walking, rowing, and swimming. He is a Mason (Liverpool Dramatic Lodge), and a member of the Ancient Order of Buffaloes (Britannia Theatre Lodge). His wife, Miss Lizzie Daniels, is also in the profession.

IN a paragraph in the "Variety Gossip" of a recent issue it was stated that the "Society Pierrots," then leaving for India, were the first troupe of pierrots to perform in that country. We learn that Mr. D. Gardner-Brown's company of pierrots opened in India on Sept. 14 of this year, and are at present enjoying a very successful tour.

DOLLY, Agnes, and Maud, the "Factory Nightingales," after a successful provincial tour, return to the London halls on Monday.

MISS MAUDE MORTIMER sails to-day (Saturday) for South Africa. Will Oliver has filled all her dates for several years to come.

MR. ARCHIE HOWELLS, the musical-director at the Canterbury, has unfortunately been away this last week from business with a severe attack of influenza. He hopes, however, to resume business on Monday.

A NEW YEAR'S APPEAL IN AID OF THE MUSIC HALL BENEVOLENT FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—Although you have for many years past done all in your power to urge the claims of our charity, I feel I owe you an apology for trespassing upon your valuable space at this period of the year when every inch of your columns is rightly devoted to recording all the happiness and joy of the festive season—a season which, by contrast, makes the serious position of our Fund, if possible, more acute and distressing.

We have at the present moment in the bank just about enough money in hand to enable us to pay our pensioners their weekly allowances for the next three months, with very little more for the other weekly claims made upon us for relief or funeral expenses, and unless substantial aid is immediately forthcoming, notices will have to be issued that these payments will be the last the Fund can make.

Will the charitably disposed come to the rescue? The increasing aid we have recently received from the managers of many of the London and provincial halls, from the pence box and book collections, would be in time sufficient, but the seed is only just sown, and while waiting for the crop disaster may overtake us.

Will you help to remedy this, and print this letter in your next issue in a prominent position? The kind hearts who have already assisted, and others who have not, will perhaps, on knowing the dire stress of the situation, come to our aid.

The bis dat qui cito dat argument was never truer than now, so I beg that all interested will please bring or send a donation to me at the offices of the Fund, when any information as to the administration or distribution will gladly be given.

One hundred and fourteen poor professionals during the past eight years have been buried by the Fund, who otherwise would have been buried in pauper graves. Thanking you in anticipation, I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

HORACE MARRIOTT, Secretary.

MOSS'S WAVERLEY CARNIVAL.

Nothing succeeds like success, and Moss's twenty-second carnival at Waverley Market, Edinburgh, which commenced on Monday forenoon, is assured of its wonted three weeks' prosperity. The extensive Market Hall has been, as usual, transformed in appearance by coloured draperies, evergreen garlands, and many-hued electric lamps, and the gigantic Christmas tree, laden with its novel toys for the first thousand children lucky enough to enter the market, is a prominent object. The well-appointed stage for the variety performances stands in its accustomed place; the floor area is dotted with innumerable stalls, where almost every kind of harmless diversion may be had in penny-worths; Wilmot's famed merry-go-rounds, horses, and motor-cars, with their attendant steam organs, occupy their old places, the shooting galleries have their appointed location, and the gipsies are in their encampment.

An enjoyable programme of entertainments is gone through on the open stage twice daily, the musical portion of which is provided by the band of the 2nd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders, under the direction of Bandmaster J. H. Fowles. The Sauteron Wonders perform some extraordinary jumping feats over chairs, tables, couches, pianos, into and out of baskets, blindfolded, in sacks, and otherwise. The Four Geraldos give a remarkably clever exhibition of club juggling and hoop rolling; La Bell Nino, a dexterous lady contortionist and equilibrist, contorts herself, not only gracefully, but very wonderfully, sitting with apparent comfort on the back of her own head; Stelling and Revell provide some good fooling in their smart gymnastic comedy act; and a grotesque trio of amusing American acrobats is found in Spissel Brothers and Mack. The De Wynne Brothers are truly marvellous head and hand balancers, performing some most difficult feats in easy and artistic style. A lively turn is that of the Seven Perezoffs, whose comic juggling pantomime, entitled An Evening in a Parisian Café, is carried through with great skill. What Mr. A. D. Robbins, the extraordinary Canadian cyclist, cannot do on a bicycle is difficult to conceive, and what he actually does would seem to exhaust all the possibilities of trick cycle riding. Herr Paul Conchas, the Teuton military Hercules, gives a most interesting display of muscular strength and deftness in the manipulation and balancing of Krupp shells, cannon balls, and other weapons of modern warfare. Professor Duncan's Troupe of trained Scotch collies afforded much satisfaction, and their great motor act provoked genuine amusement. Spessardy's performing bears—also old and welcome friends—are another wonderful instance of what animals may be taught to do. Their antics and accomplishments were vastly diverting and thoroughly appreciated.

The side shows, distributed as formerly in great profusion all round the building, are of every degree of comparison, with something to suit all tastes and orders of intelligence, from the Three Small Heads of Central Mexico to Johnny Trunley, the phenomenal fat boy of Peckham, or from the Russian Prince Colibri, with his twenty-four inches of altitude, to the eight feet seven inches of the French Goliath, Henri Cot. With these notables will also be found other interesting exhibitions and startling illusions, such as the Four Indian Fakirs, Prince Samouda's miracle, "The Witch's Table," Pharos, the Egyption wizard, Dr. Lynn's Palengenesis, involving the piecemeal destruction and restoration of the human being; So-Da, showing the creation of a woman out of nothing; Harcourt's mysterious blackboard; not forgetting a miniature Zoo, where may be seen many curious beasts and birds.

LA MILO AND CRUICKSHANK.

La Milo is now back in town, after a triumphant, but by no means serene, tour of the provinces. Local "bumbledom" has been greatly exercised with regard to her celebrated poses, and in some towns the Puritanical opposition was very great. In Cardiff, for instance, the attack became so personal that Mr. Cruickshank has been compelled to take libel proceedings against those responsible. In Manchester the Rev. Benjamin Gregory was the man of the hour; though applauding the act, he drew a terrible picture of the evil effects it might have on children! The local magistracy in Liverpool met in solemn conclave to discuss the terrible La Milo, while a wordy war raged in the Press. At Cardiff there was more trouble. This time the famous Mrs. Chant took up the cudgels, but her opposition was singularly ineffective, and simply reflected more lustre on the fair poseuse. Dr. Rawlings, at Swansea, denounced La Milo from the public platform, and so excited became public opinion that mounted police were called out to calm the waiting crowds outside the theatre—a record in the dramatic annals of Swansea. Newport was not to be left in the cold, and here several of the Watch Committee (a local institution possessing fearful and wonderful powers) approached the theatre manager, and politely asked him to withdraw the lady. He naturally refused, and the matter was afterwards discussed by the County Council, who upheld the manager's action. At Holloway and Camberwell La Milo packed [illegible] houses to suffocation. This week the [illegible] Empire won't hold the crowds [illegible] the famous poseuse. Com[illegible]

THE MUSIC HALL HOME.

NEW YEAR'S APPEAL.

Once more we take pleasure in opening our columns to The Era New Year's Shilling Fund on behalf of the Music Hall Home, and in doing so we take still further pleasure in being able to associate with that appeal the names of the president of the fund, Mr. Thomas Barrasford, and Miss Vesta Victoria. Mr. Barrasford's kindly offices in connection with the Music Hall Home are well known, and the fact that he has again given permission for the use of his name in calling attention to the requirements of the home is a guarantee—if, indeed, guarantee were needed—that he is satisfied as to the way in which the institution is being conducted, and that he considers it worthy of support. It is also gratifying to be able to associate with the New Year's appeal such a prominent variety artist as Miss Victoria. When seen at her delightful home in Stockwell Park one day this week by our interviewer, Miss Victoria, who, by the way, is now commencing her preparations for her forthcoming visit to America, stated that she would be delighted to give what assistance she could in order to be of service in such a worthy cause, which she desired us specially to commend on her behalf to her brother and sister artists. Surely, with such sponsors, the money should come rushing along with the swiftness and volume of an avalanche.

There can be no question as to the usefulness of the Music Hall Home. Its address is 31, Wilson-road, Camberwell, S.E., and Mr. and Mrs. Fruin, the secretary and matron respectively, put forward every effort for the comfort of the inmates. At present there are eight of these, and the desire is to increase the number, which can only be done when sufficient funds for the purpose are collected. During the past year two or three of the temporary inmates have recovered their health and strength sufficiently to enable them to look for engagements. These secured, they left the Home, and the vacancies thereby created were immediately filled up. Now, this home requires keeping up, and it cannot be kept up on air. There is no need for us to refer to all the good work which has been performed by the institution in the past, as this must be within the recollection of our readers. The ages of the inmates range from fifty to seventy-six. In all probability these men will be maintained in the home until the day of their death, and their funeral expenses will be paid for out of the funds of the home. The vice-presidents and the committee are sincerely desirous of increasing its scope of usefulness. They would like to be in a position to afford shelter to many more deserving members of the variety profession, who have been stricken with poverty and illness in their declining years, or who in other ways have fallen upon evil times.

We feel we need say little more. Mr. Barrasford and Miss Victoria join in a strenuous appeal for the generosity of the profession in support of The Era Shilling Fund. When, twelve months [illegible] brought before our readers the claims [illegible] serving charity, a very considerable [illegible] was collected in [illegible] year's appeal [illegible] obligations [illegible] parlance, "down on their luck," whom, by reason of their age, are [illegible] in that unhappy condition. There is no [illegible] nor would it be right, to harrow your feelings [illegible] tales of poverty and misery. You have contributed handsomely in the past, and we know that you will do so again, and we shall be glad to acknowledge your donations in these columns. Mr. F. H. Pedgrift is the hon. treasurer, and he will be pleased to receive postal orders and cheques addressed to him at The Era, 5, Tavistock-street, Strand, W.C.

"THE FOOTBALL MATCH."

A Christmas attraction, under the title of The Football Match, was produced at the Palace, Manchester, on Monday afternoon, Dec. 24. It is written and invented by Fred Karno and Fred Kitchen, and purports to depict, after many interesting preliminaries, the final cup-tie between the Middleton Pie-cans and the Midnight Wanderers. The expectation of a mirth-provoker worthy to rank with the best of the many well-known Karno productions, and a seasonable one to boot, attracted one of the biggest audiences that have ever been seen in this popular music hall, and certainly the anticipation of something really funny was not disappointed. The action opens in the training-quarters of the Middleton Pie-cans, at "The Bull," where the members of this wonderful combination of players are seen getting fit for the coming struggle under the urgent supervision of their trainer. Athletic exercises are, of course, less in evidence than eccentric acrobatics and comic tumbling, and the general physique of the club is hardly on the side of fitness and symmetry. An attempt to bribe certain members to lose the match is on foot, and the attempt is watched by a detective, who bears no resemblance to any detective ever seen at Scotland Yard, and whose idea of finding out the delinquents is to watch the action closely from the fragrant precincts of the smoke-room. The chief person to be bribed is Stiffy, the goal-keeper, whose integrity, however, in spite of his many oddities of conduct, is proof against temptation. What his prowess may be on the field does not really matter; it is enough for the audience that his true vocation is that of a comedian, and the extent of his fitness for the stage is demonstrated with ample effect by Mr. Harry Weldon. To follow in detail the many comicalities which enliven the action in the grounds at "The Bull" would be, if it were possible, to reconceive an infinite variety of spontaneous doings, such as the Karno comedians commonly employ in their embellishment of a theme; suffice it to say that the progress of affairs was accompanied by uproarious laughter, which continued through the second scene—the exterior of the football ground—where a most realistic effect was produced by the turnstiles, and a crowd of a hundred auxiliaries employed from the Manchester streets. The third scene, the Dressing-room, gave a typical and interesting peep into the immediate preliminaries of a match; and the fourth, the scene of the struggle on which the honour of the Pie-cans and the defeat of conspirators depended, proved a spacious and lifelike picture of a football field. On the match itself, no expert opinion is required. In the composition of the teams, some one-time famous players were introduced, namely, J. W. Crabtree and W. C. Athersmith (late of Aston Villa), and Fred Spikesley (late of Sheffield Wednesday); but the function of this trio was not to give an exhibition of the game against the less experienced company of comedians, who were playing their own game for the audience; they added a touch of realism, and served to give the play just a suspicion of definite form. Goals were scored, and easily; but the chances against the Pie-cans, one may take it, are nullified by an arrangement, quite in keeping with the spirit of the piece, that no matter how many goals may be scored on either side the result shall be announced as a draw, no score. The match, however, after a half-time score of 0-0 on the principle just named, was brought to a conclusion by a heavy fall of rain, which on Monday looked as though the actual wet afternoon outside had suddenly broken furiously through the roof. In the course of the action, some capital business, vocal and characteristic, was introduced by Messrs. Harry Weldon, Ernie Myers (Tough, the trainer), Robb Gilmore (the 'tec), Will Poluski, jun. (Ratty, the forward), and Miss Lily Lonsdale, who was encored for her singing of "Zuyder Zee." The production was in the hands of Mr. Harold Hilliard, under the personal supervision and direction of Mr. Fred Karno; and the scenery and effects, from the Karno emporium, were excellently designed and arranged. The piece plays close upon two hours, and is likely to prove an enormous attraction for the holiday season.

CRYSTAL PALACE CIRCUS.

A full measure of entertainment is provided this year in the ring situated at the Centre Transept of the Palace, where Lord John Sanger's Circus opened on Christmas Eve. The aggregation has been recently in the neighbourhood, and the satisfaction then given was no doubt responsible for the liberal patronage which was bestowed. The element of novelty is contained in many items of the programme, which were all fully appreciated. Zampo and Clown, who begin the entertainment, excel as "bounding wonders," doing astonishing leaps and somersaults. A cake-walk on the telegraph wire is accomplished by the Fondants, whose balance on the thin filament of steel is skilfully preserved during many arduous feats. The Austins are a couple of clever jockeys, who are able to bestride one horse while he is careering round the ring, and the playing of leap-frog on the animal's back as he speeds along presents no difficulty to the expert horsemen. Clown Sammy has an inexhaustible supply of funny interludes, and works hard to secure the loud laughter which becomes his due, while a truly laughable absurdity is presented by Major Pimpo, who comes to select horses for the army and tries his skill on a camel, a buck-jumper, and other fearful fowl—with ludicrous results. Roars of laughter are aroused by the Elephant Barbers, who use the lather-brush and the razor expertly, and their various antics are irresistibly amusing. A graceful equestrienne is found in Miss Lina, who puts her horse Hawkcombe through a clever high-school performance, and by delicate manipulation of the rein also induces the pretty animal to execute a dance. A four-horse carriage is necessary for the startling feats of the Maro Troupe, and the unusual sight of smartly-dressed ladies leaving their seats in the wagonette and mounting to the shoulders of their companions, who stand on the horses' backs, is witnessed. A "pony with human brains" is described as Hoffman's latest creation, and the tricks performed by the animal come very near to deserving the appellation. Besides selecting articles from boxes placed round the ring in obedience to his trainer, [illegible] also goes through the trick of eating dinner, then picking a [illegible] placing it on the [illegible] considered [illegible] by Pi[illegible]

THE SHOWMAN WORLD.

To all our showmen readers and indeed all who read the Showman World—

A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR.

THE past year has been one of great endeavour, and all sorts and conditions of entertainers may look back upon 1906 with considerable satisfaction. Shows and showmen are better understood and better appreciated than ever before in the growth of our national life. Showmen are drawing closer together, not merely as workers at the same craft and business, but as brothers in a great and ever-growing fellowship.

THE men and women of the fair-ground recognise now more readily than heretofore that if one member suffer we all suffer; that if one man disgraces the show business the whole body is under the stigma and disgrace. Hence the need for combination for unity in the show world. The man who thinks he can go his own way and do just as he likes in the world of shows has missed the most necessary and greatest of all lessons, "that no man liveth to himself alone." The Brotherhood of the Road is slowly but surely making itself felt, and we confidently anticipate in the near future great and lasting good from the sense of unity and fellowship. The Showmen's Guild stands for this—from the very beginning of its beneficent work advance as well as defence has been a formative principle of the organisation.

To defend the showman against evil attack, and at the same time to justify the life and work of the showman by lifting both to higher planes of expression. To only remain on the defensive is to stand still and perhaps to degenerate; to live and to prosper we must advance. This has been signally shown in 1906 by the public work of the Guild. First the successful conference concerning living vans with the County Council of London; showmen welcomed by the Council and their arguments cogent enough to sway the Council and to procure a repeal of obnoxious regulations; the representative character of the Guild recognised by the Home Office, and its petitions accepted as speaking for the whole body of amusement caterers.

AGAIN, consider the eminently successful work of the Guild in Parliament, the recognition of the status of the showman full and complete, and the throwing out of inimical proposals touching the show business and the education of the children.

OTHER points of interest in the past year were the defence of fairs and the response of the people when properly appealed to, as at Mitcham and at Burslem, the people manifestly joining forces with showmen.

THESE and many other things point conclusively to the fact that in all matters touching show life the old Guild is the authority recognised and appealed to by all classes, and it is the old Guild that fully represents all that is best and all that is worth preserving in the world of shows.

THE Preston Christmas pleasure fair opened on the 21st inst. and continued until the 27th. The usual accommodation on the fine open square behind the new County Sessions Hall in the Market-place was provided. Roundabout motors and gallopers were furnished by Mr. John Green, and Mr. Geo. Green sent his large bantam set. Other attractions included swing turnover boats by Mr. Tom Harrison, biograph exhibition by Capt. Tom Payne, shooters by Messrs. Taylor, Garlick, Dewhurst, and Harrison, and throwing games by Messrs. J. Wilson. Messrs. Garlicks, Messrs. Dewhurst, Jim Taylor, and John Ingham.

THE overflow of travellers were provided for in the covered market, where throwing games were provided by Messrs. Richmond, Maloney, and Hartley, football frames by Garlicks and Malloy, Gem swings and Gem horses by Richmond and Malloy, and sweets and refreshments by Messrs. Simpson, Strickland, Maugham, and I'Anson.

THE teetotal ground was occupied by Doc. Harrison's Alpine wire and Messrs. Hackney Bros.' new concern, the American Novelty Car, which consists of the usual "moving and travelling" scenery in cinematography. The audience are seated in an improvised car, which vibrates and gives the "riders" the impression that they are travelling. Instead of an organ, the music is provided by a large gramophone or auxetophone.

IN Church-street the old Local Board offices are occupied by the original Buffalo Bill (Wm. Priest), who is exhibiting a queen of the Basuto tribe. On the open ground in Corporation-street Mr. W. H. Taylor is exploiting his set of overhead jumpers.

THE annual Christmas fair opened on Monday on the Castle Hill, Norwich, and has been well patronised. Messrs. Chrichton and Charles Thurston's cinematograph shows are quite gorgeous outside, and their entertainment inside is first-class in character. Messrs. Barker and Thurston continue their carnival in the Agricultural Hall, and with the side shows are doing a capital business.

CHESTER Christmas carnival had for its attractions Messrs. M. Collins's galloping horses, Mr. C. Farrell's electric theatre, Mr. J. Edmond's electric marionettes, Collins's big boats, juvenile horses, shooting saloon, Aunt Sally, and midget boats, C. Shaw's variety of stalls, comprising ringboards, roll-ups, ticket, and the American fish pond (A. Ball), gingerbread, and Joe and Lillian Dawson's open-air fête, altogether making a real Old English fair.

BEAUTE will be fasting next month at the University of Glasgow, under the professors and doctors there—a twenty-eight days' experiment, commencing on the 7th. During the month of March and April he will commence his attempt to break the world's record again at F. Stewart's museum in High-street, Edinburgh.

WITH deep regret we record the death at Wrexham on Sunday of Mrs. Farrell, wife of Mr. Charles Farrell, the well-known roundabout proprietor, of Chester. The deceased had been ill only a few days, and much sympathy is felt for the bereaved husband and the son and two daughters. Mrs. Farrell, who was in her thirty-eighth year, was a daughter of the late Mr. Job Davies, a well-known amusement caterer of Chester. The funeral took place at the Wrexham Borough Cemetery on Wednesday, when large numbers were present at the graveside to pay a last tribute of respect, and many beautiful wreaths were sent.

ANSWERS TO SHOWMEN.

VICE-PRESIDENT T. N.—We think you will best consult your own dignity and integrity by ignoring the small-talk of misinformed daily papers. Your professional friends know you too well to believe such rumours. We have given them no countenance.

J. W. (Glasgow).—We will write you in a few days. Accept our deepest sympathy and sincerest condolence.

DEATH OF VICKERS,
THE STROLLING PLAYER.

Mr. W. G. Vickers, one of the most interesting of that now rapidly diminishing band of strolling players, who fill so many fascinating chapters in the history of the drama, will strut and fret upon the stage of his popular little portable theatre no more.

He had intended accompanying his little band of artists to Armley, where they have just completed a successful three months' run prior to providing the Christmas attractions at Normanton. But he fell ill at Pontefract, where in the fulness of years—he was 67—he has just ended his eventful career, and on Saturday, at Burmantofts Cemetery, Leeds, there was the last scene of all. His remains were interred not far from those of the grave of the famous showman Rhodes, while around and about are all that is left of several others who contributed so successfully to the entertainment of bygone generations in this part of the country.

The mourners included Mr. Vickers' widow and daughter, Dr. Philip Foster, Mr. Clarence Foster, Miss Alice Greenwood, Mr. Greenwood, Mr. Harry Ives, Mr. Foulding, together with representatives of the deceased gentleman's and Mr. Blake's travelling companies.

A heavily-built, broad-set man, with a thick bushy grey moustache, to which he used to generously apply the blacking brush before appearing in his very numerous list of stage parts, Mr. Vickers has been the means of introducing thousands of Yorkshire folk to a knowledge of the works of the great dramatists.

Who, at some time or other, has not visited Mr. Vickers' little portable theatre at Armley Moor Top, at Selby, Pontefract, Shiple, Idle, and the score of other Yorkshire towns where it had been his wont for two or three months at a time to provide full-night dramatic performances at the popular prices of 3d., 6d., and 1s. a show? There was nothing of the catch-copper order about Mr. Vickers' productions. He was as punctilious and as serious as the greatest of theatrical "stars." He was a stickler for the true text, having a wholehearted disdain for those modern play producers who endeavour to "improve" the conceptions of Shakespeare and the works of other masters.

A native of Sheffield, Mr. Vickers made his first public appearance at Seaham Harbour in the triplicate rôles of Laertes, First Actor, and the Ghost, and has since sustained, with a degree of art not generally suspected in a portable theatre, several of the most difficult Shakespearean characters.

"STARRED" IN "THE MERCHANT OF VENICE."

"His performance of Shylock," writes Dr. Foster, "was most meritorious, and not inferior in grasp and intelligence to the best assumptions of the part by recognised stars." With marked success he also played Ethelwold, Ingomar, and perhaps best of all, Belphegor the Mountebank, of which the late Charles Dillon was so famous an exponent. Mr. Vickers revelled in this character. It suited his grave, sentimental nature. Belphegor drew tears. Mr. Vickers adored Belphegor.

A SALARY OF £20 A WEEK.

In his early life Mr Vickers was four years a member of Mr. W. H. Beresford's travelling company at Sutton-in-Ashfield, at the expiration of which period he began his own managerial career at Rotherham. He has been lessee of the Chesterfield, Goole, and Mexborough theatres, the late Mr. Henry Loraine frequently appearing on his stage, and fulfilling as many as six "starring" engagements in twelve months, receiving what, at that time, was considered the handsome remuneration of £20 a week.

Many actors who, as young men, received their early training under Mr. Vickers, have since attained to honourable distinction in the histrionic world.

HIS JOHNSONIAN DIGNITY.

Apart from his skill as an actor, and his thoroughness and conscientiousness as an organiser, and a producer of plays for the masses, Mr. Vickers possessed an interesting personality. Inclined to be rather reticent, he was "a very grave and reverend signior" type of mortal. He was rarely ever known to make a joke, but cultivated the old-world dignity and address.

"Sir," he would say to a man he wished to communicate with, "I will have speech with you."

His weakness for the redundant use of the word "sir" in private conversation was quite reminiscent of the days of Johnson. His stately bow, his graceful deportment, and his never varying courtesy were also conspicuous characteristics of the man.

MEXBOROUGH.—PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. W. H. Melton.—On Saturday night last Mr. Edwin C. Jazon produced his Christmas pantomime, Cinderella, to the accompaniment of hearty applause. The book is cleverly written by Mr. Jazon, and the music reflects the highest credit on the composer and arranger, Mr. W. C. Pike. Miss Flo Melville is a well-chosen and pleasing Cinderella; a fine physique and charming style considerably aid Miss Louie Herman, who is a smart Prince; Miss Madge Bryde is an excellent Dandini; Miss Florrie Burnette makes a graceful Queen Bountiful, and sings charmingly; Mr. Stan Aubrey is a most diverting Baron; the ugly sisters are cleverly played by Mr. Chas. Preston and Mr. Alf Brookes; while Mr. Fred Pearce is an unfailing and irrepressible mirth-provoker as Buttons. The specialities are exceptionally fine, including Onda and Leon, an amusing and clever triple bar act; Pearce and Ward, burlesque boxers; Mr. Stan Aubrey, whose legmania work is very smart; Harding and Preston, decidedly clever and expert dancers; and McCann's performing Irish terriers and champion leaping hounds—exceedingly clever animals. The staging and dresses form a wealth of beauty.

MORECAMBE.—ROYALTY THEATRE AND OPERA HOUSE.—Sole Lessee, Lieut. Julian Malvern; General-Manager, Mr. Chas. M. Julian.—Mr. Ernest Dare's company opened a four nights' engagement on Wednesday in the drama By Sheer Pluck. Mr. Chas. H. Lester is excellent as Captain Gaspard, "the Jersey Devil," playing the smuggler's part to perfection. Mr. Chas. Collins is a good Major Desmond, and Mr. Ernest Dare makes a capital Captain Desmond. In a character part, Mr. Arthur E. Maskell creates a good deal of amusement. Miss M. Lowe-Dare is a sympathetic Nancy Stuart, and Miss Annie Thomas is good as Martha, from Whitechapel. The other parts are well played.

NEATH.—CASTLE THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Will Haggar, jun.—On Monday night The Bugle Call was staged here. Mr. Will Haggar as Pierre Leroux was a success, Mr. Jack Desmond was good as General Von Tuful, Mr. James Haggar was capital as Poodle, Mrs. Will Haggar as Ninette Leroux was charming, as Marcelle Miss Kate Sylvester and as Margotte Miss Gidding were well placed. On Saturday evening after the performance the genial proprietor and manager was presented by the members of his company with a magnificent writing-desk, suitably inscribed. The pantomime here is Robinson Crusoe, the first performance of which was given on Boxing Day.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—TYNE THEATRE AND OPERA HOUSE.—Lessees, Howard and Wyndham, Ltd.; Managing Director, Mr. F. W. Wyndham; Business-Manager, Mr. Fred C. Sutcliffe.—A crowded house welcomed Aladdin, Messrs. Howard and Wyndham's twenty-fourth pantomime. Mr. Harry Lauder, as Roderick McSwankey, a Scotsman in Japan, scores heavily in his well-known song "My Scotch Bluebell." Mr. Lauder's genial, hearty, and happy style keeps the audience in a whirl of laughter. Mr. Dan Crawley, as Aladdin's Mother, also makes a decided hit; Mr. Imro Fox, as Abanazar the magician, was very good, constantly appearing with his mystifying tricks; and with such capable artists as Mr. George Ide, Mr. Arthur Dandoe, Miss Beryl Somerset, Mr. Harker Nicholls, and Miss Bessie Featherstone (Aladdin) the fun and sentiment are safe. Miss Jose Collins was extremely good as the Princess Yo San, her singing being much appreciated, especially her "Fire Fly" song; very dainty, as Saucee, was Miss Bessie Maddox; and, as the Slave of the Lamp and Genii of the Ring, Miss Muriel Varna and Miss Marie Ashton, completed the principals.

GRAND THEATRE.—Lessees, Messrs. Bolan and Bacon; Managing-Director, Mr. Sidney Bacon.—The Spider and the Fly is at the above theatre this week, its combination of laughter and tears proving popular. Miss Amy Venimore gives a spirited performance of the Spider; Miss Nina Vaughton, as the Village Pastor's Daughter; Mr. S. Gordon, as Cyril Girdlestone; and Mr. Ellis Preston act exceedingly well.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—Proprietors, Messrs. Moss Empires, Ltd.; Managing-Director, Mr. Richard Thornton; Resident-Manager, Mr. Harry Esden.—The chief item of an attractive holiday programme is Charles M. Daly and company in the sketch, The Gorilla's Revenge, in which is introduced some well-trained, forest-bred lions, a bear, an Indian monkey, and a snake, who performed in a most intelligent manner. Mr. Charles M. Daly is excellent in his interpretation of the Gorilla, and is ably supported by Mr. Geo. Neverall, Mr. Victor Rae, Mr. J. P. Ellis, and Miss Nita Langford. The Three Olympiers give a beautiful exhibition, entitled Beauty in Bronze. De Dio, in her marvellous dancing and effects, scores heavily; Ethel Ra Leslie contributes some fine costume songs; Harry Drew Welsh (basso) is in fine voice; Charles Mildare, as an imitator of birds, makes a hit; Prince Kokin is a decidedly smart juggler; and Maud Marlow, comedienne, J. H. Crewe, comedian, and the bioscope are the remaining items.

PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. T. W. Rowe; Business-Manager, Mr. E. B. Clarke.—The Girl Who Lost Her Character is the drama that keeps the audience interested at the above theatre this week. It is played by Mr. Douglas Bruce's company. Miss Ethel Bracewell, as Molly Vernon, acts with much vigour; and Mr. J. B. Shinton, as the Parson; Mr. Geo. Steel, as the high-born Private in the Army; and Mr. Frank Adair, as the villain, complete the cast of the principal characters.

PAVILION THEATRE. — Managing-Director, Mr. Thomas Barrasford; Manager, Mr. Will H. Boardman.—Miss Victoria Monks is the star of a very heavy holiday bill here. Mr. Arthur Kenny provides some sensational cycling feats, concluding with a ten-feet drop on the machine. The Grays, as operatic vocalists, are popular; Mr. Gus Barra is effective as the "comic musical motorist"; Raynor and Reece give a fine singing and dancing act; Simosa San gains great applause for her juggling and balancing feats; Mr. Martin Conway is a quaint comic; and Miss Rose D'Alberg (comedienne), and the Ergotti and King Luis Troupe, in a fine risley act, completes the bill.

NEWPORT.—LYCEUM.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Sidney Cooper.—On Christmas Eve the opening performance took place here of Dick Whittington, the joint production of Mr. J. D. Hunter and Mr. Sidney Cooper, who have been very fortunate in their cast. Dick, the romantic part, is taken by Miss Emily Taylor, a lady who has played in a very extensive Shakespearean répertoire. Gus Danby and Johnny Clegg are comedians who please immensely; Little Felicia sings and recites with confidence; Mr. and Miss Stuart are entertaining, the former being a remarkably clever acrobat; the Sisters Warner give really clever dances that merit hearty appreciation; Miss Clara Sefton is a great favourite with her songs; and the Arabian Troupe of Lady Dancers are given a good reception; Miss Florence Hersee sings "The Starlight Queen" with evident success.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessees and Managers, Messrs. John and Fred Coulson.—Mr. Charles Watson Mills' company is here with A Wrecker of Men. Mr. Frederick Biron appears to advantage as Jim Murley; the Risca Mallison of Miss Olga Audre is a powerful piece of acting; the Eric Melville of Mr. Thompson Carruthers is a strong feature; and Mr. Milner Nobbe as Pharosaphus creates a good impression. Miss Cissie Podmore wins sympathy as Doris Melville, and Miss Beatrice Reynolds introduces smart comedy as Vavasole Slopper.

EMPIRE PALACE THEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. Richard Thornton; General-Manager, Mr. Frank Allen; Resident-Manager, Mr. Geo. F. Thompson. — Casey's Circus, the star turn here, is proving a strong attraction; Conway and Leland, the merry monopedes, are as popular as ever; the Dixons, in a musical act, score heavily; the Macarte Sisters go through a most interesting turn; and other attractions are Geo. Westland, Scotch comedian; Catherine Radford, singing flower girl; Dollie Goldin, speciality dancer; and the Bioscope, with fresh films.

TIVOLI.—Proprietors, Messrs. J. K. Hall and Joseph Sweeney.—Leo Eugenie, a young athlete, in feats of strength, is popular here; Henderson, blind musician, submits a pleasing turn; Harry Taft proves to be a clever whistler; Lydia Dudley, comedienne and dancer, is encored; the Strettons are amusing in their comedy burlesque; and the Fellmons, in illustrated songs, and the Tivoli Bioscope complete an interesting bill.

ST. HELENS.—ST. HELENS THEATRE, LTD.; General-Manager, Mr. McLeod Leader.—Mr. Arnold Bell's company in a repertory of plays, is appearing here with success this week. The plays include Lost in London, The Shaughraun, Hoodman Blind, Called Back, and Mystery of a Hansom Cab. Mr. Arnold Bell is supported by a good ... including Messrs. Co., in The Little Colonel; the Athlones, athletes; Les Bollingers, Parisian rag painters; Mr. Charles Maston, mimic; and Miss Amy Anderson and Co., in "The Banana Queen."

STOCKPORT. — THEATRE ROYAL AND OPERA HOUSE. — Sole Owner and Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr. Charles Revill, jun.—Mr. Charles Chard's pantomime Cinderella, was produced here on Christmas Eve. Among the combination of talented artists responsible for the production, Mr. Harry Pleon stands out prominently as having made the hit of the evening. As Pimples the page he kept the audience in roars of laughter. Mr. Robert Williams plays Baron Shiftalotte amusingly; Mr. Allen Amber and Miss Conlin Kent as the ugly sisters, Maudie and Ethel, are mirth-provoking in a marked degree; Messrs. Yorick and Yorick as the brokers' men are comical, and give a clever acrobatic act; Miss Kitty Phelps as the principal boy, Prince Perfect, has a dashing style, and sings "There's a man in Manitoba" and "Another little girl in your eye" with much success; Cinderella is sweetly impersonated by Miss Nancy Newall; Miss Minnie Terry, an effective Dandini, and Miss Bella Terry, charming as Eglantine, were accorded a pleasing reception, and encored for their rendering of "All that glitters is not gold"; whilst Miss Ethel Davies as the good fairy Sunbeam and Mr. John Syme as Malicio, were deservedly applauded for their excellent vocalism.

EMPIRE.—Proprietors, the Stockport Empire Theatree Co., Ltd.; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Black.—Pantomime—again Cinderella—is also the attraction here, and both houses on Christmas Eve were crowded with delighted audiences. An abundance of boisterous fun is provided. Mr. John Bennett as Pimple works throughout with distinct success; Mr. Martell as Baron Pebblybeach lends able support to the comicalities; and as the ugly sisters, Arabella and Dulcibella, Mr. Edwin Garth and Mr. Howard Ward contribute largely to the amusement, the former singing a "Suffragette" song with a pleasing chorus. Messrs. Earl and Melville as Putemin and Kickemout are amusing; Miss Mabel Ashton is a sprightly Dandini, and Miss Louie Davis is a delightful Princess Pearl. Miss Helen Raye is charming as Cinderella, and wins much favour by her singing of the tuneful "By the side of the Zuyder Zee." As Prince Peerless Miss Iris Banfield is fascinating and clever, and achieved success of a gratifying character.

SUNDERLAND.—AVENUE THEATRE. — Director and Manager, Mr. Chas. E. Machin. — On Wednesday Mr. Machin's annual extravaganza, Dick Whittington, was produced. This year, as was the case last Christmas, the pantomime has been produced in the Wearside Borough by arrangement with Mr. J. F. Elliston, whose lieutenant, Mr. Lewis Leslie, has been responsible for the production. The principals include Miss Mardie Scott, Miss Veronica Brady, Miss Violet Morgan, Miss Lil Hartley, Miss Flo Chevalier, Miss Clorinda Thurtell, Miss Gertrude Lytton, and Miss Jessie Leslie, Mr. Tom Foy, Mr. J. C. Scatter, Mr. Tod Lowen, Mr. Bert Harrow, and the Aguamarinoff Troupe of Russian singers and dancers.

KING'S THEATRE.—Managing-Directors, Messrs. Ernest Stevens and R. C. Buchanan; Acting-Manager, Mr. Harry L. Carlo.—The latest addition to Sunderland's playhouses received a most auspicious send-off on Monday night with the pantomime of Little Red Riding Hood, a notice of which will be found in another column.

THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr. Chas. E. Machin; Acting-Manager, Mr. Jos. Hemingway.—Walter Melville's combination is paying a welcome return visit here this week in A Girl's Cross Roads.

PALACE OF VERIETIES.—Lessees, Messrs. Rosen and Bliss; Acting-Managers, Messrs. Brown and Stringer.—The programme here includes: Musical Rosina, versatile instrumentalist; Pat Rafferty, Irish comedian; Louis Kerno, vocal comedian; Billie Barlow, comedienne; Amandus, facial mimic; G. W. Kenway, mimic; Arabella Allen, the Dickens Girl; Astley's American Circus; and Vernon's Bioscope.

SWINDON.—QUEEN'S THEATRE.—Proprietor and Responsible Manager, Mr. Alfred Manners.—For the first time in its history this town is having its own pantomime. The popular proprietor of this house produced, before a densely crowded holiday audience, on Boxing Day, a grand Christmas show, with Sinbad the Sailor for its title. The "book" is a capital one, with popular music nicely arranged by Mr. Herbert Summerville, who takes the conductor's seat. Splendidly mounted under the stage supervision of Mr. J. W. Hemmings, this attractive entertainment promises to be a genuine success. Miss Fanny Robina, the hero of so many pantomimes, is admirable in the title-rôle, and will certainly become a great favourite. She is ably supported by Miss Norah Haywood, a delightful leading lady, who has already won many hearts. There is plenty of fun, and in this direction, Mr. Will Crackles stands out prominently as the Dame; Hans and Lux give some entertaining knockabout business. The little ones have not been forgotten, as the piece concludes with a distinctly pretty transformation scene and the usual harlequinade.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—OPERA HOUSE.—Lessee, Charles Carey; Manager, Mr. L. J. Gunnell.—On Boxing Night Mr. Mouillot's company, in The Girl Behind the Counter, made an excellent start, and was enthusiastically received by a packed house. Miss Winnie Willoughby proved a charming impersonator of the name-part; Mr. Arthur Cartwright was excellent as the hero, Chas. Chetwyn; Mr. H. B. Clarke gave a clever study of the General; Mr. Howard Cridland infused great humour into the part of Viscount Gushington; Mr. Frederick Park was responsible for much fun as Dudds, the office boy; M. Jules Charmettes played, it is hardly necessary to say to life, the rôle of the Gallic proprietor of the Maison Duval; Miss Olivia Eltone gave a piquant study of the manageress of the same establishment; and Miss Edith McIntosh was a fascinating head milliner, and Miss Doris Langdon a cashier under the same roof. Mr. Geoffrey Allsopp contributed his share to the lighter side as the Commissionaire. Miss Winnifred Knightly as Lady Willoughby was all that could be desired; and there was a very attractive chorus of lady customers and shop assistants.

TYNEMOUTH.—PALACE-BY-THE-SEA. — Proprietor, Mr. J. H. Graham; Manager, Mr. Lindon Travers.—This popular resort reopened on 24th inst. for two weeks. The bills are this week headed by Harold Montague and his Vaudeville company in The Vagabonds; Joad Heteb, magician, also proves an acceptable run.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.—GRAND.—Lessee, Mr. Fred Granville; Manager, Mr. Herbert E. Feather.—On Wednesday Mr. James Kiddie produced for two weeks his pantomime Dick Whittington, with an extensive cast, splendid dresses, and some thirteen elaborate and artistic scenes. Chic Adele Roze, with sparkling vivacity, undertakes the title-rôle, and in it scores a decided success, her songs being frequently redemanded. Miss Leah Laurie established herself a favourite in the rôle of Alice Fitzwarren. Mr. Alec Kendal has not been long away from the district, but his return is a welcome one, and his "cod" geographical and historical lecture is one that causes much laughter. Fred Spencer is an ideal pantomime old woman; his Amelia Florence the cook is a decided success. Miss Annie Broughton makes a hit as Captain Navycutte. As Sir Algernon de Mash Miss Florence Hilton stepped straight into favour, her song, "A different girl again," caught on at once; and others who do well in their respective rôles are H. Wakefield as the Alderman; Messrs. Bass and Guinness as Peter the Larry, Miss Gladys Kildare as Concordia, and Mr. Archie J. Milne as Rodento.

PALACE.—Proprietor, Mr. F. Macnaghten; Manager, Mr. J. Simpson.—An absurdity by Dick Cruikshanks and company (including Kitty Kerwan), is screamingly funny; Eric Grahame, coster comedian; Ethel Loftus, amusing in low comedy; and the Seddons, clever and amusing in a juggling act, have all made favourable impressions; the Alexander Victor juvenile duettists sing harmoniously; Richard Finberg's character studies are clever; the Silvertone Quartette of (coloured) vocalists and dancers have a gratifying reception; and the house is immensely pleased with the burlesque eccentricities of Story and Trigg.

WEST STANLEY. — VICTORIA THEATRE. — Proprietor, Mr. T. C. Raws: Responsible-Manager, Mr. John Cassidy.—Miss Eva Moss, supported by Mr. Cecil Du Gue and company, is paying a return visit here this week with Camille, a special adaptation of Dumas' famous novel, "La Dame aux ...lias." Miss Eva Moss embodied the rôle of ... derful vivacity; Mr. Cecil Du ... all that could be desired; ... ...ll rendered by Miss Phyllis THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing-Director, Mr. Mark H. Lindon.—Mr. J. H. Clyndes' company is here this week in A Royal Revenge. The cast is a powerful one, and the dresses are exceedingly pretty.

WHITEHAVEN.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. Clark; Acting-Manager, Mr. Fred Clarke.— Mr. F. R. Benson's Shakespearean company (North) is paying its initial visit here. On Monday The Merchant of Venice was presented before a good holiday audience. Mr. Henry Herbert as Shylock gave every satisfaction; Mr. Gerald Ames was good as Antonio; and Mr. Charles Francis successful as Bassanio; Miss Dorothy Green made an effective Portia; and Jessica had a clever exponent in Miss L. Graeme. Other plays down for the week are The Taming of the Shrew, Hamlet, Macbeth, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Henry V., and As You Like It.

WIGAN.—ROYAL COURT THEATRE.—Proprietors, The Wigan Entertainments company.—Miss Florence Baines, assisted by an able company, have been entertaining large holiday crowds in the farce Miss Lancashire, Limited. Miss Baines represents with great originality the character of Mary Ellen Thompson, and Miss Kitty Jones, as Eva Lancashire plays the part with stateliness, and sings exceedingly well. Mr. Sam. C. Leslie, as the American Jew, I. Moses, is successful; and Mr. David Donaldson, as John Higgins; Mr. B. Burton, as Harry; and Mr. Rd. C. Hicks, as Fox, the solicitor, acts their respective rôles admirably.

THE HIPPODROME.—Proprietors, The Wigan Entertainments Company.—George Formby and Chas. Majilton's comedians are the great attractions here this week. Lily Hayes, a young and promising comedienne, is several times recalled; Clown Zertho and his fourteen performing dogs; Master May, boy vocalist; and Johnny Walker, comedian, are also very entertaining. Mdlle. Lumiere appears in an excellent speciality act; and Hanvarr and Lee, the golfer and maid, club throwers, and the maid, a capital tumbler, complete a most acceptable programme.

WOLVERHAMPTON. — GRAND THEATRE. — Lessees and Managers, Mr. E. H. Bull and Mr. Milton Bode; Acting-Manager, Mr. Percy Percival. —Mr. Milton Bode's fairy pantomime of Dick Whittington was produced here on Boxing Day. It is written by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and is capitally staged. Mr. Bob Hutt, who appears as Alderman Fitzwarren, Mr. Rolando Martin, who takes the part of Idle Jack, and Mr. Fred Danvers, who represents Matilda, are responsible for a large amount of fun, and fill their respective parts to advantage. Miss Gladys Warren makes an excellent Dick Whittington, and sings well; Miss Kathleen Severn is a piquant and successful Alice Fitzwarren, and possesses a nice voice; Miss Flo Challis is an effective Tommy Trot, and Miss Beatrice Lane is a pleasing May; Miss Nellie Laurance does well as Fatima; Miss Wanda Zaleski is an efficient Claribel; Mr. Carne Curre ably sustains the part of Mouser; and the Fimans do good service as Captain Scoupper and Billy Oakum. In addition, Wallau, a young juggler, performs some clever conjuring tricks; and Collins' Six Lancashire Lasses dance themselves into favour. Admirable scenery, splendid drsses, and some good songs, add to the attractive character of the production.

EMPIRE PALACE.—A good holiday programme is presented here. Ford and Hanson, as the musical millionaires, give some excellent impersonations; Zeta Gray and Co. are seen to advantage in The Lancashire Lass; Matt Wilkinson and Co. are successful in The Registry Office; Violet Beatrice is a male impersonator; Gracie Bard, comedienne and dancer; and George Phillips, coon impersonator and dancer. An amusing burlesque, entitled The Smoking Concert, is produced under the direction of W. B. Crabtree.

THEATRE ROYAL AND HIPPODROME.—This is an old establishment under a new name. On Monday Are You a Mason? was played by Mr. Chas. Macdona's company. The principal characters were admirably impersonated by Mr. Ernest Cossart, Mr. E. H. Paterson, Mr. Howard L. Tracy, and Miss Margaret Fairleigh.

WORTHING.—THEATRE ROYAL.—Manager, Herr C. Adolf Seebold.—Mr. Harry Graham's company opened here this week with Little Red Riding Hood. Mr. Graham has with him a highly capable company, amongst whom are Messrs. James Wood, Arthur Drew, Will Raglan, Will Gore, Grant and Kelly, and the Misses Mabel Kessler, Renee Ven Atken, V. Winifred Hamilton, Rosie Juden, Eunice Young, Grace Stafford, and a full operatic chorus. Expensive and artistic scenery have been procured, and good specialities are given.

WREXHAM.—EMPIRE MUSIC HALL.—Proprietor, Mr. J. J. Scott; Manager, Mr. Herbert Nicholls.—This week the chief attraction is Fernia and Hitchins, in a mélange of oddities and a pathetic episode, Pity the Blind. The Reays, silver chain acrobats and novel gymnasts, remain another week; Mr. Frank Zara is a capable comedian; and Miss Katie Eplett a refined comedienne and clever dancer. The pictures are more than usually interesting.

YORK.—ROYAL.—Lessees, Messrs. Waddington; Acting-Manager, Mr. H. J. Dacre.—The pantomime, Goody Two-Shoes, was announced for Boxing night.

OPERA HOUSE AND EMPIRE.—Managing-Director, Mr. Wm. Peacock; Acting-Manager, Mr. Sidney Brook.—T. E. Dunville is meeting with enormous success this week. This well-known comedian brings into play all his irresistible powers, and as a result his reception has been but little short of a triumph. The fascinating Ada Fawn is here once more delighting her many admirers. Her song in boy's costume is very dainty. Craig, Rose, and Craig are clever gymnasts, and the following complete a strong bill:—Ray and Miles, the Delevines, T. C. Edwards. Lowenwith Bros., Counsell and Mills, and the Bioscope.

LONDON CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

At Brinsmead's Concert Room on Thursday evening, Dec. 20, the pupils of the London Conservatoire held a largely-attended vocal and instrumental concert, under the direction of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell. In the course of the long programme, which included over thirty items, to say nothing of encores, many of the pupils greatly distinguished themselves, and gave ample evidence of the careful training they had received at the London Conservatoire. The programme commenced with a piano solo, Valse by Chopin, neatly executed by Miss A. Saintley; and the Misses Doris and Vera Lonsdale were applauded in Lane Wilson's vocal duet, "Gentle Spring." "Carmena" was gracefully sung by Miss Evelyn Hope; and Alliston's song, "There is a land," was cleverly rendered by M. Emil Michel. Mr. Lansdowne Cottell's "Westminster Chimes" proved an harmonious and attractive piece for the piano, and was skilfully executed by Miss Ada Poynter. Mr. Clay Thomas was well received in Adams' song, "Thora," and later in the programme was encored in German's popular song, "Glorious Devon." Mr. Thomas, who is one of the advanced students of the Conservatoire, had the great advantage of being accompanied by Mr. Cottell in his first song. Batten's pleasing air, "April Morn," was carefully sung by Miss Nellie Renée; and Mr. Bertram North's mandoline solo of the Intermezzo from Cavalleria Rusticana greatly pleased the audience. Miss Gertrude Battersby has an agreeable voice, but not experience enough as yet to attempt "The flower song" from Faust. Tosti's song, "My dreams," was ably sung by Mr. Adam Bray; and the stirring march for the piano, "King Edward," by Mr. Cottell, was remarkably well played by Miss Dorothy Tubman; while Miss Beatrice Love was equally successful in Pelissier's charming song, "Awake." A very young performer, Miss Hannah Seymour, only nine years of age, joined Miss Margaret Young in Dichilli's pianoforte duet. A number of other songs and instrumental pieces, and a recitation, "Two Points of View," by Miss Nellie Renée, were well received by the audience. The conductors were Mr. Lansdowne Cottell and Mr. Carl Webb.
